track to increase the amount of the purses offered for racing, the race track was held to be entitled to a preliminary injunction restraining the association and its officers from endeavoring to induce owners of horses not to ship them to the race track and not to race them at the track. The race track had established that the association and one of its officers, in unison, sought to induce horse owners to refrain from racing their horses at the race track. Such action would be an attempt at an illegal boycott which would be in violation of the antitrust laws. The race track had no adequate remedy at law. However, the race track was not entitled to a preliminary injunction against the individual defendants since it did not establish that the actions of such defendants were the result of, or evidenced, a combination or conspiracy to violate the antitrust laws. A preliminary injunction should not be granted unless the court is convinced with reasonable certainty that the moving party will succeed at the trial of the action, and such an injunction generally will not be granted where there are doubtful issues of fact.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.533; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.720; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9026.15.

For the plaintiff: Bleakley, Platt, Gilchrist & Walker (Chapman, Walsh & O'Connell, by Charles M. Metzner, of counsel), New York, N. Y.

For the defendants: Donovan, Leisure, Newton & Irvine (Breck P. McAllister, James V. Hayes, Sidney P. Howell, Jr., and Samuel W. Murphy, Jr., of counsel), New York, N. Y.

For other opinions of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, see 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,803 and 68,805.

[Preliminary Injunction Sought]

DAWSON, District Judge [In full text]: This is a motion for a preliminary injunction pending trial in which plaintiff seeks an order enjoining the defendants, their agents, servants or employees, from failing in concert to enter horses in the races scheduled to be held at Yonkers Raceway on June 14, 1957 and thereafter, and from refusing in concert to drive their horses or the horses owned by members of the defendant Association in said races, and from otherwise impeding, obstructing or interfering, by any act or failure to act, with the conduct of said races.

[Complaint]

The complaint alleges violations of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. 15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 2.

The action is one brought under the antitrust laws for an injunction and damages. 15 U. S. C. § 26, 15.

[Established Facts]

The moving papers establish without substantial dispute:

1. The plaintiff is a New York corporation which since April 1950 has conducted harness horse racing, accompanied by pari-mutuel betting, at Yonkers Raceway at Yonkers, New York, and has a substantial investment in such raceway.

2. Under the New York laws relating to pari-mutuel betting (McKinney's Unconsolidated Laws, § 7603) plaintiff is required to deduct 15% from the pari-mutuel pool and the balance of the pool is paid to the holders of winning tickets. Out of the 15% a certain proportion is paid to the State of New York as tax and the balance is retained by the plaintiff. The plaintiff also derives additional revenue from admission charges, parking fees and concessions. From the money retained by the plaintiff from the pari-mutuel pool it pays certain amounts to the owners of the horses participating in the races, usually proportioned to the success or lack of success in winning the respective races.

3. The defendant Association is a membership corporation organized in 1951 under the laws of the State of New York and has a membership of approximately 450 owners and drivers of harness horses. The members of the Association engage in the business of owning, training and driving harness horses at Yonkers Raceway and at various other harness tracks and fairs in the State of New York and elsewhere. It is alleged that the membership of the Association includes 90% of the owners and drivers engaged in harness racing in the New York City metropolitan area.

4. The defendant Smith is the president and a director of the Association. The other individual defendants are members of the Association and are either directors of the Association or owners or drivers of harness horses.

5. The activities of harness racing are activities in interstate commerce in that the horses, in going from track to track, go across state lines.

6. Prior to the formation of the Association in 1951 the practice was that in advance of the opening of a race meeting the plaintiff advertised its proposed purse schedule and the drivers and owners electing to compete for the purses filed applications for stall space and thereafter entered their horses in the races and competed for the purses offered. At that time the purses were approximately 18% of the sums retained by the plaintiff out of the pari-mutuel pool.

7. In 1954 the plaintiff entered into negotiations with the Association with reference to the amounts of these purses. As a result of these negotiations the parties entered into a contract by which plaintiff agreed to pay purses totaling 35% of the amount retained by the track out of the pari-mutuel pool. This contract ran for a period of three years from May 25, 1954.

8. Prior to the opening of the Spring, 1957 meeting at Yonkers Raceway, plaintiff advertised that it intended to continue its 35% purse policy. The track distributed applications for stall space which in part provided that the owners and drivers occupying stall space would agree to race for purses of the amount offered. A number of the members of the Association executed such applications.

9. In May 1957 defendant Smith, as president of the Association, and the Board of Directors of the Association demanded that the purses be increased from 35% to 45% of the sums retained by the plaintiff out of the pari-mutuel pool. At a meeting of the members of the Association on June 1, 1957 a Committee of three was appointed as a negotiating delegation to represent the Association and its members in connection with this and other demands. When the plaintiff refused to accede to these demands another meeting of the members of the Association was held on June 6, 1957. The members voted unanimously to stand by their proposals as previously submitted and instructed the Committee to notify the plaintiff that the members of the Association would not enter horses for racing at Yonkers Raceway after 6 P. M. on June 9, 1957.

10. In the June 12, 1957 issue of "The Harness Horse," a magazine with a circulation among horse owners and horse riders, the defendant Association caused a full page advertisement, reading as follows, to be inserted:

"Notice

"To All Horsemen . . .

"The Standardbred Owners Association, which represents horse owners, trainers and drivers who race at Yonkers Raceway, after futile attempts to negotiate with the management of Yonkers Raceway, have served notice of a suspension of racing at Yonkers Raceway, effective Friday, June 14, 1957 in accordance with the rules and regulations of the U. S. T. A. and the New York Harness Racing Commission.

"We Horsemen At Yonkers Raceway Urgently Request That You, Our Fellow Horsemen, Do Not Ship Any Horses To Yonkers Raceway Until We Have Resolved Our Differences With Yonkers Raceway And Have Agreed On A Formal Contract Covering Racing Activities At Yonkers Raceway.

"Standardbred Owners Association
"Francis P. Smith,
"President."

[Prior Motion]

On June 13, 1957 the present action was started in this Court and on the same day a motion was made for a temporary injunction and for a stay until determination of the motion. The stay was granted by Judge Levet and racing has continued at Yonkers Raceway.

[Boycott Charged]

The plaintiff contends that the action of the defendants is such that it constitutes an illegal boycott designed to force the plaintiff to increase the amount of the purses offered for racing at the Yonkers Raceway, and hence is an illegal conspiracy to fix prices. The only issue now before the Court is whether the injunction pendente lite should be granted. The remedy of a preliminary injunction is a drastic one. It should not be granted unless the Court is convinced with reasonable certainty that the moving party will succeed at the trial of the action. Furthermore, such remedy will generally not be granted where there are doubtful issues of fact which may determine the result.*

[Legality of Activity]

Price-fixing by a combination or conspiracy is illegal per se. See Union Circulating Co. v. FTC [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,637], 241 F. 2d 652 (2d Cir. 1957). The result of applying this rule to the matter in controversy turns on the meaning of the terms conspiracy and combination as well as upon what is required to prove their existence. Several specific questions present themselves. May over 100 independent horse owners collectively negotiate with the track as to its purse policy? May the horse owners appoint a bargaining representative, such as the Association, to represent them in these negotiations? And if no agreement can be reached with the track, can the horsemen independently refuse to race?

To answer these questions in the negative would extend the Sherman Act far beyond its original purpose. On one side of the controvery is a race track which by the laws of New York (McKinney's Unconsolidated Laws, § 7598) has been given a monopoly on harness horse racing at a particular locality. On the other side of the controversy are hundreds of individual owners of horses who are extended the privilege of racing their horses at that track and of competing for purses. Many of these individuals have been represented in negotiations with the track by the defendant Association. With a group of entrepreneurs on one side and a powerful single corporation on the other side, there would appear to be nothing illegal in that group of individuals having a single agent to represent them in any negotiations. The Association has urged that larger purses be offered to the horse owners. The raceway had refused to consider increasing the purses. Is this Court empowered under the circumstances to direct that the horse owners must continue to race their horses at the track for the purses offered by the track? For the Court to so direct would mean that each individual horse owner must negotiate separately with the track, or that if the horse owners negotiate through a common agent and the agent advises that he is unable to reach a satisfactory agreement with the track, that the horse owners then may not individually determine to abide by their agent's recommendation not to enter the races for the purses offered by the track. The Sherman Act does not sanction such prohibition against individual action.

[Combination or Conspiracy]

There is presented on the papers a distinct issue of fact as to whether the horse owners have in fact entered into a combination, agreement or conspiracy not to race horses at Yonkers Raceway, or whether on the other hand, the horse owners decided, as a result of the refusal of the track to negotiate an increase in the purses, that they would in their individual judgment refuse to race under the terms offered. In other words: Is there a combination or conspiracy between the defendant themselves to boycott the track whereby each has bound himself to his fellow-horsemen not to enter horses at the track, or is it a situation where many horse owners have each individually determined not to race his horses? People may certainly reach the same conclusion without having entered into a contract or conspiracy. If, for example, the Association reported to a number of its members that the race track arbitrarily refused to discuss or consider an increase in purses offered, and if as a result of this report a number of the members unanimously stated that they would not race their horses at the track, the members may be acting in a common manner but this does not necessarily prove that they have entered into an illegal combination, contract or conspiracy with each other not to race horses. The difference is this: Did the defendants agree with each other that they would not race horses, or did they, without any such agreement inter se, separately reach a determination at the same time to reject the terms offered by the track and to take their horses home or to another track? It does not appear that the anti-trust laws prohibit competitors from reaching the same conclusion; rather they apply where the parties between themselves have entered into an agreement or combination to boycott or refuse to do business with another party to the dispute. Whether the individual defendants have acted or now threaten to act in concert is a question as to which the moving papers are insufficient to justify a preliminary injunction. Accordingly, until this issue of fact is fully litigated at trial, no provisional action by the Court is appropriate.

* See Huber Baking Co. v. Stroehmann Bros. Co., D. C. S. D. N. Y. 1953, 114 F. Supp. 411; affirmed 2 Cir., 208 F. 2d 464; Federal Telephone & Radio Corp. v. Federal Television Corp., 2 Cir., 1950, 180 F. 2d 250; Atlantic & Gulf West Coast v. United States, D. C. S. D. N. Y. 1950, 90 F. Supp. 554; Margolis v. Franks, D. C. S. D. N. Y. 1956, 138 F. Supp. 9.

 Plaintiff has construed part of defendants' Answer as expressing an admission of guilt. Paragraph 27 of the Answer asserts that "collective negotiation" is necessary on the part of the horseowners if they are to negotiate effectively with the track. Irrespective of the truth of this allegation it does not constitute an admission of illegal conduct in concert, but is merely a statement that instead of 100 horseowners sitting down with the track, the appointment of a delegation is a more efficacious technique. Furthermore, collective bargaining does not necessarily infer an agreement precluding an individual from acceding to terms he deems acceptable.

[Relief Against Association]

The primary items of proof relied upon by the plaintiff are that the individual horsemen unanimously voted to withdraw, and that the Association advertised in a nationally distributed trade publication requesting other horse owners not to race at the Yonkers Raceway. Upon analysis, the fact that individual horsemen were unanimously determined to withdraw is not under the circumstances of sufficient value to establish that this was the result of a combination or conspiracy. It must be contrasted with a situation where, for example, the majority favored withdrawal and the minority favored continued racing, and despite the divergence, all followed the majority will and withdrew. That would be a case of concerted activity, and differs from the facts in the present controversy where there has been no proof that any horse owners have withdrawn contrary to their own inclination and determination. The activity of the Association, on the other hand, is clearly culpable. The advertisement it directed to horse owners around the nation was an unequivocal attempt to precipitate a classic form of secondary boycott. Accordingly, injunctive relief against the Association is, under the circumstances, merited. See Metropolitan Bag & Paper Distributors Ass'n v. F. T. C. [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,589], 240 F. 2d 341 (2d Cir. 1956) (injunction issued against Association but not against members who did not participate in illegal conspiracy).

The Court therefore concludes that it would not be desirable or proper at this time, on the papers submitted, to issue a temporary injunction in the form sought by the plaintiff, and said motion for a temporary injunction is denied and the stay vacated. The Court directs, however, that an injunction pendente lite issue prohibiting the defendant Association, its officers, agents and servants from endeavoring to induce owners of harness horses not to ship horses to the Yonkers Raceway or not to race horses at the Yonkers Raceway.

[Economic Dispute]

In reaching this determination the Court is mindful of the fact that the controversy here involved is an economic dispute. In the long run the success of harness racing in this State can only be achieved by a certain degree of cooperation between the race tracks and the owners of the horses which are to race at those tracks. To use the strong arm of the Court to enforce terms on either side would not lead to long-term good relations between the parties or the success of this sport. The Court has sought to bring the parties together on a basis of mutual discussion in an endeavor to reach a satisfactory settlement of the controversy. The arbitrary attitude of the plaintiff has made such efforts fruitless. Plaintiff seems to have taken the position that it wishes to negotiate with the horse owners under the aegis of a Court injunction which would in effect deprive the other parties of real bargaining power. This may be a legalistic approach but it is not a realistic approach to a very practical problem. The controversy easily could be brought to a conclusion satisfactory and profitable to both sides if on both sides there was a desire to reach a fair determination. That desire up to now seems missing.

[Conclusions]

The Court concludes:

1. Plaintiff has not established to the Court's satisfaction that the actions of the individual defendants were the result of or evidenced a combination or conspiracy to violate the anti-trust laws.

2. Plaintiff has established that the defendant Association and the defendant Smith did in unison seek to induce horse owners to refrain from racing horses at the Yonkers Raceway, and that this was an attempt at a boycott of this track to compel the track to pay a higher price to the horse owners for racing at the track; that such action would be an attempt at an illegal boycott which would be in violation of the anti-trust laws; and for which plaintiff has no adequate remedy at law.

3. That an injunction pendente lite should issue restraining the Association and defendant Smith and the officers, directors and agents of the Association from endeavoring directly or indirectly to induce owners of horses not to ship them to Yonkers Raceway or not to race them at Yonkers Raceway.

4. That except as hereinabove provided the motion for a temporary injunction should be denied and the stay vacated.

This opinion shall constitute the findings of fact and conclusions of law of the Court.

Submit decree on or before July 11, 1957.

[¶ 68,805] Yonkers Raceway, Inc. v. Standardbred Owners Association, Inc., Francis P. Smith, Arthur J. Brown, Russ C. Carpenter, William R. Haughton, John P. Simpson, Stanley F. Dancer, Joe O'Brien, Delvin Miller, Hugh A. Bell, Edward Cobb, William M. Myer, James W. Jordan, Franklin Sanford, Wendell Wathen, Percy Gray, Morris Pivnick, Sanders Russell, Morris MacDonald, Edward Dougherty, Al Karet, Henry Critchfield.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil No. 121-273. Filed August 16, 1957.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages and Injunctive Relief—Pretrial Procedures—Depositions and Subpoena Duces Tecum.—On a plaintiff's motion to quash a subpoena duces tecum and to vacate a notice for the taking of a deposition, the court ruled that the subpoena duces tecum was not oppressive, that the notice to take the deposition was not defective, that the defendants were not acting in bad faith in seeking discovery from the plaintiff, and that the defendants were entitled to examine the plaintiff in the quest of additional facts as to whether the plaintiff was engaged in interstate commerce and whether the defendants' acts constituted an illegal boycott even though findings as to such facts had been made on a motion for a preliminary injunction.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9013.775, 9013.975.

For the plaintiff: Chapman, Walsh & O'Connell (Charles M. Metzner, of counsel), New York, N. Y.

For the defendants: Donovan, Leisure, Newton & Irvine (Breck P. McAllister, of counsel), New York, N. Y.

For prior opinions of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, see 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,803 and 68,804.

Opinion

[Complaint]

SIDNEY SUGARMAN, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff, operator of a harness racing track, brought this suit against an association of and certain individual owners and racers of harness racing horses. The complaint charges defendants with violation of the anti-trust laws in that they conspired to boycott plaintiff's track and to induce others to do likewise in order to compel plaintiff to increase the race purses.

[Deposition—Production of Documents]

Defendants served plaintiff with a notice to take plaintiff's deposition and with a subpoena duces tecum to produce voluminous books, records and documents of the plaintiff at the deposition.

[Objections]

Plaintiff now moves for an order:

"(1) quashing the subpoena duces tecum . . . upon the ground that it is unreasonable and oppressive;

"(2) vacating the . . . notice for the taking of plaintiff's deposition upon the ground that it does not comply and is not in conformity with Rule 28 of the Federal Rules of Civil Practice [sic] and upon the further ground that it is premature;

"(3) or in the alternative, why a protective order should not be issued pursuant to subdivision (b) of Rule 30 of the Federal Rules of Civil Practice, limiting the scope of the examination as to the question of whether the defendants engaged in an illegal boycott and an illegal price-fixing combination in violation of the Anti-Trust Laws; and

"(4) why plaintiff should not have such other further and different relief as in the premises may be just, equitable and proper."

Among other things the supporting affidavit states:

"Plaintiff's position on this application simply is that defendants' purpose is to be vexatious and oppressive. That is the only reason why defendants have precipitantly sought to take plaintiff's depositions on matters that can have no possible relevancy to the issues presented by this litigation, as is evidenced by the unreasonable and oppressive subpoena duces tecum served and the threats voiced by the defendants' representatives in connection therewith. It appears from the notice and subpoena itself that several truck loads of records will be required to be produced by the plaintiff at the office of defendants' counsel before some unnamed notary public. It conclusively appears from the minutes before Judge Dawson that there is no issue of fact here present and, furthermore, that the records sought to be produced and the pre-trial examination sought to be conducted as reflected by the subpoenaed records can have no possible relevancy to the matters in litigation." (Tananbaum affidavit 6/27/57, pp. 2-3.)

[Oppressiveness]

The movant first claims that the subpoena duces tecum is oppressive in that it requires the movement of a large volume of records to this city. This will be remedied by providing in the order to be settled hereon that the oral examination of plaintiff be had either at plaintiff's place of business or, at defendants' option, at the office of the clerk of this court, provided, however, that if defendants elect to take plaintiff's deposition at the clerk's office, the defendants shall prepay the packing and trucking expenses necessarily involved in transporting the items to and from the examination. This also cures the claimed defect in the notice in that it calls for the deposition to be taken at the office of defendants' counsel.

[Sufficiency of Notice]

The movant next claims that the notice to take plaintiff's deposition is defective. This contention is without merit as to either its failure to name the officer before whom the deposition will be taken [1] or its timeliness.[2]

[Scope of Deposition]

The alternative relief seeks a limitation of the scope of the deposition based (a) on allegations of defendants' bad faith and (b) on a contention that there "is no issue of fact which this case presents in the light of the admitted activities of the defendants and in the light of the admissions made by their counsel before the Court, . . ." (Tananbaum affidavit 6/27/57, pp. 5-6.)

There is nothing in the papers on file in this action to justify a finding at this time that the defendants are acting in bad faith in seeking discovery from the plaintiff under their above-mentioned notice and subpoena duces tecum. Plaintiff has adequate means of protecting itself from abuse during the taking of the deposition should it then develop that defendants are not acting in good faith.[3]

In opposition to this motion, defendants in part justify the examination of plaintiff and the production of its books, records and documents, on the question of whether harness racing is interstate commerce. Plaintiff relies strongly on Judge Dawson's decision of July 8, 1957 on plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction wherein he found that "[t]he moving papers establish without substantial dispute: . . . 5. [t]he activities of harness racing are activities in interstate commerce . . ." and wherein he concluded that "2. [p]laintiff has established . . . that such action would be an attempt at an illegal boycott which would be in violation of the anti-trust laws . . ."

The defendants' answer was not served and filed until after the hearing before Judge Dawson on the plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction, although before his decision. His discretionary decision was clearly predicated only upon the moving papers, arguments and briefs of counsel submitted upon that motion. The answer squarely raises the issue of the nature of plaintiff's business, i.e., interstate or not, and the nature of defendants' acts, i.e., illegal boycott or not. Inquiry into those issues cannot be foreclosed by the decision on the motion for the preliminary injunction. The rule is stated to be:

[1] Zweifler v. Sleco Laces, 11 F. R. D. 202 (S. D. N. Y. 1950).

[2] 4 Moore's Fed. Prac. (2d ed.), para. 26.09, p. 1040.

F. R. Civ. P. 30(d).

> "This court will not consider any of the questions decided on the hearing for a preliminary injunction as res judicata. They are open for review, but they should be adhered to, unless it clearly appears that an error was committed, or that additional facts were brought out at the trial which demand a modification or reversal of the views expressed at the preliminary hearing." [4]

The defendants are entitled to examine the plaintiff in the quest of additional facts as to whether plaintiff is engaged in interstate commerce and whether defendants' acts constituted an illegal boycott.

[Ruling]

The plaintiff's motion is denied [5] except to the extent that the notice and subpoena duces tecum are modified as hereinabove indicated.

Settle an appropriate order on notice.

[¶ 68,806] United States v. Continental Can Company, Inc., and Hazel-Atlas Glass Company.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil No. 112-387. Filed August 21, 1957.

Case No. 1301 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Pretrial Procedures—Interrogatories.—In an action charging that a can company violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act, the company's objection to certain Government interrogatories on the ground that they ask that the desired information be furnished as of the date of the filing of the interrogatories and not as of the date of the commencement of the action was overruled. The company based its objection on U. S. v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours and Co., et al., 353 U. S. 586, 1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,723, which held that the test of a violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act is whether "at the time of suit" there is a reasonable probability that the acquisition is likely to result in the condemned restraints. The court ruled that the "time of suit" is not restricted to the time of commencement of suit.

See Acquisitions of Stock or Assets, Vol. 1, ¶ 4205; Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8225.260.

For the plaintiff: William H. McManus and John M. O'Donnell, Antitrust Division, Department of Justice, New York, N. Y.

For the defendants: Willkie, Owen, Farr, Gallagher & Walton, (Mark F. Hughes and Helmer R. Johnson, of counsel), New York, N. Y., for Continental Can Co., Inc.

For a prior decision of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, see 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,479.

Opinion

[Government Interrogatories]

SIDNEY SUGARMAN, District Judge [In full text]: The defendant, Continental Can Company, Inc., objects to certain interrogatories served upon it by the plaintiff, United States of America, in an action alleging a violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. A. § 18.

---

[4] Rodgers v. Pitt, 129 Fed. 932, 937 (Nev. 1904); approved in O'Connell v. Gentry County Bank, 55 F. 2d 806, 809 (8th Cir. 1932); cf. Harvey Aluminum v. American Cyanamid Co., 15 F. R. D. 14, 20 (S. D. N. Y. 1953); Injunctions 43 C. J. S. § 200(b).

[5] This denial is not to be construed as any indication that defendants may see or copy any of the plaintiff's books, records and documents produced at the deposition. Cf. Joseph L. Lee, Inc. v. Margon Corporation, 18 F. R. D. 390 (S. D. N. Y. 1956).

By stipulation, interrogatory 12 is withdrawn by the plaintiff. The parties have partially resolved objections to interrogatories 6, 7, 13, 14 and 17.

I.

[Up-to-Date Information]

The defendant objects to answering interrogatories 1 to 5 inclusive, 8, 9 and 10 because [a]

> "These interrogatories ask that the desired information be furnished as of the date of the filing of the interrogatories—not as of the date of commencement of the action."

and [b]

> "The organization which is now Continental Can Company, Inc. is a substantially different organization from what it was at the date of the acquisition of the assets of Hazel-Atlas Glass Company. Subsequent to that date it has merged with Robert Gair Company, Inc. and as a consequence its corporate structure has been changed both with respect to indebtedness and with respect to stock outstanding; its holdings of subsidiaries has been changed; and the scope of its business changed. The question here at issue is the probable competitive or monopolistic effects of a previous acquisition with respect to which the complaint has been filed before such changes took place."

The defendant claims, but the court does not find, support for defendant's first ground of objection, [a] above, in United States v. du Pont & Co. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,723], 353 U. S. 586, where the court said at page 597:

> "The Clayton Act was intended to supplement the Sherman Act. Its aim was primarily to arrest apprehended consequences of intercorporate relationships before those relationships could work their evil, which may be at or any time after the acquisition, depending upon the circumstances of the particular case. . . . To accomplish the congressional aim, the Government may proceed at any time that an acquisition may be said with reasonable probability to contain a threat that it may lead to a restraint of commerce or tend to create a monopoly of a line of commerce." (Emphasis supplied.) and restated the rule at page 607:

> "We repeat, that the test of a violation of § 7 is whether at the time of suit there is a reasonable probability that the acquisition is likely to result in the condemned restraints."

The "time of suit" is not restricted to the time of commencement of suit.[1]

[Change in Corporate Structure]

In so far as defendant seeks, in its second ground of objection [b] above, to be relieved of answering these interrogatories because of changes in its corporate structure after this suit was brought, the short answer is that "the circumstances of [this] particular case" (see quotation from du Pont case supra) are that these changes were made by defendant with full knowledge of this suit and the possible consequences thereof. On September 13, 1956, before defendant acquired Hazel-Atlas and before it merged with Gair, this court, in denying plaintiff a temporary restraining order, stated

> "Should the acquisition be ultimately held violative of the Clayton Act, plaintiff's relief may be accomplished by a decree of divestiture."

Defendant cannot now present plaintiff with a fait accompli and frustrate its rights, if any, to a restoration of the status quo.

II.

[Domestic Affiliates]

The defendant objects to answering interrogatories 6 and 7 in so far as they seek certain information regarding domestic affiliates because (1) it does not control all of these affiliates and (2) the task of compiling the information would be unduly burdensome.

Of course, a party is not expected to perform the impossible in answering interrogatories. (1) As to those affiliates described in interrogatories 6 and 7, defendant will give such information as it can and it will state briefly what efforts it has made in an unsuccessful effort to obtain all the requested information from those affiliates which refuse to disclose the facts. As to those affiliates which will cooperate, defendant shall furnish the information sought by the plaintiff.

[1] Caldwell-Clements Inc. v. McGraw Hill [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,261], 12 F. R. D. 531 (S. D. N. Y. 1952).

(2) The claim of undue hardship, particularly since the limitation thereof by the stipulation of July 2, 1957, in supplying this information is not sustained by the papers on this motion.[2]

III.

[Compilations]

The objections to answering interrogatories 11 and 25 are not well taken. They are obviously burdensome but this alone is no valid ground for declining to answer.[3]

The essence of defendant's opposition is that its answers would be meaningless because of the numerous factors which enter into a definition of " 'break even' point" and "total cost." It is the government's contention that the information requested is not opinion evidence but a compilation of information based on facts.

The movant's papers on this motion show that an answer to each of these interrogatories can be given, although the final conclusions will reflect the inferences and assumptions of the compiler of the figures. This vice is inherent in every system of cost accounting. Interrogatories 11 and 25 should be answered.

To avoid any prejudice to the defendant arising from its answer to these interrogatories, it may include therein any explanatory matter it desires, to show the formulae used in arriving at its computations, and otherwise to explain the acounting practices used.

Objections IV and V are withdrawn.

VI.

[Customer Lists]

Despite the reluctance of the court to require a party to reveal its complete customer lists, the court is persuaded that the plaintiff requires the names and quantities and types of purchases of movant's customers, together with the other information requested in interrogatories 14 to 22 inclusive, in order properly to prepare its case. The parties having agreed on a means of protecting the defendant's rights in answering interrogatory 17 the same may be incorporated in the order to be settled on this motion. Similar protection shall be afforded movant in regard to its answers to the other interrogatories in this group.

VII.

[Industry Position]

The material sought by interrogatory 29 is well within the bounds of relevance to the subject matter of the instant suit. Movant's position in the industry can be evaluated more precisely in the light of the facts which this interrogatory will bring forth.

Settle an order on notice, consistent herewith.

[¶ 68,807] General Electric Company v. Hess Brothers, Inc.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. Civil Action No. 21,237. Filed August 19, 1957.

McGuire Act, Miller-Tydings Act, and Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act

Fair Trade—Enforcement of Fair Trade Prices—Defense—Fair Trader's Enforcement Activity—Applicability of Statutory Defense.—In a fair trade enforcement action, it was held that the fair trader satisfied the general equitable requirement of reasonable and diligent enforcement as a prerequisite to securing an injunction, and that the 1956 amendment to the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act (which provides that it shall be a complete defense to an enforcement action for the defendant to prove that the fair trader, after at least 7 days written notice given by the defendant prior to the commencement of such action, has failed to take reasonable and diligent steps to prevent the continuation of fair trade violations by those in competition with the defendant) did not take effect until September 1, 1956, and, hence, was inapplicable to the action. Assuming that the 1956 amendment was applicable, the phrase "after at least 7 days written notice given by the defendant prior to the commencement of such action" contemplates that a retailer cannot rely on the defense unless he has given the fair trader notice of sales below the minimum prices by his competitor at least 7 days before suit has been instituted. It does not require the fair trader to take "reasonable and diligent steps to prevent" competitors from selling below fair trade prices within 7 days of receipt of notice from the defendant that such competitors are making such sales.

[2] 4 Moore's Fed. Prac. (2d ed.), para. 33.20, p. 2314 et seq.

[3] Note 2 supra.

However, the court also made the following rulings in the event that the above rulings were held to be incorrect: (1) Where, immediately prior to notice from a retailer that another retailer has made a sale below a fair trader's prices, the fair trader has conducted 3 shoppings to determine if the other retailer is selling at less than these prices (disclosing 3 refusals to sell for less than such prices) and the notice is received during a well-advertised price-cutting sale by the defendant-retailer, the intent of the amendment's requirement of taking steps, within the 7 days, is not violated by the failure to act within the period when the defendant-retailer continued its price-cutting during this period. (2) Under the amendment, the fair trader has no duty to notify a defendant-retailer of what steps it is taking from time to time against violators of whom the defendant-retailer has given it notice, but the fair trader should inform the defendant-retailer that it has received the notice and has acted within the 7-day period.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3440.40.

Fair Trade—Sales Which May Be Exempted from Price Restriction—Sales to Employees of Fair Trader, Sales to Employees of Dealers, Sales to Governmental Agencies, and Sales to Institutional Establishments Buying for Own Use—Legality of Fair Trade Contract Exemptions.—A clause contained in a fair trade minimum price schedule which exempted from fair trade price restrictions sales to employees of the fair trader, sales by distributors or dealers of the fair traded products to their own employees, and sales to governmental agencies or to commercial or institutional establishments buying for their own use and not for resale did not violate the specific restrictions to fair trade pricing in the McGuire Act and the Miller-Tydings Act. The exemptions were not shown to be an unreasonable and arbitrary classification and discriminatory in view of the maintenance of fair trade prices for the rest of the community, and such exemptions did not render the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act or the McGuire Act unconstitutional. The burden of showing that the exemptions were so unreasonable or arbitrary as to constitute a discrimination depriving a person of his constitutional rights under the United States Constitution was not sustained.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3226, 3230, 3232.40.

Fair Trade—Fair Trade Agreement Between Competitors—Manufacturer's Sales to Employees—Manufacturer as Competitor of Retailer.—The fact that a manufacturer sold its fair-traded products at discount prices to its own employees for their own use did not place the manufacturer in the position of being a competitor of a retailer for such employee business within the ban of the McGuire Act which specifically excludes from its immunity provisions any contract or agreement providing for the establishment or maintenance of minimum resale prices between persons, firms, or corporations in competition with each other. Operations of this type are considered as accessory to the overall operations of the employer and not such as to constitute the employer a retail seller. Therefore, the manufacturer's fair trade contracts were not illegal. However, the defendant-retailer in the instant action was given the opportunity to show that the manufacturer's program of sales to employees was not effective in restricting such sales to items for the use of individual employees.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3100, 3230.

Fair Trade—Constitutionality—Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act, McGuire Act, and Miller-Tydings Act.—The Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act, the McGuire Act, and the Miller-Tydings Act were held not to be violative of the United States or Pennsylvania Constitution. The court noted that the Federal constitutional objections to the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act had been rejected by other courts, and that the objections to the Act based on the Pennsylvania Constitution should be presented to the Pennsylvania Supreme Court in view of a decision of that court holding the Act constitutional and the Pennsylvania rule that, where an appellate court has passed on any constitutional objection to an act, it is presumed to have passed on all constitutional objections to that act. It had been contended, among other things, that the exemption, by contract, of certain sales from fair trade price restrictions made the Pennsylvania Act a discriminatory violation of the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution and made the enabling McGuire Act a violation of the Fifth Amendment. The fair trade contract involved in the instant suit exempted certain types of sales from the fair trade price restrictions. The burden of showing that the exemptions were so unreasonable or arbitrary as to constitute a discrimination depriving a person of his constitutional rights under the United States Constitution was not sustained.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3035, 3040.20, 3085.40.

For the plaintiff: Henry W. Sawyer, III, of Drinker, Biddle & Reath, Philadelphia, Pa.

For the defendant: Orrin E. Boyle, Allentown, Pa.

Sur Pleadings and Proof

I. Findings of Fact

FRANCIS L. VAN DUSEN, District Judge [In full text]: The trial judge makes the following Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law:

1. Plaintiff's requested Findings of Fact Nos. 1, 2, 4-15, and defendant's requested Findings of Fact Nos. 2, 6-23,[1] 25, and 26 are adopted as the Findings of this court.

Defendant's requested Findings of Fact Nos. 84-91 are adopted as being substantially correct (see affidavits attached to the stipulation filed March 29, 1957).

The advertising of defendant preceding and during its sale from August 24 to September 4, 1956, of plaintiff's fair-traded products at less than the minimum fair trade prices and the sales by defendant at these prices during these ten days caused a general collapse in plaintiff's ability to maintain fair trade prices in defendant's trading area (see, for example, Exhibits P-2, P-3, P-4, P-5, P-7, P-8 and P-9).

2. Plaintiff's requested Finding of Fact No. 16 is adopted with the following modifications:

(a) Benco Sales Company

Add on page 5, following the activity on the date of July 11, 1956:

> "Aug. 8, 1956. Plaintiff received notice from the defendant in a letter dated August 8, 1956 (Exhibit D-23), as to the sale of a General Electric fair-traded product below the fair trade price.
>
> "Aug. 10, 1956. Plaintiff authorized its agents to place an order by mail for goods at less than the fair trade price."

Add on page 5 plaintiff's answer to defendant's Interrogatory No. 5-j (see Clerk's document No. 19) following the activity of September 12, 1956.

(b) Save-All, Inc.

Add on page 5 plaintiff's answer to defendant's Interrogatory No. 5-a (see Clerk's document No. 19) following the activity of June 21, 1956.

(c) Lee-Mart

Add on page 5, following the activity on the date of July 9, 1956:

> "July 13, 1956. Plaintiff received notice from the defendant in a letter dated July 9, 1956, as to the sale of a General Electric fair-traded product below the fair trade price. (N. T. 357)."

Add on page 6 plaintiff's answer to defendant's Interrogatory No. 5-b (see Clerk's document No. 19) following the activity of August 28, 1956.

(d) Bargain Center (Freemansburg)

Add the following on page 8, following the title "Bargain Center (Freemansburg)":

> "June 27, 1956. Plaintiff received notice from General Electric Supply Co. in Allentown reporting a verbal complaint made to it from defendant (N. T. 299-300).
>
> "June 28, 1956. Plaintiff wired Bargain Center advising them of General Electric's fair trade prices and General Electric's intention to enforce fair trade prices.

---

[1] Paragraphs 6 to and including 15 of defendant's requested Findings of Fact are correct, but are believed to be of slight relevancy in view of (1) the principle that a plaintiff who has corrected any defect in his fair trade enforcement policy by the time of suit is not to be penalized for past defects, (2) the fact that Act No. 589 of the 1955 General Assembly was not approved until May 25, 1956, and (3) the vigorous enforcement policy in defendant's trading area carried out by plaintiff in the late spring and early summer of 1956.

Also, plaintiff mailed its No. 1 warning letter by certified mail and prepared a shopping double-purchase authorization, which was dated July 2, 1956 (N. T. 300)."

Add on page 9, following the activity on the date of July 6, 1956:

"July 6, 1956. Plaintiff received back its No. 1 warning letter marked 'Refused' (see Exhibit P-14) and authorized Pinkerton Detective Agency to personally deliver the same letter (N. T. 315-6).

"July 13, 1956. Plaintiff received notice from the defendant in a letter dated July 9, 1956, repeating the complaint of June 29, 1956, noted above, as to the sale of a General Electric fair-traded product below the fair trade price (N. T. 316)."

Add on page 9 plaintiff's answer to defendant's Interrogatory No. 5-c (see Clerk's document No. 19) following the activity of August 10, 1956.

(e) Roth Brothers

Add on page 9, following the activity on the date of August 8, 1956:

"Aug. 8, 1956. Plaintiff mailed its No. 1 warning letter by certified mail with return receipt requested, and prepared a shopping authorization dated August 16, 1956 (N. T. 320)."

Add on page 10 plaintiff's answer to defendant's Interrogatory No. 5-d (see Clerk's document No. 19) following the activity of August 27, 1956.

(f) A. O. Gehman & Sons

Add on page 10, following the activity on the date of August 8, 1956:

"Aug. 8, 1956. Plaintiff mailed its No. 1 warning letter by certified mail, with return receipt requested, and prepared a shopping authorization dated August 16, 1956 (N. T. 324).

"Aug. 10, 1956. A return receipt showing the delivery of notice No. 1 came back to plaintiff bearing the date of receipt of August 10, 1956 (N. T. 325).

"Aug. 16, 1956. Plaintiff instructed the Pinkerton Agency to make a shopping (N. T. 325).

"Aug. 27, 1956. Second notice received from defendant of separate violation (see affidavit of John C. Boettinger, Clerk's document No. 4)."

Add on page 10 plaintiff's answer to defendant's Interrogatory No. 5-e (see Clerk's document No. 19) following the activity of August 27, 1956.

(g) Phillips Music House

Add on page 11, following the activity on the date of August 8, 1956:

"Aug. 8, 1956. Plaintiff mailed its No. 1 warning letter by certified mail and prepared a shopping authorization dated August 15, 1956 (N. T. 328).

"Aug. 10, 1956, and August 15, 1956. Plaintiff authorized shoppings."

Add on page 11 plaintiff's answer to defendant's Interrogatory No. 5-f (see Clerk's document No. 19) following the activity of August 24, 1956.

(h) Greene's Electric

Add on page 12 plaintiff's answer to defendant's Interrogatory No. 5-g (see Clerk's document No. 19) following the activity of August 27, 1956.

3. Plaintiff's requested Finding of Fact No. 17 is adopted with the following modifications:

Add on page 13, after line 16, plaintiff's answer to defendant's Interrogatory No. 5-i (see Clerk's document No. 19); and on page 13, at the end of requested Finding of Fact No. 17, add plaintiff's answer to defendant's Interrogatory No. 5-h (see Clerk's document No. 19).

4. The record contains no proof of when, if at all, defendant notified plaintiff that D. Weiman was selling General Electric fair-traded products below the fair trade prices. Plaintiff took the action as to D. Weiman in the period since September 19, 1956, described in plaintiff's answer to defendant's Interrogatory No. 5-k (see Clerk's document No. 19).

5. Plaintiff's answer No. 4-d to defendant's interrogatories (see Clerk's document No. 19) is adopted as a correct statement of the facts.

6. Plaintiff's requested Findings of Fact Nos. 18-24[2] are adopted as the findings of this court.

All requests for Findings of Fact which are inconsistent with the foregoing are denied.

[2] Defendant's contention that the lack of investigation experience by plaintiff's shoppers prevent their obtaining "buys" below the fair trade price of plaintiff's fair-traded products is rejected by the hearing judge.

Discussion

[Motions]

As indicated by Finding of Fact No. 1, this case has its background in defendant's well-publicized belief that the policy of minimum fair trade prices is not only economically unsound but also illegal. After defendant issued advertisements in several newspapers, stating that it would sell plaintiff's fair-traded products for amounts below the specified minimum prices, the plaintiff filed a motion for a temporary injunction, which was not granted until after the completion of hearings lasting four days (August 29 to September 1, 1956). After injunction issued on September 4, 1956, defendant asked leave to file additional affidavits and interrogatories, and the record was not complete until the filing of a second stipulation on August 15, 1957. There are now before the court defendant's motion to vacate the preliminary injunction and plaintiff's motion to make it permanent.

[Constitutional Objections]

The federal constitutional objections to the application of the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act (73 P. S. §§ 7 and 8) to this defendant under the facts of this case have been rejected by the decisions of the United States Courts of Appeal for the Third and Sixth Circuits in Morris Corp. v. Hess Brothers, Inc. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,660], 243 F. 2d 274 (3rd Cir. 1957), and Sunbeam Corporation v. Richardson, [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,678], 243 F. 2d 501 (6th Cir. 1957).[3] See, also, Schwegmann Bros. Giant Super Markets v. Eli Lilly & Co. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,516], 205 F. 2d 788 (5th Cir. 1953), cert. den. 346 U. S. 856 (1953). The objections to the Act based on the Pennsylvania Constitution should be presented to the Pennsylvania Supreme Court in view of the decision of that court holding the Act constitutional[4] and the Pennsylvania rule that, where an appellate court has passed on any constitutional objection to an Act of Assembly, it is presumed to have passed on all constitutional objections to that Act.[5] Cf. Morris Corp. v. Hess Brothers, Inc., supra, at p. 279; Sunbeam Corporation v. Richardson, supra, at pp. 503-4.

[Contract Exemptions]

Also, defendant contends that the exemptions contained in a footnote to plaintiff's "List of Fair Trade Minimum Retail Prices Effective July 9, 1956" (see Exhibit P-6) are violative of the specific restrictions to fair trade price-fixing in the McGuire amendment, 15 U. S. C. A. § 45(a), 66 Stat. 632 (1952), of 5(a) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and the Miller-Tydings amendment, 15 U. S. C. A. § 1, 50 Stat. 693 (1937), of § 1 of the Sherman Act.

Both Acts provide for the legality of minimum price-fixing agreements between plaintiff and its retailers as an exemption from the federal anti-trust legislation, but specifically do not include within the scope of the legalized agreements "any contract or agreement providing for the establishment or maintenance of minimum resale prices . . . between persons, firms, or corporations in competition with each other."

The relevant portion of the language containing the exemptions to plaintiff's fair trade price contracts reads as follows:

> "The indicated retail prices do not apply to sales made to employees of the General Electric Company or to sales by distributors or dealers of these products to their own employees, or to sales to governmental agencies or to commercial or institutional establishments buying for their own use and not for resale."

These exemptions are a voluntary relinquishment by plaintiff of its right under the fair trade laws to maintain fair trade prices in sales to these groups, and defendant, as well as any other retailer, may likewise make such sales to these groups without re-

[3] The lower court decision in this case (reported at [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,407], 144 F. Supp. 583) was the principal constitutional authority relied on by defendant at the argument held in September 1956. This decision was reversed by the decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit. See, also, House Report No. 1437 of 2/27/52 to accompany H. R. 5767, 82nd Cong., 2nd Sess. (House Misc. Reports 1). The contentions that the exemptions of sales to certain groups makes the Pennsylvania Act, as applied by plaintiff, a discriminatory violation of the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment and makes the enabling McGuire Act (15 U. S. C. A. § 45(a)) a violation of the Fifth Amendment, are considered below at pages 6-11 of this Discussion.

[4] Burche Co. v. General Electric Co. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,078], 382 Pa. 370 (1955); Gever v. American Stores Co. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,569], 387 Pa. 206 (1956).

[5] See Turco Paint & Varnish Co. v. Kalodner, 320 Pa. 421, 428 (1936), approved in footnote 1 of the Burche case, supra, at p. 373.

gard to minimum fair trade prices. Plaintiff has not attempted to set minimum fair trade prices for others which it is not following.[6] Providing for such exemptions will not prevent plaintiff from maintaining fair trade prices for the general community, unless the exemptions are shown to be an unreasonable and arbitrary classification and discriminatory in view of the maintenance of fair trade prices for the rest of the community.[7]

The exemption here under consideration has been upheld by numerous appellate courts[8] and similar or broader exemptions likewise have been viewed as being within the spirit of the fair trade laws.[9] In the light of these decisions (particularly Burche Co. v. General Electric Co., supra, footnote 8), defendant has not sustained its burden of showing these exemptions[10] to be so unreasonable or arbitrary[11] as to constitute a discrimination depriving defendant of its con-

[6] United States v. McKesson & Robbins [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,368], 351 U. S. 305 (1956), and Esso Standard Oil Co. v. Secatore's, Inc., CCH 1957 TRADE CASES, ¶ 68,695 (1st Cir. 1957), are not applicable, since even if Plaintiff herein is considered to be in competition with defendant and other retailers for sales to the exempted groups, it has not required such competitors to meet minimum fair trade prices in sales to the exempted groups. Similarly, Bristol-Myers Company v. Bamberger & Co., 195 Atl. 625 (N. J. 1937), involved sales at a discount to a non-exempted group. Cf. Burroughs, Wellcome & Co. v. Weissbard, 20 A. 2d 445 (N. J. 1941), aff'd on the lower court opinion 23 A. 2d 396 (N. J. 1942).

[7] Cf. Morey et al. v. Doud et al., 25 L. W. 4551 (No. 475, Oct. Term 1956, in Supreme Court of the United States, opinion of 6/24/57).

[8] See Burche Co. v. General Electric Co. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,078], 382 Pa. 370 (1955), noting in particular Exhibit B at p. 15 of Vol. 4246 Paper Books of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania (382 Pa. 370-380); General Electric Co. v. Perloff, C. P. No. 4 of Phila. County, March Term 1954, No. 8847 in Equity, opinion of Judge Guerin of February 9, 1955 (not reported), per curiam opinion of July 11, 1955, sur exceptions to adjudication, noting in particular Exhibit B attached to the complaint. This exemption was apparently upheld after argument on the point, but without discussion by the court, in General Electric Co. v. Auction Sales Co., C. A. No. 19, 700 (E. D. Pa., order of April 24, 1956). See, also, General Electric v. S. Klein-on-the-Square [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,443]. 121 N. Y. Supp. 2d 37 (N. Y. Sup. Ct. 1953); General Electric v. Monarch-Saphin Co., Inc. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,738], 80 N. Y. Supp. 2d 419 (N. Y. Sup. Ct. 1948), modified on other grounds and affirmed 103 N. Y. Supp. 2d 128 (1951); General Electric Co. v. Federal Employees Distributing Co. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,235], 291 P. 2d 942 (Cal. Sup. Ct. 1955), rehearing den. 1956; General Electric v. Kimball Jewelers, Inc. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,291], 132 N. E. 2d 652 (Mass. Sup. Ct. 1956); General Electric Co. v. Masters, Inc. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,776], 120 N. E. 2d 802 (N. Y. Ct. App. 1954).

In General Electric Co. v. Perloff, supra, Judge Guerin stated:

"Defendant next argues that plaintiff does not come before this court with clean hands because of certain exceptions which it makes to its minimum retail price list. Defendant asserts that the only cases in which plaintiff's Fair Trade Contracts do not apply are those specifically listed in Sec. 7 and 9 of the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act.

"It is admitted that plaintiff has provided certain exceptions other than those appearing in the Fair Trade Act by setting forth at the bottom of the minimum price list, which are incorporated in their Fair Trade Contracts by reference, the following: 'The indicated retail prices do not apply to sales made to employees of the General Electric Company or to sales by distributors or dealers of these products to their own employees, or to sales to governmental agencies or to commercial or institutional establishments buying for their own use and not for resale.'

"Although there are no recorded cases in Pennsylvania on this point, in other states having similar Fair Trade Acts as ours, such exceptions have been held consonant with the purposes and intent of these laws. Burroughs Wellcome & Co. (U. S. A.), Inc. v. Weissbard, 129 N. J. Eq. 563, 564, affirmed without opinion 130 N. J. Eq. 605; Schill v. Remington Putnam Book Co. (Md.), 17 A. (2d) 175, 180; Burroughs Wellcome & Co. v. Johnson Perfume Co. (Conn.), 24 A. (2d) 841, 845; General Electric Co. v. Monarch-Saphin Co., Inc., 80 N. Y. S. 2d 419, 420.

"We agree with the reasoning in General Electric Co. v. Monarch-Saphin Co., Inc., supra, where the court said at page 420: 'There is nothing discriminatory in this agreement, nor is it lacking in uniformity. Under it defendant and others may sell below the fixed price to those coming within the exception clause. Were plaintiff or its subsidiary making sales to those described in the exception clause without giving defendant and others a similar opportunity to make such sales discrimination might be claimed.' Reasonable exceptions such as those provided in plaintiff's price schedule, which are open to any retailer to make, do not destroy the validity of the schedule. Evidence produced at trial indicated that sales made under this exception were in all respects in conformity therewith."

[9] See Burroughs, Wellcome & Co. v. Weissbard, supra; Union Carbide & Carbon Corp. v. White River Distributors, Inc. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,711], 118 F. Supp. 541 (E. D. Ark. 1954); Burroughs Wellcome & Co. v. Johnson Perfume Co. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,194], 24 A. 2d 841 (Conn. 1942).

[10] Since plaintiff does not have any arrangement with any dealer to enable plaintiff's employees to get a discount from the dealer of a fair-traded item (N. T. 824-5), defendant's contention that rebates are discriminatory need not be further considered.

[11] Defendant's contention that sales by plaintiff to commercial establishments for their own use below minimum fair trade prices creates stitutional rights guaranteed by the Fourteenth and Fifth Amendments.

[Fair Trader's Sales to Employees]

Plaintiff's discount sales to its own employees for their own use does not place it in the position of being a competitor of defendant for such employee business within the ban of the statutory language quoted above. See cases cited in footnotes 8 and 9 and Frawley Corp. v. Grosslight, CCH 1954 TRADE CASES, Par. 67,681 (Cal. Superior Ct. 1954); Hanson v. Lagerstrom, 133 F. 2d 120, 122 (8th Cir. 1943); and Mitchell v. Anderson, 235 F. 2d 638 (9th Cir. 1955), rehearing den. 1956,[12] where courts considered operations of this type as accessory to the overall operation of the employer and not such as to constitute the employer a retail seller.

Though the testimony given in affidavit form by Harold Kaplan, Esq., shows that the employees of the General Electric Company's Allentown, Pa., plant, from 2/8/55 to 8/28/56, and the employees of the General Electric Supply Company, Allentown, Pa., from January 1955 to September 1956, were making duplicate purchases of plaintiff's fair trade price-fixed appliances, the new plans instituted in these plans locally and by plaintiff on a nationwide scale during the period from August 26, 1956 to March 1, 1957, indicate that such abuses of plaintiffs minimum fair trade price scales through sales to its employees are not now possible. Plaintiff's new plans prevent the sale in any one calendar year (with certain reasonable exceptions) of more than one of each type of General Electric fair-traded appliance, and require the purchasing employee to certify in writing that the purchase is for his own use and not for resale (see affidavits of E. F. Corkery, J. H. Melchior, and Robert C. Walton, all of which are included in Clerk's document No. 16).

These aforementioned new plants for employee sales and the testimony of Mr. Walton (affidavit in Clerk's document No. 16), that the excess or duplicate sales to plaintiff's employees, pointed up by defendant, are less than two-thirds of one per cent. (.65) of the total unit retail sales in the trading area for the period involved, prevent the hearing judge from refusing injunctive relief to plaintiff on this ground. Defendant contends that plaintiff's past policies prevent the granting of injunctive relief, but "Equity will not stand aside the one whose rights have been transgressed and permit them to be appropriated because of previous bad conduct . . . ." Valley S. C. Co. v. Mfgrs'. Water Co., 302 Pa. 232, 238 (1930). The doctrine that he who comes into equity must come with clean hands has been limited in many instances, one of which is that " 'a party purging his conduct as far as possible has obtained relief' (21 C. J. 187), and the right to proceed may be conditioned upon his so doing." Comstock v. Thompson, 286 Pa. 457, 462 (1926). See, also Hartman v. Cohn, 350 Pa. 41 (1944), and Sylvania Industrial Corporation v. Visking Corporation [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,255],132 F. 2d 947, 957-8 (4th Cir. 1943), app. dismissed, 319 U. S. 777 (1943).

The court will grant defendant an opportunity[13] to show, if it can, that plaintiff's new program of sales to employees is not being effective to restrict such sales to items for the use of such individual employees.

[Enforcement Policy]

It has been consistently recognized by courts asked to enforce fair trade laws, such as the Pennsylvania Act (73 P. S. § 7ff.), that the manufacturer is not entitled to an injunction unless he has reasonably and diligently enforced the fair trade prices specified by him. As stated in General Electric Co. v. R. H. Macy & Co. [1950-1951 TRADE a potentially large group of customers that can conceivably upset the entire fair trade price structure has not been proved and the hearing judge is unable to find unreasonableness or discrimination in including this class within the exemption. The McKesson & Robbins case, supra, and the Secatore's case, supra, discussed in footnote 6, are, therefore, capable of being distinguished on the additional ground that the substantial nature of the competition alleged to be a discrimination against defendant has not been adequately shown. Cf. General Electric v. S. Klein-on-the-Square, supra, General Electric v. Federal Employees Distributing Co., supra, and General Electric v. Masters, Inc., supra, where statistics concerning this exemption were available and the exemption was upheld as not being so broad as to make enforcement as to ordinary retail trade unfair and discriminatory.

[12] See, also, Consolidated Timber Co. v. Womack, 132 F. 2d 101 (9th Cir. 1942); Mid-Continent Petroleum Corp. v. Keen, 157 F. 2d 310 (8th Cir. 1946); and Collins v. Kidd Dairy & Ice Co., 132 F. 2d 79 (5th Cir. 1942).

[13] See discussion below concerning opportunity granted defendant 60 days after July 22, 1957 (see attached letter) [not reproduced] to present evidence on the application of Act No. 589 (see pages 13-16 of this Discussion).

CASES ¶ 62,764], 199 Misc. 87, 92, 103 N. Y. S. 2d 440, 446-7 (1951), which is perhaps the leading case on this subject:

"In establishing this requirement the courts have held that it is not necessary that there be simultaneous enforcement against all violators nor that the price structure be perfect. . . . There, the court laid down the principle that in order to avail himself of the benefits of the statute, the producer or plaintiff must make a sincere and diligent effort to prevent price cutting of branded products, through legal process if necessary." [14]

Although counsel and the hearing judge have not been able to find any Pennsylvania appellant court decision discussing this principle, the hearing judge finds that it is consistent with Pennsylvania law as it existed on May 1, 1956, and would be applied by the Pennsylvania appellant courts in an appropriate case. The record in this case shows clearly that the plaintiff has maintained reasonable and diligent enforcement of its fair trade prices in defendant's trading area immediately prior to and since this suit.[15] The enforcement activities carried on in this case are far more vigorous than those upheld in most of the cases holding that reasonable and diligent enforcement was present.[16] The general enforcement policy of plaintiff,[17] which was supplemented in this case by an intensive enforcement drive in the two months preceding plaintiff's [sic] widely advertised price cutting, has been upheld by numerous courts. See General Electric Co. v. Kimball Jewelers, Inc., supra; General Electric v. S. Klein-on-the-Square, Inc. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,443], 121 N. Y. S. 2d 37 (N. Y. Sup. Ct. 1953).[18] In the Kimball case, the court said, at p. 657 of 132 N. E. 2d:

"The method employed by the plaintiff in investigating and enforcing the prices at which retail dealers were bound to sell their trade marked appliances was not unreasonable or dilatory, or such as to lead anyone to believe that the plaintiff had waived or abandoned its right to enforce the minimum retail resale prices which had been fixed by its fair trade contracts. (Citing cases.)"

In the S. Klein-on-the-Square, Inc. case, the court said at p. 55:

"In retrospect it of course is now possible to look back and say that in this detail or that a slightly different approach or line of action might have been more effective than the particular approach or line of action which was followed; but that there was an approach and a line of action honestly designed to minimize violations and stop violators is established beyond question; . . .

. . .

"The defense of lack of diligent effort to enforce compliance with plaintiff's stipulated prices is not sustained."

On the basis of the foregoing authorities, the hearing judge concludes that plaintiff has satisfied the general equitable requirement of reasonable and diligent enforcement as a prerequisite to securing an injunction.

[Amendment to Fair Trade Act]

Act 589 of the 1955 General Assembly (Act of May 25, 1956, P. L. (1955) 1756, 73 P. S. § 8, which is referred to in this Discussion as Act 589) was signed by the Governor on May 25, 1956, but did not become effective until September 1, 1956,

[14] At p. 449, the court added:
"Enforcement activities may take such form as is called for by the nature of the product, the industry, and the violations by the retailers, providing they add up to a reasonable and diligent effort in the light of all the facts."

[15] See Plaintiff's Requests for Findings of Fact Nos. 18 to 20, adopted by paragraph 6 of the Findings of Fact.

[16] See, for example, Seagram Distillers Corp. v. New Cut Rate Liquors, Inc. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,004], 221 F. 2d 815 (7th Cir. 1955), cert. den. 350 U. S. 828 (1955); Sunbeam Corp. v. Marcus [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,288], 105 F. Supp. 39 (S. D. N. Y. 1952); Eastman Kodak Co. v. Home Utilities Co. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,294], 138 F. Supp. 670 (D. Md. 1956); Donner v. Calvert Distillers Corp. [1951-1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,740], 77 A. 2d 305 (Md. 1950). The cases make clear that reasonable and diligent enforcement does not require plaintiff to proceed against all violators immediately and simultaneously in the courts before attempting to secure compliance warnings.

[17] See plaintiff's Requests for Findings 18 and 20, adopted by paragraph 6 of the Findings of Fact.

[18] General Electric Co. v. Federated Dept. Stores, Inc., CCH 1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,098 (E. D. Wisc. 1955), relied on by defendant, involved a specific factual situation before that court and there is no evidence of a similar situation being before this court. Further, see the affidavit of Winston H. Pickett, filed Aug. 12, 1957, which reveals that after the denial of temporary injunctive relief and before the disposition of plaintiff's motion for a permanent injunction, a consent judgment was entered into by which the Federated Dept. Stores were enjoined and restrained indefinitely from violating plaintiff's minimum fair-trade price schedules.

due to the absence of any language stating an effective date and in view of the following language of the Pennsylvania Statutory Construction Act, as amended (46 P. S. § 504):[19]

> "All laws hereafter enacted finally at a regular session of the Legislature, . . . shall be in full force and effect from and after the first day of September next following their final enactment, unless a different date is specified in the law itself . . . ."

Also, assuming the Act took effect in May 1956, the hearing judge finds that the phrase, "after at least seven days written notice given by the defendant prior to the commencement of such action," contemplates that a retailer such as this defendant cannot rely on the "complete defense" provided for in the Act unless he has given the manufacturer notice of sales below the specified minimum prices by his competitor or competitors at least seven days before suit has been instituted. (The hearing judge reaches this conclusion on the basis of the attached letter dated 8/1/57 of counsel for plaintiff). As stated above plaintiff has taken reasonable and diligent steps to enforce his price schedule and such steps need not be taken within seven days of the notices received from defendant.

[Interpretation of Amendment]

Since defendant disagrees with these conclusions and an appellate court may disagree with the hearing judge's conclusions on these points, the possible application of the Act to this factual situation is considered by the hearing judge in the balance of this Discussion assuming the Act took effect on the date of its approval by the Governor (May 25, 1956).

There is some doubt as to whether defendant has established the "complete defense" provided for by Act 589 of the 1955 General Assembly, which added this sentence to the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act (73 P. S. § 7):[20]

> "It shall, however, be a complete defense to such an action for the defendant to prove that the party stipulating such price, after at least seven days written notice given by the defendant prior to the commencement of such action, has failed to take reasonable and diligent steps to prevent the continuation of such advertising, offering for sale or selling, by those in competition with the defendant, who were specified in such notice."

These principles seem pertinent in interpreting this Act:

A. Since the Governor had vetoed for other reasons a bill (H. B. 1418) passed by this session of the General Assembly, which used the phrase "effective steps to insure compliance," rather than the words "reasonable and diligent steps" contained in Act 589, the General Assembly must have intended to require plaintiff to take steps which were somewhat less than those "effective to insure compliance."

B. By creating the "complete defense," the General Assembly recognized that a violator, whose conduct a competitor thinks is important enough to call to the attention of the manufacturer, is having a significant effect on the fair trade price structure. Under such circumstances, the manufacturer fails to take effective steps to see that such violator conforms to the minimum price schedule at the risk that what he has done may not be considered reasonable and diligent.

C. The judicial definition of the phrase "reasonable and diligent" by other courts in fair trade cases is some evidence of what the General Assembly contemplated would be required under this language.

D. The legislature would not have passed this Act in order to require the manufacturer to take some action in seven days and then cease his reasonable and diligent steps. The statutory language contemplates that [19] This bill (H. B. 2107) was finally passed on May 22, 1956, by the regular 1955 session of the General Assembly, which was convened on January 4, 1955, and recessed from time to time but did not adjourn sine die until May 22, 1956. This was the longest legislative session in the history of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. Since H. B. 2107 was passed during the 1955 regular session, the following sentence of 46 P. S. § 504 is inapplicable:

"All laws enacted finally at a special or extraordinary session of the Legislature, shall be in full force and effect immediately upon final enactment, unless a different date is specified in the law itself."

[20] Although the hearing judge agrees with plaintiff's contention that Act 589 did not become effective until September 1, 1956 (see 46 P. S. § 504), plaintiff has taken the required action, in the case of those violators of whom defendant gave it notice, within 7 days of such notice in any event (cf. Conclusion of Law 4 and footnote to that Conclusion), so that whether the Act became effective in May or September 1956 is immaterial.

the manufacturer should investigate and follow up vigorously violators of whom they receive notice from their retailers.[21]

[Additional Evidence]

Applying these principles to this record, the hearing judge believes that plaintiff should place more evidence on the record of its enforcement activities against certain violators of whom defendant gave it notice prior to institution of this action, before being entitled to a permanent injunction, as more fully explained in the attached letter [not reproduced] to counsel of July 22, 1957.

Defendant's motion to vacate the temporary injunction will be denied and the matter will be set down for addition of evidence to the record in September 1957, in accordance with the letter of July 22, 1957, and this Discussion.

Conclusions of Law

1. Plaintiff's requested Conclusions of Law Nos. 1-5 [22] are adopted as the Conclusions of Law of this court.

2. Act No. 589 did not take effect until September 1, 1956, and, hence, is inapplicable to this case.

3. The phrase in Act 589 "after at least seven days written notice given by the defendant prior to the commencement of such action" does not require plaintiff to take "reasonable and diligent steps to prevent" competitors from selling below plaintiff's minimum prices within seven days of receipt of notice from defendant that such competitors are making such sales.

4. In the event that Conclusions of Law Nos. 2 and 3 should be incorrect, the court makes these Conclusions of Law:

A. Where, immediately prior to notice from a department store that a retailer has made a sale below a manufacturer's minimum fair trade prices, such manufacturer has conducted three shopping attempts to determine if the retailer (Bargain Center, Allentown—see Finding of Fact No. 3)[23] is selling at less than these prices, disclosing three refusals to sell for less than such prices, and the notice is received during a well-advertised price-cutting sale by the department store, the intent of Act No. 589's requirement of taking steps, within seven days, is not violated by failure to act within the seven-day period when the department store's price cutting continued during this period.[24]

B. Under Act No. 589, plaintiff has no duty to notify a defendant of what steps it is taking from time to time against [21] In this connection, the opinion in General Electric Co. v. R. H. Macy & Co., supra, concluded with this sentence at p. 452 of 103 N. Y. S. 2d:

"General Electric, as any other manufacturer or producer, should:

"(1) Keep itself informed as to price cutting activities and other trends generally known in the industry or trade.

"(2) Close scrutiny should be kept over prior violators and appropriate action taken where indicated.

"(3) Investigate and follow up complaints vigorously.

"(4) Enforce Fair Trade prices by repeated legal action if necessary.

"(5) The enforcement program must be a continuing and sustained one."

[22] See Remington Arms Company v. Gatling [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,968], 128 F. Supp. 226, 227 (W. D. Pa. 1955), where the court stated:

"The primary purpose of state fair trade laws, including that of Pennsylvania, is the protection and preservation of the goodwill of the manufacturer's trademark or brand name by means of resale price maintenance. The sale of a trademarked commodity at less than the stipulated price constitutes an assault on this goodwill which the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act is intended to protect."

See, also, Lee-Wilson, Inc. v. General Electric Company [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,053], 222 F. 2d 850, 853 (1st Cir. 1955).

[23] See, also, Finding of Fact 2(f), where plaintiff did not take steps within seven days after a second notice of a separate violation, before which plaintiff had personally delivered its No. 1 warning letter as a result of a recent previous notice of violation and had conducted two shopping attempts to determine if the retailer (A. O. Gehman & Sons) was selling at less than plaintiff's minimum fair trade prices. These two shoppings disclosed two refusals to sell for less than such prices (one of these shoppings was conducted on the same day as the receipt of the second notice). Plaintiff's action did not violate the intent of Act No. 589, especially where such second notice was received during the well-advertised price-cutting sale by the defendant.

[24] Where a retailer sends a second notice to a manufacturer, repeating a complaint that a competitor has violated the minimum fair trade price and no new instance of such violation is mentioned in the repeat notice, it is clear that if the manufacturer has taken appropriate steps within seven days of receipt of the first notice and is following the matter up, he need not take action within seven days of such a repeat notice. For this reason, the failure of plaintiff to take any specific action within seven days of the July 13th repeat notice concerning Bargain Center, Freemansburg (see Finding of Fact 2(d)), does not constitute a "complete defense" under Act 589.

violators of whom defendant has given it notice, but plaintiff should inform defendant that it has received the notice and has acted within the seven-day period.

C. The plaintiff is not entitled to a permanent injunction on the record now before the court.

5. Plaintiff is entitled to a permanent injunction restraining defendant from violating its minimum fair trade price schedule.[25]

6. Neither the Pennsylvania Fair Trade Act nor the Federal enabling acts (15 U. S. C. A. §§ 1 and 45(a)), as applied to this factual situation, are in violation of the United States or Pennsylvania Constitution.

7. The exemption clause contained in plaintiff's fair trade minimum retail price schedule does not render plaintiff's minimum fair trade prices illegal or unenforceable.

All requests for Conclusions of Law which are inconsistent with the foregoing are denied.

Order

And Now, August 19, 1957, It Is Ordered that defendant's motion to vacate the preliminary injunction filed May 21, 1957, is denied, without prejudice to the right of defendant to renew this motion sixty (60) days from July 22, 1957.[26]

[¶ 68,808] Austin Theatre, Inc. v. Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. (In Dissolution), et al.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civ. 96-334. Filed August 23, 1957.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Pretrial Procedures—Motion to Dismiss Complaint.—A motion to dismiss a motion picture theatre operator's complaint on the ground that the pleading of a nationwide and regional conspiracy was irrelevant to the gravamen of the complaint, namely, the discrimination between the plaintiff and its competitor theatres, was denied. A national conspiracy can be pleaded so long as the plaintiff claims to have suffered damage from such a conspiracy. The conspiracies, both nationwide and regional, were co-extensive in time with the injuries complained of by the plaintiff. There was no "shotgun" type of pleading which would subject the defendants to unduly burdensome discovery proceedings. The defendants can be protected from oppressiveness in discovery proceedings by appropriate orders.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9013.440.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Motion To Strike Allegations of Complaint.—In a motion picture theatre operator's action charging that the defendants engaged in a conspiracy and discriminated against the operator, the court sustained the defendants' motion to strike those portions of the operator's complaint concerning actions of an organization calculated "to defeat the just claims of independent exhibitors to reasonable clearance and other relief," and alleging that a national conspiracy had been proven in many cities and metropolitan areas of the United States.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9013.595.

For the plaintiff: Malkan & Ellner, New York, N. Y.

For the defendants: Cravath, Swaine & Moore, by Bruce Bromley, New York, N. Y.

For a prior decision of the U. S. Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, see 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,103, affirming a decision of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,017; for other decisions of the District Court, see 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,576, 68,278, and 68,277, and 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 67,967.

---

[25] As explained above, under Discussion, this permanent injunction will not be issued until the parties have had an opportunity to supplement the record on or after September 20, 1957.

[26] See attached letter of July 22, 1957 [not reproduced].

[Motions]

JOHN M. CASHIN, District Judge [In full text]: In this private antitrust suit defendants move to strike the amended complaint in its entirety for failure to comply with the prior order of the Court and for noncompliance with Rules 8(a)(1), 8(a)(2) and 8(e)(1) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure for failure to contain a short and complete statement of plaintiff's claim. In the alternative, defendants seek an order pursuant to Rule 12(f) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure striking certain portions of the amended complaint.

[Complaint]

Plaintiff, from the year 1936, has operated a motion picture theatre in the County of Queens. All of the defendants are alleged to have engaged in an unlawful conspiracy in restraint of trade which operated to the damage of plaintiff. Specific allegations are made of discrimination in favor of a competing movie house and of conspiracy by some of the defendants to erect another competing movie house to tighten their monopoly.

[Sufficiency]

This is the third motion made to dismiss the complaint in its entirety. The two previous motions were successful. Concededly, many of the defects complained of previously have been corrected. The gist of defendants' objections is that the pleading of a nationwide and regional conspiracy in the form complained of is irrelevant to the gravamen of the plaintiff's complaint, namely, the discrimination between plaintiff and its competitor theatres. As a result of the "shotgun" type of pleading, contend defendants, they might well be subject to unduly burdensome discovery proceedings. The contentions of the defendants are not persuasive. Concededly, a national conspiracy can be pleaded so long as plaintiff claims to have suffered damage therefrom (Maple-Drive-In Theatre Corp. v. Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,972], 17 F. R. D. 226 [SDNY 1955]; New Dyckman Theatre Corp. v. Radio-Keith-Orpheum [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,853], 16 F. R. D. 203 [SDNY 1954]; Metropolitan Theatre Co. v. Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,304], 12 F. R. D. 516 [SDNY 1952]). The application of the term "shotgun" to the allegations is unfounded since the conspiracies, both nationwide and regional, are coextensive in time with the injuries complained of by plaintiff. Thus, the vice alluded to in the New Dyckman and Maple-Drive-In cases (supra) is not here present. Defendants can be protected from oppressiveness in discovery proceedings by appropriate orders under Rule 30(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

[Allegations Stricken]

Certain of defendants' objections concerning portions of the complaint are, however, meritorious. The reference in Paragraph 8 of the amended complaint to actions of N. P. A. A. calculated "to defeat the just claims of independent exhibitors to reasonable clearance and other relief" is impertinent and should be stricken. The statement in Paragraph 13 that the national conspiracy has been proven in many cities and metropolitan areas of the United States is also obviously improperly incorporated in the complaint and should be stricken. All other specific allegations sought to be stricken are merely pleadings of the national or regional conspiracies and are permitted to stand.

Except as indicated above, the motion is denied.

Settle order.

[¶ 68,809] Shuman Prescription Pharmacy, Inc. v. Isham Park Pharmacy, Inc.

In the New York Supreme Court, New York County, Special Term, Part I. 138 N. Y. L. J., No. 43, page 3. Dated August 28, 1957.

New York Fair Trade (Feld-Crawford) Act

Fair Trade—Enforcement of Fair Trade Prices—Defense—Violation by Enforcing Party—Motion for Temporary Injunction.—A retailer's motion for a temporary injunction restraining a competing retailer from violating the New York Fair Trade Act was denied on the authority of two decisions, wherein injunctions had been denied because the enforcing parties' compliance with the act was in issue.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3452.34

[Denial of Temporary Injunction]

TILZER, Justice [In full text]: The temporary injunction sought by one retailer enjoining a competing retailer from violating the provisions of the Fair Trade Laws of this state is denied (Pordes v. Lythe [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,999], 137 N. Y. S., 2d, 422; Frasca v. Wilson, 2 App. Div., 2d, 762).

[¶ 68,810] Rogers-Kent, Inc. v. General Electric Company.

In the Supreme Court of the State of South Carolina. Case No. 4206. Opinion No. 17341. Filed August 26, 1957.

Appeal from Richland County. LEGARE BATES, County Judge. Affirmed.

South Carolina Fair Trade Act

Fair Trade—Constitutionality of South Carolina Fair Trade Act—Nonsigner Provision—South Carolina Constitution.—The South Carolina Fair Trade Act, insofar as it applies to nonsigners, is unconstitutional since it constitutes a deprivation of property without due process of law in violation of Article 1, Section 5 of the Constitution of South Carolina. The right of an owner of property to fix the price at which he will sell is an inherent attribute of the property itself. The Fair Trade Act can be justified only upon the theory that it constitutes a reasonable and proper exercise of the inherent police power of the state. Such power only can be exercised where it is reasonably necessary in the interests of the public order, health, safety, morals, or general welfare. There is no justification for the Act based upon considerations of the public health, safety, morals, and general welfare.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3040.40, 3085.43, 3258.

For the appellant: Boyd, Bruton & Lumpkin, and J. B. S. Lyles, Columbia, S. C.

For the respondent: Isadore Bernstein, Columbia, S. C.

Amicus Curiae: Nelson, Mullins & Grier, Columbia, S. C.

Affirming a decision of the Richland County Court, State of South Carolina, 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,625.

[Declaratory Judgment Action]

OXNER, Associate Justice [In full text]: This action was brought under the Uniform Declaratory Judgment Act, Volume 1, Title 10, Chapter 24 of the 1952 Code, to determine the constitutionality of our "Fair Trade Act", sections 66-91 to 66-95, inclusive, of the 1952 Code.

[Fair Trade Act]

This legislation was enacted in 1937. 40 St. at L. 301. It was entitled "An Act to Protect Trade Mark Owners, Distributors and the Public Against Injurious and Uneconomic Practices in the Distribution of Commodities Under a Distinguishing Trade Mark, Brand or Name."

Section 66-93, so far as material to our discussion, reads:

"No contract relating to the sale or resale of a commodity which bears, or the label or container of which bears, the trademark, brand or name of the producer, distributor or owner of such commodity and which is in fair and open competition with commodities of the same general class produced by others shall be deemed in violation of any law of the State by reason of any of the following provisions which may be contained in such contract:

"(1) That the buyer will not resell such commodity at less than the minimum price stipulated by the vendor or

"(2) That the producer or vendee of a commodity require upon the sale of such commodity to another that such purchaser agree that he will not, in turn, resell at less than the minimum price stipulated by such producer or vendee."

Section 66-94 is as follows:

"Wilfully and knowingly advertising, offering for sale or selling any commodity at less than the price stipulated in any contract containing either of the provisions mentioned in Section 66-93, whether the person so advertising, offering for sale or selling is or is not a party to such contract, is unfair competition and is actionable at the suit of any person damaged thereby."

[Trial Court Ruling]

The Court below held the Act unconstitutional upon the grounds (1) That it was void in its inception because inconsistent with the Sherman Anti-Trust Act as it then stood and the subsequent passage of permissive Federal legislation could not impart validity to it; (2) that it violated the due process and equal protection clauses of Article 1, Section 5 of our Constitution; and (3) that it was an unlawful delegation of legislative power to private individuals contrary to Article 3, Section 1.

[Fair Trader]

The facts were agreed upon. General Electric Company, defendant below and appellant here, manufactures and sells on a national scale many products, including small electrical appliances such as clocks, automatic blankets, fans, heating pads and vacuum cleaners, all of which bear its trade mark "General (GE) Electric." They are shipped from the places of manufacture to wholesale distributors who in turn sell said appliances to, amongst others, retail dealers throughout the United States. They are sold in this State in free and open competition with appliances of the same general class produced by others. General Electric has expended large sums in promoting and advertising these products and has established a valuable reputation and good will for them and its trade mark. It guarantees them against defects in material and workmanship and replaces or repairs any appliances becoming defective within the time limits specified in the guarantee. Since July, 1952, pursuant to the provisions of our Fair Trade Act, General Electric has from time to time entered into written agreements with a substantial number of retail dealers in South Carolina under which it has stipulated the minimum retail sale prices for its appliances.

[Nonsigner]

Rogers-Kent, Incorporated, plaintiff below and respondent here, is a South Carolina corporation engaged in a general retail mercantile business. It sells numerous articles bearing nationally known trade marks, including small appliances made by General Electric. It has not entered into any contract with General Electric under the Fair Trade Act and has sold its products from time to time below the retail price specified in the contracts made by General Electric with other retail dealers in this State. Although notified in January, 1955 of the form and existence of such contracts and the minimum retail prices therein specified, it has continued to advertise, offer for sale and sell at retail appliances bearing the trade-mark of General Electric at prices lower than those stipulated in the agreements made by General Electric with other dealers.

The record does not disclose the source from which Rogers-Kent obtains General Electric products. Presumably they were purchased from recognized dealers or direct from General Electric Company. Be that as it may, there is no contention the Rogers-Kent was guilty of fraud or deception in acquiring these appliances.

[Fair Trade Legislation]

The depression following 1929 gave impetus to the movement for legislation which would allow the fixing of minimum resale prices. California was the first State to adopt a Fair Trade act. It did so in 1931. Originally it applied only to those who signed the agreements. In 1933 the California statute was amended, making the contracts binding on all retailers who had knowledge of same, even though they had not signed such contracts. Within a few years most other States followed suit. All the acts contain provisions substantially the same as those embodied in the California act. It appears that 45 States have now enacted Fair Trade legislation.

At the time of the passage of our Act in 1937, it was unconstitutional as applied to interstate commerce. Old Dearborn Distributing Company v. Seagram-Distillers Corp. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,141], 299 U. S. 183, 57 S. Ct. 139, 81 L. Ed. 109. On August 17, 1937, in an attempt to change the rule announced in the above case, Congress passed the Miller-Tydings Act, 15 U. S. C. A., Section 1. In Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert Distillers Corp. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,823], 341 U. S. 384, 71 S. Ct. 745, 95 L. Ed. 1035, it was held that the Miller-Tydings Act applied only to cases where the parties litigant had entered into contracts made under State fair trade laws and had not amended the Sherman Act to such an extent as to permit an action against non-signers. Later, in an effort to obviate the effect of the ruling in the Schwegmann case, the so-called McGuire Act was adopted by Congress, 15 U. S. C. A., Section 45. This had the effect of extending the Miller-Tydings Act to non-signers. The result is that it is now generally held that no Federal constitutional difficulty exists in enforcing State fair trade laws.

[Rulings in Other States]

The constitutionality of such legislation has been considered by approximately half the courts of last resort of the States adopting fair trade statutes. They have been upheld by a majority of these courts. Burroughs Wellcome & Co. v. Johnson Wholesale Perfume Co. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,194], 128 Conn. 596, 24 A. (2d) 841; Max Factor & Co. v. Kunsman [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,100], 5 Cal. (2d) 446, 55 P. (2d) 177; General Electric Co. v. Klein [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,774], — Del. —, 106 A. (2d) 206; Goldsmith v. Mead Johnson & Co. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,232], 176 Md. 682, 7 A. (2d) 176, 125 A. L. R. 1339; W. A. Sheaffer [Shaeffer] Pen Co. v. Barrett [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,611], 209 Miss. 1, 45 So. (2d) 838; Johnson & Johnson v. Weissbard [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,159], 121 N. J. Eq. 585, 191 A. 873; Bourjois Sales Corp. v. Dorfman [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,155], 273 N. Y. 167, 7 N. E. (2d) 30, 110 A. L. R. 1411; Eli Lilly & Co. v. Saunders [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,243], 216 N. C. 163, 4 S. E. (2d) 528, 125 A. L. R. 1308; Burche Co. v. General Electric Co. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,078], 382 Pa. 370, 115 A. (2d) 361; Miles Laboratories, Inc. v. Owl Drug Co. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,078], 67 S. D. 523, 295 N. W. 292; Frankfort Distillers Corp. v. Liberto [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,654], 190 Tenn. 478, 230 S. W. (2d) 971; Sears v. Western Thrift Stores of Olympia, Inc. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,152], 10 Wash. (2d) 372, 116 P. (2d) 756; Weco Products Co. v. Reed Drug Co. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,166], 225 Wis. 474, 274 N. W. 426; Seagram-Distillers Corp. v. Old Dearborn Distributing Co., 363 Ill. 610, 2 N. E. (2d) 940; General Electric Co. v. Kimball Jewelers, Inc. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,291], — Mass. —, 132 N. E. (2d) 652.

A number of states, admittedly a minority in number, have on various grounds stricken down such statutes. Liquor Store, Inc. v. Continental Distilling Corp. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,396], — Fla. —, 40 So. (2d) 371; Cox v. General Electric Co. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,934], 211 Ga. 286, 85 S. E. (2d) 514; Shakespeare Co. v. Lippman's Tool Shop Sporting Goods Co. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,303], 334 Mich. 109, 54 N. W. (2d) 268; McGraw Electric Co. v. Lewis & Smith Drug Co. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,954], 159 Neb. 703, 68 N. W. (2d) 608; Union Carbide & Carbon Corp. v. White River Distributors, Inc. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,953], 224 Ark. 558, 275 S. W. (2d) 455; Olin Mathieson Chemical Corp. v. Francis [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,463], — Col. —, 301 P. (2d) 139; General Electric Co. v. Wahle [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,333], — Or. —, 296 P. (2d) 635; Dr. G. H. Tichenor Antiseptic Co. v. Schwegmann Bros. G. S. Mkts. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,400], 231 La. 1, 90 So. (2d) 343.

In General Electric Co. v. Thrifty Sales [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,482], 5 Utah (2d) 326, 301 P. (2d) 741, the Court said:

> "It is significant that after some years of experience under the acts and numerous comprehensive studies covering the economic effects, the administration, and the enforcement of such laws, the majority of the more recent decisions have declared the acts invalid. Since 1952, of the jurisdictions considering the issue for the first time, only four states have upheld them, while eight have found them unconstitutional."

["Due Process" Clause]

Most of the State decisions holding the fair trade laws unconstitutional are based primarily on the ground that as applied to non-signers, such legislation constitutes a deprivation of property without due process of law. We are in accord with this view. We rest our decision upon the due process clause of Section 5, Article I of the Constitution of South Carolina.

> "Property in a thing consists not merely in its ownership and possession, but in the unrestricted right of use, enjoyment, and disposal. Anything which destroys one or more of these elements of property to that extent destroys the property itself." Gasque v. Town of Conway, 194 S. C. 15, 8 S. E. (2d) 871. Also, see Henderson v. City of Greenwood, 172 S. C. 16, 172 S. E. 689.

The right of an owner of property to fix the price at which he will sell is an inherent attribute of the property itself. Tyson & Bro. v. Banton, 273 U. S. 418, 47 S. Ct. 426; Charles Wolff Packing Co. v. Court of Industrial Relations, 262 U. S. 522, 43 S. Ct. 630;

Williams v. Standard Oil Co., 278 U. S. 235, 49 S. Ct. 115; New State Ice Co. v. Leibmann, 285 U. S. 262, 52 S. Ct. 371.

This legislation can be justified only upon the theory that it constitutes a reasonable and proper exercise of the inherent police power of the State. We have held that such power can only be exercised where it is reasonably necessary in the interests of the public order, health, safety, morals or general welfare. Gasque, Inc. v. Nates, Commissioner, 191 S. C. 271, 2 S. E. (2d) 36; McCoy v. Town of York, 193 S. C. 390, 8 S. E. (2d) 905.

[Justification for Act]

It is difficult to find any justification for this legislation based upon considerations of the public health, safety, morals and general welfare. It applies to every product bearing the trade-mark, brand or name of the producer. No distinction is made between commodities affected with a public interest and those that are not. Under the terms of the act, a non-signer has no voice whatsoever in fixing the price at which he may sell his property. By entering into a contract with a single retailer, the trade-mark owner may fix the price for all retailers, without regard to their interests or welfare. The manufacturer is not required to take into consideration the cost of his article. He may change the retail prices at will, or even terminate the contract and remove any article from the operation of the statute. It is solely up to him to say whether or not there shall be a law controlling the price at which his trade-marked article shall be sold. There is no review of his acts. In Cox v. General Electric Company, supra [1955 Trade Cases ¶ 67,934], 211 Ga. 286, 85 S. E. (2d) 514, the Court said:

> "We are also familiar with the modern trend to allow the government to encroach more and more upon the individual liberties and freedoms. So far as we are concerned, we will not strike down the Constitution of our State for this purpose; neither will we follow the crowd. The scheme described in the petition now under consideration permits a manufacturer, under the guise of protecting his property rights in a trade name and trade-mark, to control the price of his product down through the channels of trade into the hands of the ultimate consumer, and into the hands of persons with whom he has no contractual relation whatever. This statute clearly violates the provisions of the due-process clause of the Constitution of the State of Georgia."

[Old Dearborn Case]

We have not overlooked the fact that it was held in Old Dearborn Distributing Co. v. Seagram-Distillers Corp., supra [1932-1939 Trade Cases ¶ 55,141], 299 U. S. 183, 57 S. Ct. 139, 81 L. Ed. 109, that the non-signer provision of the fair trade laws did not work a denial of due process of law or the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment. This apparently settles the matter in so far as the Federal Constitution is concerned but does not control us in the interpretation of our own Constitution. The Old Dearborn case was predicated upon the assumption that non-signers had consented to the arrangement and was based on the premise that the manufacturer has a property right in his trade-mark as distinguished from the physical thing, the product. The Court said:

> "Appellants here acquired the commodity in question with full knowledge of the then existing restriction in respect of price which the producer and wholesaler dealer had imposed, and, of course, with presumptive if not actual knowledge of the law which authorized the restriction. Appellants were not obliged to buy; and their voluntary acquisition of the property with such knowledge carried with it, * * * assent to the protective restriction, with consequent liability under section 2 of the law by which such acquisition was conditioned."
>
> * * *
>
> "We are here dealing not with a commodity alone, but with a commodity plus the brand or trade-mark which it bears as evidence of its origin and of the quality of the commodity for which the brand or trade-mark stands. Appellants own the commodity; they do not own the mark or the good will that the mark symbolizes."
>
> * * *
>
> "The ownership of the good will, we repeat, remains unchanged, notwithstanding the commodity has been parted with. Section 2 of the act does not prevent a purchaser of the commodity bearing the mark from selling the commodity alone at any price he pleases. It interferes only when he sells with the aid of the good will of the vendor; and it interferes then only to protect that good will against injury. It proceeds upon the theory that the sale of identified goods at less than the price fixed by the owner of the mark or brand is an assault upon the good will, and constitutes what the statute denominates 'unfair competition.' * * There is nothing in the act to preclude the purchaser from removing the mark or brand from the commodity—thus separating the physical property, which he owns, from the good will, which is the property of another—and then selling the commodity at his own price, provided he can do so without utilizing the good will of the latter as an aid to that end."

Most of the State decisions upholding fair trade legislation are bottomed upon the Old Dearborn case but we do not think the theory upon which that case was decided is sound. We find no basis for implied consent on the part of non-signers. A trademark or brand is not in the nature of a covenant running with property. Nor do we agree with the premise that a manufacturer or producer who has sold his trademarked article for full value, completely parted with possession and title, and placed it in the channels of trade, still retains some property interest which enables him to control the selling price in perpetuity. It is difficult to see how he can sell his cake and have it, too. We are impressed with the following from the dissenting opinion of Judge Holmes in Schwegmann Bros. Giant Super Markets v. Eli Lilly & Co. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,516], 205 F. (2d) 788:

"Trade-mark and good will are not synonymous terms; but the Old Dearborn opinion says: 'Appellants own the commodity; they do not own the mark or the good will that the mark symbolizes.' The court ignored the fact that the producer put its name and mark on the container (sometimes on the product) and launched it in commerce. The court said that there was nothing to prevent a purchaser from selling the commodity alone at any price, and nothing to preclude a purchaser from removing the mark or brand and then selling the commodity at his own price, with a vague proviso that the good will of the producer must not be used to aid the sale. This proviso must be distinguished from the three statutory conditions wherein sales are excepted from minimum price agreements. The statutory exceptions are not involved here, and the Old Dearborn opinion maintains that the retailer may separate the physical property, which he owns, from the good will of the manufacturer's business, which is the property of another, and then sell the commodity at his own price, provided, etc. The court says ownership of the good will 'remains unchanged, notwithstanding the commodity has been parted with'; and then it says that the fair-trade statute interferes 'only to protect that good will against injury.' Let us now ascertain what physical property was sold by the appellee, and what incorporeal property was retained by it.

"The appellants bought more than the loose, disattached, commodity; they bought the package, bottle or container, in which it was delivered, with the inscriptions on the same. This tangible property was put into the channels of trade by the producer, and title to it passed to the retailers; but the latter acquired nothing intangible, like the good will of the vendor's business, or the right to use the trade mark on other commodities sold by them. No covenants ran with the sale of the merchandise like covenants sometimes run with the land conveyed. The doctrine of caveat emptor did not require the buyers to beware of price-fixing agreements between the vendor and some other retailer. If the appellants made no contract, they did not need to underwrite the covenants of their competitors. A trade mark is not always evidence of good quality or symbolic of good will; but ordinarily is only representative of the origin of a commodity or the identity of its marker. Marks that simply indicate the quality of articles do not constitute a valid trade mark, and no property may be acquired therein.

"We have here sales, for the purpose of resale, of commodities in trade-marked containers; and it was not unfair competition, injurious to the producer's good will, for retailers who had agreed to no prices to resell the same commodities in the same containers at their own prices without defacing the trade mark. Without mentioning the practical impossibility of removing the trade mark from all aspirin tablets and from all containers of drugs in stock, there are state and federal statutes forbidding the obliteration or concealment of trade marks, and even requiring the display of the manufacturer's, packer's, or distributor's name on drugs."

We think the authority of the Old Dearborn case was somewhat weakened by the later decision of the United States Supreme Court in Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert Distillers Corp., supra [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,823], 341 U. S. 384, 71 S. Ct. 745, 95 L. Ed. 1035, where the Court frankly characterized the State fair trade statutes as involving price fixing against non-signers. It was there stated:

"If a distributor and one or more retailers want to agree, combine, or conspire to fix a minimum price, they can do so if state law permits. * * * When they seek, however, to impose price fixing on persons who have not contracted or agreed to the scheme, the situation is vastly different. That is not price fixing by contract or agreement; that is price fixing by compulsion. That is not following the path of consensual agreement; that is resort to coercion. * * * Contracts or agreements convey the idea of a cooperative arrangement, not a program whereby recalcitrants are dragged in by the heels and compelled to submit to price fixing."

[Constitutionality]

The modern trend is to regard this legislation as a price-fixing statute. In General Electric Company v. Wahle, supra [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,333], — Or. —, 296 P. (2d) 635, the Court said:

"Regardless of how its true nature may be camouflaged by high-sounding terms such as 'free and open competition', 'unfair competition', 'protection of good will,' etc., it is a matter of common knowledge that it is a price-fixing statute designed principally to destroy competition at the retail level. Protection of the 'good will' of the trademark owner is simply an excuse and not a reason for the law. According to eminent writers in law reviews, pressure for the passage of these Acts came not from manufacturers or other trademark owners but from distributors—first and foremost the retail druggists associations and then other retail and wholesale distributors."

Having concluded that the statute in so far as it applies to non-signers, must be declared unconstitutional upon the ground that it constitutes a deprivation of property without due process of law in violation of Article I, Section 5 of the Constitution of South Carolina, we need not pass upon the other grounds upon which the lower Court rested its decision.

Affirmed.

STUKES, C. J., TAYLOR, LEGGE and MOSS, JJ., concur.

[¶ 68,811] Central Ice Cream Company v. Golden Rod Ice Cream Company.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. No. 56 C 1010. Dated July 22, 1957.

Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act

Price Discrimination—Scope of Robinson-Patman Act—Commerce Covered by Act —Discrimination in Intrastate Commerce by Intrastate Seller.—An ice cream manufacturer's complaint charging that a competing manufacturer launched a campaign to solicit away most of the plaintiff-manufacturer's customers in the Chicago area in violation of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, was dismissed on the ground that the complaint did not allege that the defendant-manufacturer was engaged in interstate commerce and discriminated in the course of such commerce. The defendant-manufacturer was not engaged in interstate commerce by reason of the fact that it purchased raw materials in other states. The materials came to rest in Illinois, and the finished product was not sold outside of Illinois. Also, the fact that the defendant-manufacturer made substantial sales to a restaurant chain in Illinois which in turn supplied interstate railroads did not place the defendant-manufacturer in commerce. There was no allegation that any of the acts of the defendant-manufacturer took place in the course of interstate commerce. It was merely alleged that the defendant-manufacturer launched a campaign to solicit away the customers of the plaintiff-manufacturer in the Chicago area. The plaintiff-manufacturer could not rely upon the case of Bowman Dairy Co. v. Hedlin Dairy Co., 1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,959, to sustain its action because there was no allegation that the plaintiff-manufacturer's interstate business had suffered as a result of the defendant's conduct.

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3505.100.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Elements of Unlawful Conspiracy—Conspiracy Within Single Corporation.—In an action charging that an ice cream manufacturer violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act, the court ruled that there was merit to the manufacturer's contention that, in order for the plaintiff to show a right to relief under the Sherman Act, it must show a combination or conspiracy between two or more persons, and that, where a defendant is a single company, it is not enough to allege a combination or conspiracy among the employees of such company.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.400.

For the plaintiff: Mortimer & Ryan, Chicago, Ill.

For the defendant: Philip A. Rose, of Rose, Burt & Pierce; and Claude A. Roth and Harry E. Smoot, of Gottlieb & Schwartz; all of Chicago, Ill.

Memorandum and Order

[Causes of Action]

CAMPBELL, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff, Central Ice Cream Company, an Illinois Corporation, brings this suit against Golden Rod Ice Cream Company, an Illinois Corporation, alleging conduct by defendant company damaging plaintiff's business in violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act (15 U. S. C. A. sec. 1), the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. A. sec. 13), the Robinson-Patman Act (15 U. S. C. A, sec. 13(a) and 13(b)), the Civil Rights Act (42 U. S. C. A. sec. 1985(3)) and the National School Lunch Act (42 U. S. C. A. sec. 1753). The complaint prays for temporary and permanent injunctions and for damages. Defendant has filed its motion to dismiss the complaint for lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter and for failure to state a claim.

The complaint alleges that plaintiff is an ice cream manufacturer in Illinois; that it "imports a very substantial part of its milk, cream and other ingredients from Wisconsin and other states in interstate commerce, transforms them into ice cream in Illinois and sells this ice cream very extensively both in Illinois and in other states"; that defendant is engaged in manufacture of ice cream also and obtains the raw materials from other states but that "so far as the plaintiff is informed the defendant makes no sales or deliveries of its ice cream outside Illinois." The gravamen of the complaint is that sometime in November, 1955, plaintiff and defendant submitted rival bids to the Board of Education of the City of Chicago, for the supply of ice cream for use in the Board's school lunch program, which is subsidized by the Federal Government under the National School Lunch Act; that defendant warned plaintiff that if it should persist in its bid to secure a contract with the Board, defendant would make a concentrated effort to deprive plaintiff of its customers. The complaint further alleges that the contract was awarded to plaintiff and that thereupon defendant launched a campaign to solicit away most of plaintiff's customers "in the Chicago area," offering loans, air conditioning units, deep freeze units and other items of personal property on condition that plaintiff's customers desert plaintiff and patronize defendant.

[Motion To Dismiss]

In support of its motion to dismiss defendant argues (1) that in order that plaintiff show a right to relief under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act it must show a combination or conspiracy between two or more persons and that where defendant is a single company it is not enough to allege a combination or conspiracy among the employees of such company; (2) that in order that plaintiff show a right to relief under the Clayton and Robinson-Patman Acts it must show that defendant committed the acts complained of "in commerce, in the course of such commerce"; (3) that section 1985(3) of the Civil Rights Act is inapplicable to the facts alleged; and (4) that the National School Lunch Act contains no provisions which would ground a right of action for civil relief.

[Interstate Commerce]

There is merit in all these contentions. Plaintiff, in its brief, apparently abandons its reliance purely upon the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. It attempts to meet defendant's second contention by reference to this court's decision in Bowman Dairy Co. v. Hedlin Co. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,959], 126 F. Supp. 749. In that case, this court, relying upon the decision of the Supreme Court in Moore v. Mead's Fine Bread Co. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,906], 348 U. S. 115, held that where plaintiff is engaged "in commerce" but defendant is not, plaintiff should not fail on that account under the Clayton and Robinson-Patman Acts, it having been held in the Moore case, involving the converse situation (where defendant acts "in commerce, in the course of commerce" to injure plaintiff who is not engaged "in commerce"), that plaintiff is entitled to relief. This court was led to its conclusion in the Bowman case, by consideration of the injustice which would result from holding that the remedies of plaintiff and defendant so situated are not mutual, and of the words of Congressman Utterback, manager of the Robinson-Patman Act in the House, quoted in the opinion of the Moore case, that one of the purposes of the Act was "to protect interstate commerce itself from injury by influences within the state." It may be that where such influence upon the interstate commerce of plaintiff company is alleged, a right of action against a defendant engaged purely in intrastate commerce may be sufficiently stated under the Clayton and Robinson-Patman Acts. This is doubtful in view of the unambiguous language used in both the acts that "it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to etc." However, in this case there is no allegation whatever that plaintiff's interstate business has suffered through defendant's conduct.

Plaintiff advances the eleventh hour argument that defendant is in fact engaged in interstate commerce in that its purchase of raw materials in other states and its manufacture and sale of ice cream in Illinois, constitute an uninterrupted flow of commerce. There are many authorities to the effect that when the raw materials from other states come to rest in defendant's manufacturing plant to await processing, the flow of commerce is interrupted (cf. Ewing-Von Allmen Dairy Co. v. C. and C. Ice Cream Co., 6 Cir. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,005], 109 F. 2d 898, cert. den. 312 U. S. 689). Defendant points to United States v. Employing Plasterers Assn. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,692], 347 U. S. 186, as announcing a different rule. In that case the Supreme Court held that a complaint under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, alleging a combination by a Chicago trade association of plastering contractors, a local union of plasterers and the union's president, to restrict and control purchase of plastering materials shipped in from other states, could not be properly dismissed on the basis that those materials come to rest before the local restraints become effective. The question whether local restraints upon purchase of materials shipped from other states, not subjected to manufacturing processes on arrival, are restraints upon commerce is not the same as the question whether sale within a state of finished products manufactured within that state from materials shipped from other states, is in commerce or out of commerce. The fact that the materials come to rest upon arrival in the state may indeed be irrelevant to the first question, it is clearly relevant and controlling in the second.

Plaintiff however relies upon its allegation that defendant makes substantial sales to a restaurant chain in Illinois which in turn supplies railroads in interstate commerce. Such sales may place defendant in commerce, if the question were one of federal power to regulate its business (Santa Cruz Co. v. Labor Board, 303 U. S. 453; Hamlet Ice Co. v. Fleming, 4 Cir. 127 F. 2d 165). But the Clayton and Robinson-Patman Acts require, for their violation, that the offending person not only "engage in commerce" but do the prohibited acts "in the course of such commerce." There is no allegation in plaintiff's complaint that defendant's sales to the restaurant chain supplying railroads involved any acts violative of the Clayton and Robinson-Patman Acts. On the contrary the allegation of plaintiff's complaint is that defendant launched a campaign to solicit away most of plaintiff's customers "in the Chicago area."

[Civil Rights Act]

Plaintiff cannot be sustained in its reliance upon section 1985(3) of the Civil Rights Act. The history of that section shows that it was not meant to deal with the questions here presented. As section 2 of the Act of April 20, 1871, the full title of which was "An Act to Enforce the Provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and for Other Purposes," it was intended as a solution to pressing problems of civil liberties following upon the Civil War. Apart from its historical context, it has been authoritatively interpreted, in the light of section 1 of the original act (now 42 U. S. C. A. sec. 1983), as applicable only to combinations or conspiracies "under color of state law" (Collins v. Handyman, 341 U. S. 651). It is not alleged here that defendant's acts, in depriving plaintiff of its customers, were done under color of state law.

[School Lunch Act]

Plaintiff does not argue with respect to the National School Lunch Act that it has a cause of action arising under that Act, rather it argues that the existence of the Act strengthens its case under the Clayton and Robinson-Patman Acts. Since I hold that plaintiff has failed to state a claim upon which relief may be granted under those Acts, plaintiff's argument here need not be considered.

[Complaint Dismissed]

Defendant's motion to dismiss the complaint is hereby granted. Accordingly the complaint is dismissed.

[¶ 68,812] United States v. Ned R. Baskin.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. Civil Action No. 55 C 47. Dated July 5, 1957.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Unfair Practices—Violation of FTC Order to Cease and Desist—Civil Penalty Suit.—The president of a company was found to have violated a Federal Trade Commission order prohibiting him from representing that any photograph or enlargement, framed or unframed, will be made and delivered for a stipulated price, unless such photograph or enlargement will, in fact, be made and delivered for the stipulated price, without the imposition of any condition not clearly revealed in the representation. The court found that the president caused to be published in magazines, circulated in interstate commerce, advertising by which he purported to deliver a framed photograph for the total price of 29 cents when, in fact, he imposed a price of 58 cents for the framed photograph.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5081.612, 5095.25, 5095.42, 5095.61; FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8661.50.

For the plaintiff: Robert Tieken, United States Attorney, Chicago, Ill.

For the defendant: Marshall & Marshall, Chicago, Ill.

Ruling adjudging violation of a Federal Trade Commission order in Dkt. 4902.

Findings of Fact

[Civil Penalty Suit]

PERRY, District Judge [In full text]: 1. That this action arose under Section 5(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (52 Stat. 114 (1938)) as amended and jurisdiction is vested in this court under the provisions of 28 United States Code Sections 1345, 1355 and 1395.

[Defendant]

2. That the defendant is a resident of the Northern District of Illinois and has been at all times relevant to this matter President of Hollywood Photocolor Corporation, trading as Hollywood Film Studios, a California corporation.

[FTC Order]

3. That on January 26, 1951, The Federal Trade Commission, after conducting hearings, receiving testimony, and examining briefs in the Matter of Ned R. Baskin, an individual, Docket No. 4902, made Findings of Fact, and resolved that the practices of the defendant were injurious to the public and constituted unfair and deceptive acts and practices within the meaning of The Federal Trade Commission Act.

4. That on January 26, 1951, The Federal Trade Commission issued an Order upon Ned R. Baskin, an individual, trading under the name of Hollywood Film Studios, or trading under any other name, to cease and desist, among other things, from:

(1) Representing directly or by implication that any photograph or enlargement, colored or black and white, framed or unframed, will be made and delivered for a stipulated price, unless such photograph or enlargement will, in fact, be made and delivered for the stipulated price, without the imposition or attempted imposition of any condition not clearly revealed in the representation.

(4) Using the name Hollywood Film Studios, together with pictures of motion picture celebrities, on letterhead or in advertising matter; or otherwise representing that the respondent has any connection whatever with the motion picture industry.

5. That on January 26, 1951, there was caused to be served upon the defendant by registered mail, at the business address of the defendant, copies of the Findings of Fact and Conclusions, issued by The Federal Trade Commission, together with the Order of the Commission to cease and desist, as hereinbefore set forth, in accordance with Section 5(f) of The Federal Trade Commission Act (15 United States Code 45(f)).

6. That the defendant did not, within the time prescribed under Section 5(c) of The Federal Trade Commission Act, file a Petition in any United States Court of Appeals to set aside the cease and desist order, and by operation of law, said cease and desist order became final on April 13, 1951.

[Violation of Order]

7. That the defendant caused to be published in the February, 1952 issue of Moose Magazine, October 1951 issue of True Confessions, November 1951 issue of True Confessions, July 1952 issue of True Confessions, September 1951 issue of Motion Picture, August 1952 issue of Motion Picture, March 1952 issue of Lovers, April 1952 issue of Actual Romances, March 1952 issue of I Confess, all of which magazines are publication of interstate circulation, advertising by which the defendant purported to deliver a framed photograph for the total of 29¢ when, in fact, the defendant imposed a price of 58¢ for said framed photograph.

Conclusion of Law

1. That the advertising matter, set forth in Counts One through Nine of the plaintiff's Complaint, violated Paragraph 1 of The Federal Trade Commission cease and desist Order of January 26, 1951, issued in the case of Fred Baskin, an individual, Docket No. 4902.

2. That this court has jurisdiction of the parties to this matter, service of process having been made upon the defendant within the Northern District of Illinois; and has jurisdiction of the subject matter, by virtue of Section 1345, Title 18 [28], United States Code, as plaintiff.

[¶ 68,813] United States v. Milk Drivers & Dairy Employees Union, Local No. 471, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen & Helpers of America [originally "United States v. Northland Milk & Ice Cream Co., et al."].

In the United States District Court for the District of Minnesota, Fourth Division. Civil No. 4361. Dated August 30, 1957.

Case No. 1147 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Labor Unions—Price Fixing Conspiracy Between Union and Non-Labor Groups—Union Enforcement of Conspiracy.—A milk drivers' union engaged in a conspiracy violative of Section 1 of the Sherman Act when it entered into a plan with dairies and store owners to maintain the consumer price of store deliveries of milk at or near the price charged for home deliveries of milk and acted as the enforcing agency of the plan. The collective bargaining agreements between the union and the dairies established the union as the enforcing agency of the plan and gave the union the right to discontinue delivery of milk to stores that sold milk at "unfair" prices. Evidence established that the union entered into and enforced the plan. In order to establish liability under the Sherman Act, the parties need not enter into a formal legal contract. Proof of an informal understanding is sufficient to prove a conspiracy.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2101.063.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Labor Unions—Collective Bargaining Agreement—Provision Barring Creation of New Milk Routes—Legality.—A provision of a collective bargaining agreement between a milk drivers' union and dairies which provided that "no product shall be sold for resale to peddlers or so-called independent milkmen, unless they have been working in the same capacity for two years or over with the same distributor" constituted a restraint of trade and a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Under the terms of the provision, the creation of new vendor milk routes was barred and no person could qualify as a vendor in the future. This would result in the elimination of competition and the stabilization of prices by removing from the milk business a class of employee-driver which was able to price its product as it wished. The provision constituted an agreement between a union and a non-labor group to unlawfully restrain trade and should be eliminated from the agreement.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2101.063.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Scope of Sherman Act—Interstate Commerce—Effect of Conspiracy on Interstate Commerce.—A union's contention that, even assuming the existence of a conspiracy between it and dairies to maintain non-competitive milk prices in the Minneapolis trade area, a district court was without jurisdiction to entertain an action against it under the Sherman Act because the matter did not affect interstate commerce was rejected. Evidence established that a substantial percentage of the fluid milk which came into the trade area came from Wisconsin, and that most of the milk distributors who signed agreements with the union received some or all of their milk requirements from Wisconsin sources. Wisconsin milk was intermixed with Minnesota milk, and normally, milk was distributed within 24 hours of its receipt in Minnesota. Restraints at the retail level of a commodity originating outside of a state fall within the prohibition of the Sherman Act. Milk shipped from Wisconsin remains in interstate commerce until it reaches the ultimate consumers in the Minneapolis area. Also, the court noted that it need not be concerned with the amount of interstate commerce affected because, "large" or "small," it is covered by the Sherman Act.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2035.153.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Labor Unions—Injunctive Relief—Statutory Exemptions to Unions Under Clayton Act and Norris-LaGuardia Act—Conspiracy with Non-Labor Group.—A union's contention that, even though it may have engaged in a conspiracy with dairies to fix prices of milk in violation of the Sherman Act, it was immune from the issuance of an injunction because of the statutory exemptions provided for unions by the Clayton Act and the Norris-LaGuardia Act was rejected. A union operates outside the scope of its statutory immunity when it combines with a non-labor group to impose commercial restrictions such as price fixing on interstate trade, even though it be prompted by a desire to further its own interests and those of its wage-earner members. The court did not have to decide whether the union, acting alone, in what it had done was in a "labor dispute" within the immunization of the Norris-LaGuardia Act because the union acted in combination with non-labor groups to fix prices of milk.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2101.110, 2101.265.

For the plaintiff: Earl A. Jinkinson, Chicago, Ill.

For the defendant: Thomas O. Kachelmacher, Minneapolis, Minn.

For a consent decree entered in the U. S. District Court, District of Minnesota, Fourth Division, see 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,091.

Memorandum

[Nature of Action]

DEVITT, District Judge [In full text]: This is an action brought by the United States against a Minneapolis Milk Drivers Union which seeks to enjoin the Union from violating the Sherman Anti-Trust Act by allegedly combining with Minneapolis milk companies, storekeepers and others, to fix the price of milk in the Minneapolis area.

The action was originally instituted against this Union, seven dairies distributing milk in the Minneapolis area, an unincorporated association of these dairy distributors, and several individuals. On June 23, 1955, the Court approved the entry of a consent decree as against all of the defendants other than the Union.

[Basic Issue]

The basic issue is whether or not the Union was a party to the alleged price-fixing conspiracy and whether, as a labor union, it is subject to the terms of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

[Contentions]

The defendant generally denies that it engaged in any such conspiracy during the base period alleged, July 1946 to November 1952, or later, and also denies that there is any interstate commerce affected, and takes the position that even though acts which constitute a conspiracy in violation of the anti-trust laws are found as against it, that it is immune from the issuance of an injunction against it by virtue of certain statutory exemptions provided by the Clayton and Norris-LaGuardia Acts.

[The Union]

The defendant is an unincorporated union having approximately 2800 members who live in an area of up to 100 miles from Minneapolis; 1250 of those members are drivers. These drivers are divided into three categories. Approximately 675 of them are so-called "retail" drivers who service homes and small stores with milk, cream and related products. About 150 of them are "wholesale" drivers who make similar deliveries to stores, restaurants and public institutions. Both the wholesale and retail drivers work on a fixed salary plus a commission. A third class of union members are variously called "vendors," "peddlers" or "commission drivers." There are about 15 of them in the Minneapolis area. They buy their milk as private entrepreneurs from various milk companies and resell it to any customers they can secure. Their compensation is determined by the difference between what they pay for the milk and what they sell it for, less their expenses. They use company-owned trucks. The same as retail and wholesale drivers, they are covered by the Blue Cross hospital and Blue Shield surgical compensation plans, receive regular vacations, and are covered by unemployment compensation and Workmen's Compensation Insurance; they are encompassed in the union pension plan and come within Social Security coverage.

It would appear from the evidence that these vendors "own" their own routes and customers, and the practice has been for them to "sell" such routes and customers to the milk companies when they go out of business.

These three classes of union members—retail, wholesale and vendors—are apparently the exclusive deliverers of all milk and milk products in the Minneapolis area.

[Dairy Stores]

Some time prior to 1946, a relatively new institution arose on the retail store scene, called a "dairy store," which specializes in the sale of milk, cream, ice cream and similar dairy products. Occasionally some groceries are sold in connection with such operation. These stores, and later the independently owned grocery stores and supermarkets, particularly in the outlying or suburban areas of the city of Minneapolis, started the practice of selling dairy products, principally milk, at prices appreciably below the price at which such milk could be purchased by home delivery. Many times such milk was sold at less than its cost. Dairy stores, and particularly grocery stores, prominently advertised milk at the low cost as a "loss leader" in order to encourage patronage to the store.

This resulted in an appreciable decrease in the amount of home delivered milk and a similar decrease in the overall compensation earned by retail milk drivers who received their compensation on a fixed-salary-plus-commission basis.

[Government Charges]

This situation gave rise to the transmission of events which the government claims constitutes a violation of the anti-trust laws. The government contends that the milk distributors and the Union, the storekeepers, and others, agreed and combined and conspired to fix the retail price at which milk was sold in the stores at a price the same as or near the price at which such milk was sold upon home delivery. It is alleged that this is illegal and violative of Section 1 of the Sherman Act (15 U. S. C. A. 1), which provides in part that:

"Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal . . ."

[Evidence]

It was shown by the government that the collective bargaining agreements between the dairies and the Union established the Union as a policing and enforcing agency to require stores to maintain non-competitive consumer prices on milk and milk products. The collective bargaining agreements gave the Union the right to discontinue delivery to stores that sold milk at "unfair" prices—that is, consumer prices which were substantially below the prices charged by the dairies for home deliveries. If the stores did not comply by raising their milk prices to a "fair" level, the employer-union contract provided the authority for the Union members to discontinue making deliveries until the uncooperative store manager agreed to resell at a fair price.

The provision in the Union contract which provided this authority was originally contained as Section I (see gov'ts exhibit 35):

"The Union contends that experience and factual study have established to its satisfaction that the existence of a large price differential between dairy products sold cash and carry by stores or other outlets as compared to delivery to householders direct by employer is detrimental to the employees in the industry and that it causes loss of jobs, reduction in wages, lowering of working conditions and living standards. Accordingly, the Union and its members reserve the right to refuse to handle, deliver or assist in delivering dairy products to or for any retail store or stores or other outlets which resell to customers at a price so far below the price at which such products are sold upon direct delivery to householders as to constitute a differential harmful to the interests of milk drivers who are members of the Union. The failure or refusal of an employee to handle, deliver, or assist in delivering dairy products to or for any such retail store or stores or other outlets under the above circumstances shall not constitute a violation of the within Agreement by the Union or employees. [Emphasis supplied]

Later, in 1948, this principle was changed in wording and became Section J, and later Section L in the 1955 contract. (See gov'ts exhibit 35). It reads as follows:

"In the event that this Union shall determine that any retail store or other retail cash and carry outlets of dairy products is engaged in selling milk or other dairy products at such price or prices as to constitute unfair competition or an unfair trade practice, and any employee or employees shall refuse to handle, deliver, or assist in delivering milk or other dairy products to or for such retail store or other outlet, such refusal shall not subject any such employee to any disciplinary action for such refusal. [Emphasis supplied]

In the course of 5 trial days, the government presented 38 witnesses, many of them storekeepers and dairy company executives, and introduced records of Union meetings, meetings of the Milk Producers Trade Association at which authorized Union spokesmen were present, and other documentary evidence, from all of which the finding can readily be made that the Union did engage with the dairy companies and with store owners in a plan and program to maintain the consumer price of store deliveries of milk at or near the price charged for home deliveries. It is clear from the evidence that the Union was the policeman to enforce such a program. If a milk driver found that a store was advertising in its window the sale of milk at an "unfair" price, the driver would admonish the storekeeper. If such admonition failed to bring about a higher price, the Union secretary and business manager called the storekeeper. In many instances an executive of the dairy company who furnished the milk called the storekeeper at the instance of the Union secretary for the purpose of inducing the storekeeper to raise his price.

The evidence showed that many times after this "heat" was put on, the price of milk was raised. On numerous occasions the drivers threatened to discontinue milk deliveries. On at least two occasions milk deliveries were denied to storekeepers because of their recalcitrance in refusing to raise the price.

[Conspiracy Established]

The Union does not deny that it participated in such a program, but claims that such conduct does not constitute a conspiracy. But the evidence convinces me, particularly the practically uncontradicted evidence of what transpired at various Union meetings and at meetings of the Dairy Producers Trade Association in the Nicollet, Hotel, in which Union agents participated, that there was a conspiracy as is alleged in the complaint. In order to establish liability under the Sherman Act, the parties need not enter into a formal legal contract. Federal Trade Commission v. Pacific States Paper Trade Assoc., et al., 273 U. S. 52, 62 (1927). Proof of an informal understanding is sufficient to prove a conspiracy. Direct Sale Co., Inc. v. United States, 319 U. S. 703 (1943); Interstate Circuit Inc., et al. v. United States [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,205], 306 U. S. 208, 226 (1939). The evidence in this case to prove conspiracy was bountiful.

[Interstate Commerce]

The Union has made some claim that, even assuming the existence of a conspiracy, this court is without jurisdiction to entertain an action under the Sherman Act because the matter does not affect interstate commerce. The evidence showed that a substantial percentage of the fluid milk which comes into the Minneapolis trade area comes from Wisconsin. Much of the milk produced in the Western Wisconsin area adjacent to the Twin Cities areas, comes to the Twin City markets. Several Minneapolis distributors have purchased all or substantially all of their milk from producers in Wisconsin. Land o'Lakes Creamery purchased all of its milk for the so-called St. Michael plant from about 10 such dairies in the State of Wisconsin. John J. Handy of the Minneapolis Health Department stated that at the present time about 15% of the milk which comes to the Minneapolis market comes from Wisconsin. He estimated that in 1951 the percentage was about 3%. In the year 1955 most of the milk distributors who signed agreements with the defendant Union received some or all of their milk requirements from Wisconsin sources.

Witnesses testified that Wisconsin milk was intermixed with Minnesota milk in the process of preparing it for delivery. Normally milk was distributed within 24 hours of its receipt in Minnesota.

It is well settled that restraints at the retail level of a commodity originating outside of the state falls within the prohibition of the Sherman Act. Local 167, International Brotherhood of Teamsters v. United States [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,043], 291 U. S. 293, 297 (1934); United States v. Frankfort Distilleries, Inc. [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,338], 324 U. S. 293, 298 (1945).

Further we need not be concerned with the amount of interstate commerce affected because, "large or small" it is covered by the Act. United States v. McKesson & Robbins, Inc. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,368], 351 U. S. 305 (1956).

Further, on the authority of the Appellate Court of this Circuit, milk shipped from Wisconsin remains in interstate commerce until it reaches the ultimate consumer in the Minneapolis area. Pevely Dairy Co. v. United States [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,526], 178 F. 2d, 363, 366, 8 Cir. (1949). I am of the view that the interstate commerce requisite is satisfied.

[Statutory Exemptions]

Finally, the defendant Union argues that even though it may have engaged in a conspiracy to fix prices in interstate commerce, as is prohibited by the Sherman Act, it is immune from the issuance of an injunction to restrain it because of statutory exemptions provided for it by the Clayton Act and the Norris-LaGuardia Act.

The passage of the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. A. 17, 29 U. S. C. A. 52) in 1914 limited the area of impact of the Sherman Act on union activity by declaring that labor is neither a commodity or an article of commerce, and that the Sherman Act must not be construed to forbid the existence and activities of labor organizations instituted for the purpose of mutual help or to forbid or restrain members from "lawfully carrying out the legitimate objects therof", (Sec. 6). Section 20 of that law withheld from the courts the power to issue injunctions in cases involving or growing out of disputes "concerning terms or conditions of employment."

The Norris-LaGuardia Act of 1932 (29 U. S. C. A. 101-110, 113-115) specifically prohibited the issuance of injunctions in cases involving or growing out of a labor dispute which was defined in Section 113(c):

> "The term 'labor dispute' includes any controversy concerning terms or conditions of employment, or concerning the association or representation of persons in negotiating, fixing, maintaining, changing, or seeking to arrange terms or conditions of employment, regardless of whether or not the disputants stand in the proximate relation of employer and employee." [Emphasis supplied]

The Union claims that it is immune from the issuance of an injunction because its conduct in this case in attempting to equalize or minimize the differential between the prices at which milk was sold at stores and at the home, was for the welfare of its members, and was a labor dispute.

We need not decide here whether the Union, acting alone, in what it did was in a "labor dispute" within the immunization clause of the Norris-LaGuardia Act because complaint is made against, and relief is sought from, the Union's acting, not alone, but in combination with milk producers, stores and others in a conspiracy to fix the price of milk. So the legal question is whether such conduct, if proved, is enjoinable. The answer is yes and the authority is contained in the United States Supreme Court's holding in Allen Bradley Co. v. Local Union No. 3, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, et al. [1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,386], 325 U. S. 797 (1945).

That case enunciated the principle that a union operates outside the scope of its statutory immunity when it combines with a non-labor group to impose commercial restrictions such as price-fixing on interstate trade and commerce, even though it be prompted by a desire to further its own interests and that of its wage-earner members.

In Allen Bradley certain employers and unions combined, through the medium of collective bargaining agreements, to prevent out-of-state electrical equipment from being used locally. The union argued that this represented a "labor dispute" because the exclusion of out-of-state electrical equipment from the local market improved the employment opportunities of the members of the local union. This argument is strikingly similar in principle to that urged by the Union in this case. The Supreme Court was unimpressed by this contention, however, and stated, (see page 810):

> "For if business groups, by combining with labor unions, can fix prices and divide up markets, it was little more than a futule gesture for Congress to prohibit price fixing by business groups themselves. Seldom, if ever, has it been claimed before, that by permitting labor unions to carry on their own activities, Congress intended completely to abdicate its constitutional power to regulate interstate commerce and to empower interested business groups to shift our society from a competitive to a monopolistic economy. Finding no purpose of Congress to immunize labor unions who aid and abet manufacturers and traders in violating the Sherman Act, we hold that the district court correctly concluded that the respondents had violated the Act." [Emphasis added]

This principle has since been reaffirmed by the Supreme Court. See United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, et al. v. United States [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,545], 330 U. S. 395 (1947) and United States v. Employing Plasterers Assn. of Chicago, et al. [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,692], 347 U. S. 186 (1954). See also a recent decision in this district, United States v. Minneapolis Electrical Contractors Assn., et al., 99 F. Supp. 75 (D. C. Minn. 1951).

[Elimination of Independent Vendors]

One remaining facet of the case requires discussion. The government attacks a certain provision of the collective bargaining agreement relating to milk vendors or "peddlers" as violative of the Sherman Act and prays the Court's judgment eliminating the provision. This provision has been included in all of the Union contracts for many years. It reads as follows:

> "It is agreed that no product shall be sold for resale to peddlers or so-called independent milkmen, unless they have been working in the same capacity for two years or over with the same distributor; they shall pay dues and work under the same conditions as all other employees."

A literal reading of this provision effectively bars the creation of any new vendor milk routes. The evidence showed that there are only 15 of these vendors. Obviously under the terms of this provision no persons could qualify as vendors in the future.

Bergquist, secretary of the defendant Union, testified that the vendor system is not favored by the Union because it tends to break down the wages and working conditions of the regular drivers. The evidence was clear that the Union took the position that with this provision no additional peddlers could or would be allowed on the market.

On two occasions officers of the Union advised the dairies that this provision prevented the hiring of any new peddlers. In April of 1954 an officer of Land o'Lakes Creameries requested the Union to allow the creamery to sell milk and cream to persons who desired to do so as peddlers. In the summer of 1955 an officer of Dairy Home requested the Union to permit his company to sell to peddlers. In both instances the Union officers refused the requests, stating that the Union's contract prevented such sales. A similar interpretation of the contract was made by an officer of the Superior Dairy in the summer of 1955.

This provision of the agreement between the dairies and the Union, by its plain reading and practical application, will eventually do away with all vendors in the Minneapolis area. This would result in the elimination of competition and the stabilization of prices by removing from the milk business a class of employee-driver which is able to price its product as it wishes. The provision is clearly in restraint of trade and a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. It constitutes an agreement between a Union and a non-labor group to restrain trade within the prohibition of Allen Bradley Co. v. Local Union No. 3, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, et al. [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,386], 325 U. S. 797 (1945).

[Judgment]

It follows, therefore, that the plaintiff is entitled to judgment enjoining the Union from combining with milk producers, stores and others in a conspiracy to fix the price of milk in the Minneapolis retail area, and directing the Union to eliminate from its contract with distributors all restrictive provisions with reference to vendors.

Plaintiff will please prepare appropriate findings and form of judgment and submit a copy thereof to defendant's attorney.

[¶ 68,814] Harry S. Gordon, et al. v. Robert Samuel Wasserman.

In the California District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division One. Civ. No. 22006. Dated August 19, 1957.

Appeal from a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County. BURNETT WOLFSON, Judge. Affirmed.

California Antitrust Law

Combinations and Conspiracies Under State Laws—Practices—Restrictive Covenants—Agreement Not to Solicit Customers of Former Employer.—An employment contract, wherein the employee agreed not to divulge the names of customers or to solicit customers of his employer for a period of one year after the termination of his employment, did not unlawfully restrain the employee from engaging in a profession, trade, or business within the meaning of Section 16600 of the California Business and Professions Code.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2319.05.

For the appellant: Harry A. Franklin.

For the respondents: Joseph Stell.

Action to enjoin solicitation of customers of former employer, and for damages. Judgment for plaintiffs affirmed.

[Nature of Action]

DRAPEAU, Justice *pro tem. [In full text]: This is a similar case to Gordon v. Landau, ante, [1]p. —— [—— P. 2d ——], decided this day, and to Gordon v. Schwartz, [2]147 Cal. App. 2d 213 [305 P. 2d 117].

There is no need to repeat in this opinion the facts as to plaintiffs' business, and their relations with their customers and employees. These may be read in the Schwartz and Landau cases.

Suffice it to say here that Robert S. Wasserman, defendant in this case, was also a collector-salesman for plaintiffs; that he quit their employ, went into the same business, and then used plaintiffs' lists to solicit customers for himself.

In this case the trial court adjudged damages for plaintiffs and enjoined any further use of their lists by defendant.

Substantial evidence supports that part of the judgment. Therefore, these matters do not require further comment in this opinion.

* Assigned by Chairman of Judicial Council.
[1] Advance Report Citation: Ante, p. 351.
[2] Advance Report Citation: 147 A. C. A. 265.

[Restrictive Covenant]

But in this case this court must determine the validity of a contract between plaintiffs and defendant, in which defendant agreed not to solicit plaintiffs' customers for a year after the termination of his employment with them. This determination was not necessary to the decision in the Landau case.

Defendant contends that there was no consideration for the contract; that it is too vague and uncertain to be enforceable; that no wages or conditions of employment are specified in it; and that it has an unlawful object and is therefore void.

The last objection is the only one that merits any particular consideration.

It clearly appears in the contract that there was a consideration, and that it is neither vague nor uncertain. And to be valid it did not have to state wages or conditions of employment.

The last objection presents a more debatable question: Did the contract restrain defendant from engaging in a lawful profession, trade, or business, within the meaning of section 16600 of the Business and Professions Code? (Cf. Civ. Code, § 1598; Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16600; and Aetna Bldg. Maintenance Co. v. West, 39 Cal. 2d 198 [246 P. 2d 11].)

That part of the contract necessary to a consideration of this question is as follows:

> "(8) Collector-salesman further agrees that during the period of one (1) year immediately after the termination of his employment with the employer he will not, either directly or indirectly, make known or divulge the names or addresses of any of the customers or patrons of employer at the time he entered the employ of employer or with whom he became acquainted after entering the employ of employer to any person, firm or corporation, and that he will not directly or indirectly, either for himself or for any other person, firm, company or corporation, call upon, solicit, divert, or take away or attempt to solicit, divert or take away any of the customers, business or patrons, of the employer upon whom he called or whom he solicited or to whom he catered or with whom he became acquainted, or upon whom he called or to whom he catered after his employment with said employer.
>
> "(9) Collector-salesman hereby consents and agrees that for any violation of any of the provisions of this agreement, a restraining Order and/or an injunction may issue against him in addition to any other rights the employer may have.
>
> "(10) In the event that the employer is successful in any suit or proceeding brought or instituted by the employer to enforce any of the provisions of the within agreement or on account of any damages sustained by the employer by reason of the violation by the collector-salesman of any of the terms and/or provisions of this Agreement to be performed by the collector-salesman, collector-salesman agrees to pay to the employer reasonable attorneys' fees to be fixed by the Court."

[Validity]

It clearly appears by the terms of the contract that it does not prevent defendant from carrying on a weekly credit, or any other business. He covenants not to use plaintiffs' confidential lists to solicit customers for himself. Similar covenants have been held valid and enforceable in King v. Gerold, 109 Cal. App. 2d 316 [240 P. 2d 710], and in Handyspot Co. v. Buegeleisen [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,887], 128 Cal. App. 2d 191 [274 P. 2d 938].

[Affirmed]

Defendant finally contends that the complaint does not state a cause of action. Little needs to be said about this, for a reading of the complaint demonstrates that it does state a cause of action.

The judgment is affirmed.

WHITE, P. J., and FOURT, J., concurred.

[¶ 68,815] Erone Corporation, et al. v. Skouras Theatres Corporation, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civ. 105-311. Filed September 5, 1957.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Who May Bring Suit—Non-Operating Landlords of Motion Picture Theatres—Theatre Owners and Managers.

—The owners of five different motion picture theatres, which leased their respective theatres on a minimum rental plus percentage of gross profits basis to one of the defendants named in their antitrust damage action and which alleged that they were each injured by reason of conspiracies to monopolize "preferred runs" of motion pictures and to pool competitive theatres controlled by the defendants, could maintain a treble damage action under Section 4 of the Clayton Act. A motion to dismiss the action on the ground that a non-operating owner-lessor of a theatre has no standing to sue for treble damages was denied.

However, the court ruled that the owners of two other theatres could not sue to recover damages (sustained by reason of the alleged antitrust violations) for the periods when their theatres were being operated and managed by others. The court based this ruling on a decision wherein a patentee was denied standing to sue under the antitrust statutes on the ground that his damages were too incidental when the business or property right asserted was the right to collect royalties from a licensee who was a victim of the complained of acts. In the instant case, while the two theatre-owners were merely landlords, even if their leases were on a percentage basis, their position was precisely the same as the patentee. The operators and managers of these two theatres, however, were entitled to maintain their treble damage claim.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9005.55.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Necessary Averments To State Cause of Action—Interstate Commerce.—A motion to dismiss a complaint, charging unlawful conspiracies to monopolize "preferred runs" of motion pictures and to pool competitive theatres controlled by the defendants, on the ground that the leasing and ownership of theatres is not interstate commerce was denied. The acts of owning and leasing theatres by the defendants were part of the over-all conspiracies alleged to have damaged the operator-plaintiffs. Other activities of the defendants, concededly in interstate commerce, were vitally connected with the intrastate activities complained of by the plaintiffs.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.600.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Defenses—Statute of Limitations.—A motion to dismiss a complaint on the ground that the claims were barred by the statute of limitations or to dismiss so much of the claims as accrued prior to six years before the institution of the action was denied. The complaint alleged not only a continuance of a conspiracy but a continuance of acts in furtherance of the conspiracy until the date of the complaint. The question as to what damage claims are precluded by such statutes will be decided at the trial of the action.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9010.200.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Pretrial Procedures—Separate Statement of Claims.—A motion to dismiss an amended complaint on the ground that the plaintiffs failed to comply with an order requiring them to state the precise relationship of each of the plaintiffs to the theatres in question, to state the periods of such relationships, and to separately state and number the claims of each of the plaintiffs was denied.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9013.275.

For the plaintiffs: Bernard Bernstein (Milton Pollack and Stanley D. Halperin, of counsel), New York, N. Y.

For the defendants: Weisman, Allan, Spett & Sheinberg, and Zalkin & Cohen, New York, N. Y.

For a prior decision of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, see 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,299.

Opinion

[Motion]

JOHN M. CASHIN, District Judge [In full text]: Two separate sets of defendants herein, prior to answer, move against a "Further Amended Complaint" on various grounds. Because of the numerous grounds for the motion and their inter-relation, each will be considered separately after a summary of the relevant facts as alleged in the further amended complaint.

[Parties—Complaint]

Plaintiffs all seek to recover treble damages and injunctive relief under the antitrust laws. Five of the plaintiffs have been, for varying periods of times covered by the complaint, the owners of five different theatres and lessors thereof on a minimum rental plus percentage of gross profits basis to one of the defendants, its predecessor in interest or an instrumentality of the defendants. The other five plaintiffs have, at various times as specified in the complaint, been either owner-operator-managers or operator-managers of two other theatres. All of the theatres are located in Nassau County, New York. Defendants are in the business of owning, leasing, managing and/or operating motion picture theatres in the same general area wherein plaintiffs' theatres are located and in surrounding areas. Defendants, since September 1, 1934, have been engaged in various unlawful conspiracies to monopolize "preferred runs" of motion pictures and to pool competitive theatres controlled by them, to the injury of the public and to the direct injury of the respective businesses and properties of each of the plaintiffs.

Motion Pursuant to Rule 41(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure to Dismiss the Further Amended Complaint for Failure to Comply with an Order of the Court Dated March 28, 1956 (Item #5 of Motion #96 and Item #1 of Motion #95) or to Dismiss the Further Amended Complaint Pursuant to Rule 8(a)(2) for Failure to State a Short and Plain Statement of each Individual Claim (Item #6 of Motion #96) or to Direct a Further Amended Complaint in Accordance with the Aforementioned Order of the Court of March 28, 1956 (Item #7 of Motion #96, Item #5 of Motion #95).

A prior amended complaint was attacked successfully by defendants resulting in an order directing the service of a further amended complaint. The first amended complaint was found defective because it did not allege the precise relationship of each of the plaintiffs to the theatres in question, nor the periods of such relationship.

Paragraph 4 of the further amended complaint clearly delineates the interest of each plaintiff and the time period covered. This is precise compliance with Judge Weinfeld's order of March 28, 1956.

Another defect in the first amended complaint was that it did not separately state and number the claims of each of the plaintiffs who were concededly asserting separate claims. Defendants now contend that plaintiffs' further amended complaint complies only formally with the direction to separately state and number but ignores its substance. The contention is, however, unsound. The conspiracies pleaded are alleged to have affected adversely all of the plaintiffs. Their incorporation by reference in the separate claims is, therefore, to be the subject of commendation rather than condemnation since needless repetition is thereby avoided. The only paragraphs in the general allegations, namely, 8 through 10, which do not have application to all plaintiffs, have been omitted from incorporation by reference in the claims stated by those plaintiffs. One contention of the defendants is technically well taken, that is, the fact that paragraph 4 of the further amended complaint, incorporated by reference in each of the separate claims, defines the status of each of the plaintiffs. However, no confusion or prejudice whatsoever can arise from this technical defect and thus does not warrant a dismissal of the complaint with prejudice or the direction of the service of another amended complaint.

The motion to dismiss the further amended complaint pursuant to Rule 8(a)(2) is equally without merit. The facts upon which plaintiffs rely, and their applicability to each of the plaintiffs, is clearly and concisely stated, at least insofar as the nature of the action permits.

Motion to Dismiss the Action as to Plaintiffs, Erone Corporation, Hempstead Theatre Corporation, Rivoli Theatre Corporation, Glen Cove School Street Corporation and Calderone Valley Stream Corporation, on the Grounds that the Claims of these Plaintiffs Fail to State Claims upon Which Relief Can Be Granted (Rule 12(b)(6) of Federal Rules of Civil Procedure) or that the Court Lacks Jurisdiction over the Subject Matter Since the Claims Do Not Arise Under any Federal Statute (Rule 12(b)(1) of Federal Rules of Civil Procedure) (Item #2, Motion #95; Item #1, Motion #96).

Both grounds for this motion rest upon the proposition that a non-operating owner-lessor of a theatre has no standing to sue for treble damages for violation of the anti-trust acts since he is not injured in "his business or property" within the meaning of Section 4 of the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. A. § 15) nor has he standing to seek injunctive relief under Section 16 of the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. A. § 26) since there is no threatened loss or damage. While no direct authority exists in this circuit on the proposition involved herein, other circuits have considered the problem with varying views. Thus, the Third Circuit has denied relief to a non-operating owner-lessor (Harrison v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., (DC ED Pa. 1953) [1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,568], 115 F. Supp. 312, affd. (1954) [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,721], 211 F. 2d 405, cert. denied 348 U. S. 828; Melrose Realty Co. Inc. v. Loew's Incorporated, (1956) [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,358], 234 F. 2d 518, cert. denied 352 U. S. 890) while the Ninth and Seventh Circuits have allowed the relief, at least if the lessee of the theatre is engaged in the conspiracy (Steiner v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp., (9 Cir. 1956) [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,304], 232 F. 2d 190; Congress Building Corporation v. Loew's Incorporated, (7 Cir.) No. 11941, decided May 31, 1957 [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,725], rehearing denied July 29, 1957 [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,799], — F. 2d —). The last cited case has reviewed the authorities and their reasoning exhaustively and since I am in full agreement with the reasoning and result of the case, I shall deny the motion on the authority of that case.

Motions to Dismiss the Claims of Plaintiffs, Calderone-Mineola Theatre Corporation, Westbury Theatre Corporation, Mineola Theatre Operating Co. Inc., Calderone Rivoli Operating Corp. and Hempstead Operating Co. Inc., on the Grounds that They Fail to State a Claim upon Which Relief Can be Granted (Rule 12(b)(6) of Federal Rules of Civil Procedure) (Items #2 and #3, Motion #96; Item #3, Motion #95).

The first question involved on these motions is whether the owners of the two theatres considered can recover damages for the periods when said theatres were being operated and managed by others. On this question I am constrained to follow the decision of the Court of Appeals of the Second Circuit in the case of Productive Inventions, Inc. v. Trico Products Corp., (1955) [1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,104], 224 F. 2d 678, cert. denied 350 U. S. 936. In that case a patentee was denied standing to sue under the anti-trust statutes on the ground that his damages were too incidental when the business or property right asserted was the right to collect royalties from a licensee who was a victim of the complained of acts. While the plaintiff-owners were merely landlords, even if the leases were on a percentage basis, their position is precisely the same as the patentee in the Productive case and so their claims must be dismissed.

The claims of the operators and managers of the two theatres will, however, stand. Defendants' arguments that the complaint should be dismissed as to them is based on the theory that they are merely employees of the owner and thus only incidentally injured. The complaint, properly interpreted, however, makes it clear that the actions are brought by exhibitors who are clearly entitled to sue.

The argument that the leasing and ownership of theatres is not interstate commerce and thus restraint in regard thereto cannot be availed of by the operator-plaintiffs is without merit. The acts of owning and leasing theatres by the defendants are part of the over-all conspiracies alleged to have damaged the operator-plaintiffs. Other activities of the defendants, concededly in interstate commerce, are vitally connected with the intra-state activities complained of. Portions of the motions requesting dismissal of the complaint in this regard or the striking of such portions is denied.

Motion to Dismiss the Complaint on the Ground that All Injuries Suffered as Alleged Therein Are Barred by the Statute of Limitations (Item #4, Motion #96) or to Dismiss so Much of the Claims as Accrued Prior to Six Years Before the Institution of the Action (Item #4, Motion #95).

The first portion of this motion is obviously without merit since the complaint alleges not only a continuance of the conspiracy but a continuance of acts in furtherance thereof until the date of the complaint. The second portion will also be denied. Defendants may plead the statutes of limitations which they deem applicable. What damages are precluded by such statutes will be decided at the trial of the action.

Motion for a More Definite Statement (Item #8, Motion #96).

All the specifications requested by this motion may be obtained by discovery proceedings if, indeed, the specifications are necessary at all.

Motion to Strike Portions of the Complaint as Immaterial and Impertinent (Item #9, Motion #96).

A portion of Paragraph 8 of the complaint is requested to be stricken only as to certain defendants. Defendants seeking to have this portion stricken with regard to them contend that the duress was exercised only by other defendants and therefore cannot be availed of as against the moving defendants. However, Paragraph 10 of the complaint states "each of the other defendants named herein has had full knowledge of the various agreements referred to in Paragraphs 8, 9 and 10 hereof." Clearly the intendment of the quoted sentence is to allege that all of the defendants participated in the acts leading up to the agreements. Thus, the duress actively imposed by the defendants named in Paragraph 8 is also ascribed to the moving defendants. The portion of Paragraph 8 sought to be stricken will stand.

Paragraph 22 is sought to be stricken as evidentiary. Even if the allegations were merely evidentiary, defendants show no prejudice to them by their inclusion. The paragraph, therefore, will stand.

Except as set out above, the motions are denied.

Settle orders.

[¶ 68,816] Denton v. General Electric Co.

In the New York Supreme Court, New York County, Special Term, Part III. 138 N. Y. L. J., No. 50, page 6. Dated September 9, 1957.

New York Fair Trade (Feld-Crawford) Act

Fair Trade—Enforcement of Fair Trade Prices—Injunctions—Collateral Attack.—Where decrees had been entered against a dealer in two fair trade enforcement actions, an action by the dealer alleging that the fair trader's price fixing and fair trade operations were executed in such a fashion as to discriminate against him was dismissed. The matters asserted in the complaint would in each instance defeat the fair trader's claim of right to injunctive relief and destroy the prior decrees. The failure to proceed in the prior actions was fatal. The prior decrees were conclusive, even though the second decree was entered on default. The first decree was entered on consent, and the second enforcement action was commenced after the institution of the dealer's action.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3366.34, 3420.

For the plaintiff: John A. Mariano.

For the defendant: White & Case, New York, N. Y.

[Dismissal]

HECHT, Justice [In full text]: Defendant moves for dismissal of the amended complaint pursuant to Rule 107(4) of the Rules of Civil Practice. Judgments in two Feld-Crawford actions were entered against the plaintiff. The judgments are dated, respectively, April 13, 1953, and June 14, 1957. The first was entered on consent and the second in default. The second Feld-Crawford action was instituted after the commencement of this suit, in which plaintiff claims and alleges that defendant's price-fixing and fair-trade operations were executed in such a fashion as to discriminate against the plaintiff and were unlawful and improperly directed against him to produce harm and injury. The prior decrees are conclusive (Economy Food and Liquor Co. v. Frankfort Distilleries Corp'n [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,334], 232 F. 2d, 410), even though the second decree was entered on default (Reich v. Cochran, 151 N. Y., 122). The matters asserted in the complaint would in each instance defeat defendant's claim of right to injunctive relief and destroy the prior decrees. The failure to proceed in the prior actions is fatal.

The motion is granted. Settle order.

[¶ 68,817] Ella Ramsburg, original plaintiff, and Earl H. C. Lurkins, Vernon Lurkins, Edward F. Mueller and Hazel F. Mueller, Ralph Rohlfing and Lillian Garnet Rohlfing, Ave L. Vico and Charlotte Vico, Frank Rille, Herbert E. Frank, Bernice Lurkins and Mary Rille, intervenors v. American Investment Company of Illinois and Domestic Finance Corporation.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. October Term, 1955; January Session, 1956. No. 11610. Dated January 27, 1956.

Appeal from the United States District Court of the Southern District of Illinois, Southern Division.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages and Injunctive Relief—Persons Who May Bring Suit—Stockholders—Derivative Suit.—A motion to dismiss an appeal from a trial court order denying a motion by stockholders, in their derivative antitrust action for damages and injunctive relief, for a temporary injunction to restrain a proposed merger between the corporation in which they owned stock and another corporation on the ground that the stockholders did not have the capacity to prosecute the appeal was denied. The merger was completed during the pendency of the action. The stockholders' competence to prosecute the appeal must be tested in the light of the status which obtained when their action was filed. A stockholders' derivative suit will lie under Section 7 of the Clayton Act; therefore, the stockholders were competent parties when the suit was brought and remained so throughout the pendency of the litigation.

See Acquisitions of Stock or Assets, Vol. 1, ¶ 4208; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9005.70, 9020.55.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages and Injunctive Relief—Nature and Scope of Injunctive Relief—Mootness.—In a stockholders' derivative action to enjoin a proposed merger between the corporation in which they owned stock and another corporation on the ground that the merger would constitute a violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, a motion to dismiss the stockholders' appeal from a trial court order denying their motion for a temporary injunction to restrain the merger was denied. The merger was completed on or about the same day that the appealed order was entered, and the defendants claimed that the appeal was moot because the only act sought to be enjoined had been accomplished, and, therefore, no relief could be granted to the stockholders. The merger was completed during the pendency of an action to enjoin it, and was, therefore, subject to the power inherent in a court of equity to restore the status quo. If this were an appeal on the merits, the cause would not be moot. As the court has jurisdiction of the parties and the acquiring corporation has possession and control of the assets of the acquired corporation, it would have jurisdiction to compel restoration. The circumstances of the case indicated that it might be a proper case for a mandatory injunction to restore the status quo. The court's mandatory power is rendered no less effective by the fact that the appeal was taken from an interlocutory order. Also, the court rejected the contention that the stockholders lacked the capacity to prosecute the appeal because the stockholders forfeited whatever rights they had as stockholders of the acquired corporation when they filed a written demand with the merged corporate entity for payment of the full value of their shares in the acquired corporation. Under the applicable state corporation laws and rulings, the failure to demand payment for their shares would constitute a consent to the merger.

See Acquisitions of Stock or Assets, Vol. 1, ¶ 4208; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9024, 9026.15, 9027.

For the plaintiff-appellant: Harold M. Keele, Don M. Peebles, and H. O. Crews, Chicago, Ill.

For the defendants-appellees: John B. Martineau and Don H. Reuben, Chicago, Ill.; and Clayton J. Barber and Alton G. Hall, Springfield, Ill.

Before Duffy, Chief Judge, and Lindley, Circuit Judge.

[Merger]

LINDLEY, Circuit Judge [In full text]: Defendants move to dismiss the appeal from an order denying the motion of plaintiffs, for a temporary injunction which they sought as stockholders of defendant Domestic Finance Corporation, to restrain a proposed merger of that Company with defendant American Investment Company of Illinois. Both are incorporated under the laws of Delaware. The complaint averred that American had, through divers means, obtained some 80 per cent of the common stock of Domestic thereby gaining control; that American had utilized its stock to effectuate election of a board of directors of Domestic composed of officers of American, who were serving as Domestic's officers, and that American, through its control, had so operated Domestic as to reduce its effective position as a competitor of American in various cities and states where both corporations transact business. On August 17, 1955, Domestic mailed to its stockholders a notice of a special meeting to be held September 15, 1955, to consider and vote on a proposed merger of the two corporations. The complaint herein was filed September 7, 1955, charging that the merger would constitute a violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, in that its effect would be to lessen substantially competition in commerce. It was further averred that Domestic would be seriously injured by the proposed action.

[Relief Sought]

The complaint prayed a preliminary injunction restraining American from voting its Domestic stock in favor of the merger at the September 15 meeting or at any other time, and that, after hearing on the merits, the temporary injunction be made final, and a decree entered directing American to divest itself of the Domestic stock it owns and granting such other and further relief as to the court might seem just.

A second count repeated all allegations of count one and averred that Domestic had suffered injury in the amount of $2,000,000 by reason of American's allegedly illegal acts in exercising control of the former, and prayed treble damages in the amount of $6,000,000, costs and attorneys' fees.

[Trial Court Ruling]

On September 14, at a hearing on the motion for a preliminary injunction, the court ordered it continued to September 20 to permit filing of briefs. During the course of the September 14 hearing, the parties reached a "standstill" agreement which had the effect, in part, of amending the prayer for relief. At that time plaintiffs asserted that they had no objection to a vote being taken the following day in accord with the August 17 notice, if defendants would agree to take no further action to implement the merger until the court had ruled on the application for injunctive relief. Thus, their prayer for relief was changed to a request for an order restraining implementation of the proposed merger during the pendency of the cause.

On September 20, the court denied the motion for a temporary injunction. This appeal followed. On or about the same date, defendants completed the merger by filing certificates of approval with the Secretary of State of Delaware. Plaintiffs, on or about December 1, 1955, filed a supplemental complaint which alleged that the merger had been implemented as aforesaid, and prayed additional relief.

[Mootness]

The several grounds on which defendants rely for dismissal are particularized herein as each is considered. It is first urged that the cause is moot and that, accordingly, the appeal should be dismissed. The argument on this point, in essence, is that the appeal is taken from an interlocutory order denying plaintiffs' prayer for a temporary injunction restraining implementation of the merger; that the merger has been completed under the controlling provisions of Delaware law, and that, inasmuch as the only act sought to be restrained has been accomplished since the judgment was entered, no relief can be granted plaintiffs.

This argument must be examined in the light of the inherent power of a court of equity to afford mandatory relief. As stated in Porter v. Lee, 328 U. S. 346, at 351, "where a defendant with notice of an injunction proceeding completes the acts sought to be enjoined the court may by mandatory injunction restore the status quo." Cf. Jones v. Securities & Exchange Commission, 298 U. S. 1, 17-18. In Turney v. Shriver, 269 Ill. 164, 109 N. E. 708, the rule is framed thus:

> "Where a bill for an injunction has been filed, and the court has acquired jurisdiction of both the person and the subject matter of the suit, and the defendant does any act which the bill seeks to enjoin, such party acts at his peril and subject to the power of the court to compel a restoration of the status, or to grant such other relief as may be proper under the particular circumstances of the case." 269 Ill. at 172, 109 N. E. at 711.

This mandatory power is a useful tool frequently employed by equity courts in conjunction with a final decision on the merits. Eg., Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Northside Belt Ry. Co., 276 U. S. 475; Welton v. Forty East Oak Street Bldg. Corp., 70 F. 2d 377, cert. denied Chicago Title & Trust Co. v. Welton, 293 U. S. 590 (C. C. A. 7); Turney v. Shriver, supra; New Haven Clock Co. v. Kochersperger, 175 Ill. 383, 51 N. E. 629; Konig v. Mayor, etc. of Baltimore, 95 A. 478 (Md.); Ives v. Edison, 83 N. W. 120 (Mich.).

Applying these decisions we may formulate the question for determination where, as here, a cause for injunctive relief is met by a contention of mootness because the status of the parties and of their relationship to the subject matter has changed. The decisive issue is whether the subject matter may yet be reached by the mandatory power of equity and the status quo restored. If so, the cause is not moot. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Northside Belt Ry. Co., supra; Welton v. Forty East Oak Street Bldg. Corp., supra; Turney v. Shriver, supra; New Haven Clock Co. v. Kochersperger, supra; Ives v. Edison, supra. And even where the subject matter has been so completely destroyed as to preclude restoration of the status quo, the court still has jurisdiction to grant incidental relief and the cause is not moot. Barrett v. Denver Tramways Corp., 146 F. 2d 701 (C. C. A. 3); United States v. Bates Valve Bag Corp., 39 F. 2d 162.

Were this an appeal on the merits, therefore, clearly the cause would not be moot. As the court has jurisdiction of the parties and American has possession and control of the assets of Domestic, we would have jurisdiction to compel restoration, if ultimately we should determine that the circumstances of the case require that result.

[Appeal from Interlocutory Order]

And we must conclude, we believe, that our mandatory power is rendered no less effective by the fact that the appeal is taken from an interlocutory order. In Jones v. Securities & Exchange Commission, 298 U. S. 1, the Court was faced with the question of the effect of a temporary stop-order against a securities registration statement on actions done pursuant to the statement while a hearing on a restraint proceeding was pending. The court said the proceeding was analogous to a suit for an injunction and held that any action taken by petitioner was subject to a restoration of the status quo, saying, 298 U. S. at pages 17-18: "The conclusion to be drawn from all the cases is that after a defendant has been notified of the pendency of a suit seeking an injunction against him, even though a temporary injunction be not granted, he acts at his peril and subject to the power of the court to restore the status, wholly irrespective of the merits as they may be ultimately decided."

"All the cases" to which the court referred included the leading cases of Daniel v. Ferguson, L. R. (1891) 2 Ch. 27, and Von Joel v. Hornsey, L. R. (1895) 2 Ch. 774. In Daniel, defendant, after notice of a motion for a temporary injunction forbidding construction of a building, hurried the work to near completion before the injunction could be entered. Without considering the merits of the case, the court entered a mandatory injunction to restore the status quo until the action could be finally decided. Likewise in Von Joel, the court, without regard to the ultimate rights of the parties, by mandatory injunction, ordered a building to be pulled down, it appearing that defendant had successfully dodged service of summons and had rushed the structure to completion after notice that plaintiff had filed a bill for an injunction.

State courts have frequently applied the rule. Clark v. Martin, 49 Pa. 289, 298-299; Easton Passenger Ry. Co. v. Easton, 133 Pa. 505, 19 A. 486; Cooke v. Boynton, 135 Pa. 102, 19 A. 944; Whitman v. Fayette Fuel Gas Co., 139 Pa. 492, 20 A. 1062; Meigs v. Milligan, 177 Pa. 66, 35 A. 600. In Easton, the court reinstated a dissolved preliminary injunction to restore the status quo, it appearing that while the proceeding was pending the City of Easton had forcibly removed certain streetcar rails laid by plaintiff. In Boynton it was sought to enjoin defendant from interfering with a tramway used by plaintiff. After notice of the action, defendant demolished the structure minutes before a preliminary injunction was served on him. Plaintiff appealed from an order dissolving the injunction as moot. The court reversed, reinstating the preliminary injunction. And in Whitman, plaintiff's action for injunctive relief to restrain defendant from shutting off the gas flow to plaintiff's factory was dismissed on defendant's agreement not to interfere with plaintiff's gas supply. After a year had elapsed, defendant, without warning, shut off the gas. Plaintiff then filed a complaint for a temporary injunction which was dismissed on the ground that the act sought to be enjoined had already been committed. This judgment was reversed, the court entering a mandatory interlocutory injunction to restore the status quo as of the date when the gas supply had been turned off. It should be observed that the court issued the injunction in each of these cases without considering the ultimate rights of the parties in the controversy. Cf. Turney v. Shriver, 269 Ill. 164, 109 N. E. 708, 711; Fredericks v. Huber, 180 Pa. 572, 37 A. 90, 91.

The last case we shall mention is Ives v. Edison, 83 N. W. 120 (Mich.) which bears a close analogy to the situation here. There plaintiff owned an easement in a stairway located on the property of defendant's lessor. Defendant sought permission to remove the stairway and replace it with a different type in a different location. Consent was denied, and, on defendant's threat to proceed with the project without consent, plaintiff filed suit to enjoin the removal. The bill was dismissed and plaintiff appealed. While the review was pending, defendant tore down the old stairway and erected a new one. The court entered a mandatory injunction commanding restoration of the stairway, saying 83 N. W. at page 122:

> "While the case was awaiting a final determination, the defendant saw fit to ignore the rights of the complainant, and to ignore the legal proceeding, and proceeded to remove the stairway and to substitute another in the place of it. To accomplish this wrong has cost the defendant a large sum of money. To restore the easement * * * will cost another large sum * * *, the aggregate of which sums is so large that it is now said it will be entirely disproportionate to the injury done the complainant, and for that reason the court should not grant relief. * * * If this doctrine is to be sanctioned, the person engaged in large enterprises may seize upon rights of less magnitude than his own, and, if an appeal is made to the law for protection, he may ignore the right of the injured and the pendency of the legal proceeding; and if he will put money enough into the new enterprise before a final decree is entered, so that it will cost him much more to restore the right he has wrongfully taken than a jury may regard the right as worth, he may prevent the entering of any decree whatever against himself, and may mulct the person who has appealed to the courts to protect his rights, in costs. This does not appeal to our sense of justice."

The chronology of the circumstances involved in the case at bar indicates that this may be a proper case for a mandatory injunction to restore the status quo. The order denying the temporary injunction was subject to plaintiffs' right to perfect a timely appeal. This they have done. It now appears that defendants completed the merger against which the injunction was sought on, or about, the same day the appealed order was entered. We have jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject matter, i. e., the assets of Domestic, which are in the possession and control of American as the surviving corporation; and we have the power to compel a restoration should our ultimate determination be that the circumstances of the case require that result. The appeal, therefore, is not moot.

[Cases Distinguished]

The cases upon which defendants rely are inapposite. In each it appears either that the controversy had been finally settled while the appeal was pending, e. g., Amalgamated Ass'n, Etc. v. Wisconsin Board, 340 U. S. 416; St. Pierre v. United States, 319 U. S. 41; Harris v. Texas & P. Ry. Co., 196 F. 2d 88 (C. A. 7); Selected Products Corp. v. Humphreys, 86 F. 2d 821 (C. C. A. 7); or that no injunctive relief had been sought in the trial court and the subject matter in controversy had been sold to a stranger pursuant to a court order while an appeal therefrom was pending, Taylor v. Austrian, 154 F. 2d 107 (C. C. A. 4). The only cases which fall without those categories are otherwise distinguishable on their facts. In Johnson-Kennedy Radio Corp. v. Chicago Bears Football Club, 97 F. 2d 223 (C. C. A. 7), we dismissed an appeal as moot when it appeared that the injunction from which the appeal was taken affected only a single football game which had already been played and had assumed its niche in sports history. The decision in Wingert v. Kieffer, 29 F. 2d 59 (C. C. A. 4), rests on a unique set of circumstances not parallel to those presented here. In a bankruptcy proceeding, appellant had obtained an order restraining the receivers from selling certain securities held by a bank as pledgee. Notwithstanding this order, the lienor sold the securities to a stranger. A contempt proceeding was then instituted against the pledgee. A hearing was had, and an order entered dismissing the contempt proceeding and dissolving the restraining order. On appeal, the court held that, inasmuch as the proceeding was one for criminal contempt, the order of exoneration was not reviewable. Then, faced with the lower court's determination that the sale had been effected and title to the securities conveyed to a stranger without constituting a violation of the injunction, the court held that, since the sale had been completed, there was no subject matter which could be reached by its decree, and that the question as to whether the order was properly dissolved had become moot. Obviously, the determinative question was the contempt issue, which the lower court had finally resolved adversely to appellants' contentions, holding, in effect, that a circumvention of its injunction was not a violation of that order.

[Capacity to Prosecute Appeal]

As a second ground for dismissal defendants urge that plaintiffs lack the capacity to prosecute the appeal. They argue that the challenged merger is now an established fact which can be undone only by a dissolution proceeding brought by the United States. Alternatively, they assert that plaintiffs have relinquished their position as shareholders of Domestic by filing a written demand with the merged corporate entity for payment of the full value of their shares in Domestic, and have, as a result, forfeited whatever rights they may have had as stockholders of Domestic.

When defendants' principal contention is placed in its proper perspective, we think it apparent that it is without merit. We are not concerned with an attack by private persons on a merger of two corporations after the merged status has been attained; we express no opinion as to whether persons other than the United States may prosecute an action for dissolution in the assumed case. A statement of the question before us must be predicated on the circumstances of this case, namely, that the merger was achieved during the pendency of an action to enjoin it, and is, therefore subject to the power inherent in a court of equity to restore the status quo. In other words, plaintiffs' competence to prosecute this appeal must be tested in the light of the status which obtained when their action was filed, i. e., "the last actual, peaceable, noncontested status which preceded the pending controversy." Fredericks v. Huber, 37 A. 90, 91 (Pa.).

[Stockholders' Derivative Suit]

With this back-ground comment the question before us is reduced to an inquiry as to whether a stockholders' derivative suit will lie under Section 7 of the Clayton Act. We frame our answer to that question on the teachings contained in a recent opinion by the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit in Fanchon & Marco, Inc. v. Paramount Pictures, Inc. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,452], 202 F. 2d 731, which involved an appeal from a judgment dismissing a stockholders' derivative, antitrust suit for treble damages and injunctive relief. The court held that the action would lie and reversed the judgment of dismissal, saying, 202 F. 2d at page 734:

> "Now there does not seem real doubt but that an antitrust derivative suit will lie; indeed, that seems to follow from the nature of such suits. '* * * Equity * * * traditionally entertains the derivative or secondary action by which a single stockholder may sue in the corporation's right when he shows that the corporation on proper demand has refused to pursue a remedy, or show facts that demonstrate the futility of such a request. * * * The cause of action which such a plaintiff brings before the court is not his own but the corporation's. * * *' Mr. Justice Jackson in Koster v. (American) Lumbermen's Mutual Casualty Co., 330 U. S. 518, 522, 67 S. Ct. 828, 91 L. Ed. 1067."

After discussing the applicable authorities, the court continued, at page 735:

> "There is an occasional flat statement * * * that no derivative antitrust suit will lie, as in Kalmanash v. Smith [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,296], 291 N. Y. 142, 157, 51 N. E. 2d 681, 688; but, as indicated, the precedents actually look the other way and we can see no reason for such a view."

We agree with this reasoning and hold that plaintiffs were competent parties when this suit was brought and have remained so throughout pendency of the litigation.

[Demand for Payment]

Defendants' alternative argument is likewise unconvincing. After the certificate of merger had been filed with the Delaware authorities, each plaintiff submitted a written request to the merged corporation for payment of the full value of Domestic shares held by him. Could this be construed as voluntary action, defendants' assertion that they thereby elected to forfeit the status of stockholders might be persuasive. However, when that argument is considered in the light of the applicable Delaware statutes and decisions, defendants are in the position of asserting that "we, by actions committed while your case was pending, have placed you in a position where you must elect to demand payment for the value of your holdings and surrender your stock or else remain silent, in which case your silence will constitute your consent to the merger." That argument does not appeal to the conscience of a court of equity. Section 262 of Title 8 of the Delaware Code of 1953 provides that a dissenting stockholder may, "within 20 days after the mailing of the notice" of merger, demand payment for his stock. "[D]issenting stockholders are thus put to an election by the statute." Cole v. National Cash Credit Ass'n, 18 Del. Ch. 47, 56, 156 A. 183, 187, and failure to demand payment for their shares constitutes consent to the merger. Federal United Corp. v. Havender, 24 Del. Ch. 318, 11 A. 2d 331, at 343; Porges v. Vadsco Sales Corp., 32 A. 2d 148, at 150 (Del. Ch.); Cole v. National Cash Credit Ass'n, supra. Plaintiffs' action in this respect is not inconsistent with their diligent prosecution of this appeal and their complaint, which is still pending. We shall not permit defendants to enforce upon plaintiffs the task of anticipating the ultimate decision in their suit at their peril. They were entitled to take any action necessary to protect their rights, regardless of the final outcome of this litigation.

The motion to dismiss is denied.

[¶ 68,818] Bertha Building Corporation v. National Theatres Corporation.

Gumbiner Theatrical Enterprises, Inc. v. National Theatres Corporation.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. October Term, 1956. Nos. 329 and 330, respectively. Docket Nos. 24253 and 24254, respectively. Argued May 9, 1957. Decided September 10, 1957.

Appeals from two judgments of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York, CLARENCE G. GALSTON, Judge, dismissing the plaintiffs' complaints in actions of treble damages for violation of the Sherman Act, § 1-33 of Title 15, U. S. Code, on an opinion reported at [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,308] 140 F. Supp. 909. Reversed and remanded.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Defenses—Statute of Limitations—State Tolling Provision—Factual Issues—Right to Jury Trial.—Where a trial court held that a California three-year statute of limitations was applicable to treble damage actions brought in a Federal District Court in New York by reason of a New York borrowing provision, and that the running of the California statute of limitations was not tolled by a California statute which prevents the running of a statute of limitations against a plaintiff who is unable to present his cause of action in California because the defendant is not amenable to process of the California courts, the court's dismissal of the treble damage actions on the grounds that the California statute of limitations barred the actions and that the California tolling provision was not applicable because the defendant was amenable to suit in California under Section 12 of the Clayton Act was reversed because a jury rather than the trial court should have decided whether or not the defendant was amenable to suit in California. If venue were the issue in the actions, no jury question would have been presented. However, the critical issue in the actions was whether or not the California statute barred the actions, although this issue depended upon the question of whether or not the defendant was amenable to suit in California. The defendant's affirmative defense based on the California statute tendered genuine issues of fact which, as a matter of right, were triable by a jury.

Also, the dismissal could not be sustained as one properly ordered on the pleadings. Apparently, the trial court thought that proof that the defendant was a member of an alleged conspiracy which was injuring the plaintiffs in California would necessarily mean that the defendant was transacting business in California within the meaning of Section 12 of the Clayton Act, and, therefore, was entitled to prevail in its defense of the statute of limitations. However, co-conspirators "as such" are not agents for the purposes of venue.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9008.210, 9010, 9010.100, 9014.

For the appellants: Boris Kostelanetz (Corcoran, Kostelanetz & Gladstone, Arthur Karger, Theodore E. Gladstone, and Francis J. Mulderig, on the brief), New York, N. Y.

For the appellee: Frederick W. R. Pride (Dwight, Royall, Harris, Koegel & Caskey, Charles F. Young, and Stanley Godofsky, on the brief), New York, N. Y.

Reversing a decision of the U. S. District Court, Eastern District of New York, 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,308; for prior opinions of the Court, see 1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,897 and 67,793, and 1952 Trade Cases ¶ 67,271.

Before: HAND, CHASE and HINCKS, Circuit Judges.

[Issue on Appeal]

HINCKS, Circuit Judge [In full text]: These are appeals by the plaintiffs from judgments of Judge Galston, dismissing the complaints in two actions to recover treble damages under the Sherman Act. The only question presented is whether the actions were barred by the Statute of Limitations. In that connection, the crucial question is this: Was it proper for the judge instead of a jury to decide whether the defendant could have been sued in the Southern District of California between July 20, 1935 and July 20, 1938? This is critical because upon it depends the question whether the actions were barred by the Statute of Limitations when they were commenced in the Eastern District of New York on September 5, 1951; and why this is true appears from the following facts.

[Applicable Laws]

The Sherman Act, even after its amendment by the Clayton Act in 1914, deals with the Statute of Limitations only in § 5 of the second Act, which provides that the period during which a suit in equity, brought by the United States, shall be pending shall toll the running of the statute as to "every private right of action * * * based * * * on matter complained of in said suit." Concededly such a suit was pending from July 20, 1938, until September 5, 1951, when these actions were begun. Except for this the law of New York controlled, and § 48(2) of the Civil Practice Act of that state fixes six years as the period of limitation for an action "to recover upon a liability created by statute." Were this the only relevant section, the action of Gumbiner Co., in which the alleged damages were all suffered before Dec. 8, 1931, would have been barred in spite of § 5 of the Clayton Act, but the action of the Bertha Building Corporation in which the damages did not end before July 4, 1935, would not have been. However, § 13 of the New York Civil Practice Act provides that when a claim "arises outside this state an action cannot be brought in this state to enforce" it "after the expiration of the time limited" by the law of the state where the claim arose, and since the claims at bar arose in California, the law of that state controls: i.e., § 351 of the California Code of Civil Procedure. This provides that, if the obligor of a liability is "out of the state" when it "accrues * * * the time of his absence is not part of the time limited for the commencement of the action." It is the defendant's position that it was not "out of the state" during the three years (the period of limitation in California), before July 20, 1938, because during all that time the plaintiffs could have sued it in the Southern District of California. If this was an issue properly tried to a judge, instead of to a jury, we all agree that Judge Galston's findings were not "clearly erroneous," so that at long last the outcome turns upon the answer to the crucial question posed in the opening paragraph of this opinion.

[Jury Question]

If the issue were one of whether the venue in each, or either, of the instant suits was proper, we should agree that no jury question was presented; for it is clear that a judge may take that issue from a jury when it arises at a trial and decide it himself just as he might have done had it been raised before trial. But though decision as to whether these suits are barred by the statute depends upon whether National could have been sued by these plaintiffs in California before the California statute of limitations had run, and so comes down to a question of venue in respect to each of such supposititious suits, the critical issue in the instant actions remains whether the statute bars the suits. That issue is not to be treated as merely one of venue. A determination of this defense has a reach and a finality not inhering in any decision as to venue. For if the defense of the statutory bar is sustained, the resulting judgment of dismissal operates as a final adjudication of the merits of the controversy: a decision as to venue, however, of course leaves the plaintiff free thereafter to seek an adjudication on the merits of his claim. F. R. C. P. 41(b).

Inherent in that issue is the resolution of disputed questions of fact involving decision as to the credibility of witnesses and the need to weigh the evidence of National to the effect that it was doing business in the Southern District of California, now that it is to its advantage to take such a position, against its repeated allegations to the contrary in prior suits brought against it when it was to its advantage to take a stand diametrically opposed to what it is now attempting to prove. And it should not be forgotten that decision must be made in the light of fact findings as to many matters peculiarly within the knowledge of those in charge of the affairs of National during the critical period; and as to many occurrences which may seem to have chameleonic attributes when interpreted, or explained.

[Burden of Proof]

The burden is, of course, on National to establish its affirmative defense of the limitation statute. Pieczonka v. Pullman Co., 2 Cir., 102 F. 2d 432. And when the plaintiff has made out a prima facie case of absence from the jurisdiction the burden is on the defendant to show that such absence has not tolled the running of the statute. Banister v. Solomon, 2 Cir., 126 F. 2d 740.

[Right to Jury Trial]

Antitrust suits like these are triable as of right by jury if a party demands one. Ring v. Spina, 2 Cir. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,224], 166 F. 2d 546. And if National's affirmative defense based on the statute of limitations tendered genuine issues of fact, they were also as of right triable by jury. Jelliffe v. Thaw, 2 Cir., 67 F. 2d 880; Chambliss v. Simmons, 5 Cir., 165 Fed. 419. Applicable, to be sure, is the rule that when the evidence is so one-sided that reasonable men would not differ as to the facts proved, the judge may take the issue from the jury, but we do not regard the evidence in this record in that category even without the admissions of National. However that may be, its admissions that it did no business in California and had no agents there during the relevant period should, we think, make it perfectly clear that there were genuine issues of fact which could not properly be taken from the jury: that it was erroneous to refer such issues to Judge Galston for trial without a jury.

[Dismissal on Pleadings]

We would hold further that the dismissal below cannot be sustained as one properly ordered on the pleadings. This was an alternative ground on which the order appealed from was based.

Apparently Judge Galston thought that proof that National prior to 1938 was a member of a conspiracy which was injuring the plaintiffs within California (proof essential to a recovery) would necessarily mean that National was "transacting business" in California within the meaning of § 12 of the Clayton Act and hence was entitled to prevail in its defense of the statute of limitations. In other words, he apparently thought that a fact essential to the proof of the claim also proved a defense to the claim. That analysis has indeed a superficial plausibility.

Admittedly, it is hard to see how a finding that National was not transacting business in California (without such a finding the plaintiffs cannot escape the defense of the statute) can square with a finding that National was part of a conspiracy which caused injury to the plaintiffs in California (without which no recovery can be had on the complaint). However, the apparent conflict between those findings can perhaps be solved by ascertaining which of the numerous alleged co-conspirators are proven to be such, if any, and the relationship which exists between each of them and the plaintiffs. Not until this is done, do the cases interpreting § 12 of the Clayton Act [15 U. S. C. A. § 22] become relevant. The most recent Supreme Court discussion of this problem occurs in dictum in Bankers Life & Casualty Co. v. Holland [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,626], 346 U. S. 379, where Justice Frankfurter dissenting on another point observes that co-conspirators "as such" are not "agents" for purposes of venue.

We cannot bring ourselves to accept the suggestion in Giusti v. Pyrotechnic Industries, 9 Cir. [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,504], 156 F. 2d 351, that because of the presence within the jurisdiction of one co-conspirator all foreign corporations which are alleged to be co-conspirators are amenable to process. We think such doctrine inherently unsound and in conflict with the later pronouncement in Bankers Life, supra. The best discussion of the problem is in Independent Productions Corporation v. Loew's Inc. (S. D. N. Y. 1957) [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,615], 148 F. Supp. 460. We agree fully with the rationale and holding of Judge McGohey's opinion in that case. Thus it is conceivable that the proofs may be such that a finding that National had no agents in California and acting independently had transacted no business there, and thus has not sustained its statutory defense, is not necessarily in conflict with a finding that it conspired with others to cause injury to the plaintiffs in California. The validity of a plaintiff's verdict, if one shall be returned, cannot be assessed until all the evidence is in.

[Reversed]

Reversed and remanded for a jury trial of the issue raised by the defendant's plea.

[Dissenting Opinion]

HAND, Circuit Judge (dissenting): If these plaintiffs had sued the defendant within the period from July 20, 1935 and July 20, 1938, and the defendant had moved to dismiss the actions, as it did move on several other occasions, although the judge who heard the motion might have himself decided all issues of fact, he would have been free in his discretion to refer them to a jury, either upon a trial of that issue alone, or of the whole case. Rule 12(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides that among the defenses that a defendant may raise by motion is "improper venue," and Rule 43(c) provides that on any motion the court may hear the matter on affidavits, or "may direct that the matter be heard wholly or partly on oral testimony or depositions"; and there can be no doubt that this provision is constitutional. In a case depending upon the party's residence, the Supreme Court said: "* * * while the court might have submitted the question to the jury, it was not bound to do so, the parties having adduced their testimony, pro and con, it was the privilege of the court, if it saw fit, to dispose of the issue upon the testimony which was fully heard upon that subject." Gilbert v. David, 235 U. S. 561, 568. Earlier in Wetmore v. Rymer, 169 U. S. 115, 121, where jurisdiction depended upon the amount in controversy, it said: "* * * it would appear to have been the intention of Congress to leave the mode of raising and trying such issues to the discretion of the trial judge." See also Lehigh Valley Coal Co. v. Washko, 231 Fed. 42, 46 (C. C. A. 2). However, although the judge in an action during the critical period would have been free to dispense with a jury, I do not see how we can say that he would have done so, and since the defendant has the burden of proof on the issue of the statute of limitations, it failed to prove that the issue whether the defendant was "transacting business" in California would have been tried to a judge. I agree, therefore, with my brothers that Judge Rayfiel's order was wrong. Hence it follows that, if on the evidence before Judge Galston, a jury in an action brought in California might have found that the defendant had not "transacted business" in that state, the plaintiffs at bar were entitled to a verdict.

However, it seems to me that as on the evidence here at bar Judge Galston would have been bound to direct a verdict for the defendant if the case had been tried to a jury, Judge Rayfiel's error is immaterial. In short, I think that the defendant proved beyond dispute that it had been "transacting business" in California throughout the critical period. It will be necessary as a preliminary to deal with the plaintiff's agreement that, regardless of whether the defendant had in fact been "transacting business," its denials that it had been in at least ten actions brought against it in both state and federal courts constituted a "judicial estoppel" against its present contradictory position. It is of course true that upon the trial in the actions at bar any statements made by the defendant in its pleadings and affidavits in other actions were competent evidence in favor of the plaintiffs; but I can find no warrant for the theory that they created a "judicial estoppel," except suggestions in one or two law reviews. Moreover, since such a doctrine is plainly contary to the underlying basis of the whole doctrine of estoppel by judgment it is plainly without foundation. Judgment by estoppel is not designed as a moral sanction against inconsistency: it does not visit penalties upon those who take one position today and deny it tomorrow; it is designed only to prevent a party who has, or has not, prevailed upon an issue in an earlier action to vex the same antagonist with the same dispute in a later one. The plaintiffs cite Houghton v. Thomas, 220 App. Div. 415, to the contrary, but Mack, the party against whom the estoppel there prevailed, although not a party to the earlier action, had been the attorney of one of the parties, which the court held to be the equivalent—itself a very doubtful extension of the doctrine.

The only issue therefore is whether the evidence before Judge Galston was in enough conflict to entitle the plaintiffs to a trial by jury. That makes it necessary to decide what § 12 of the Anti-Trust Act means by "transacting business." Section 7 had allowed an action to be brought in any district in which the "defendant resides or is found" and in the case of corporations this became "often an insuperable obstacle to" any remedy. Eastman Kodak Co. v. Southern Photo Materials Co., 273 U. S. 359, 374. The Supreme Court there held that in § 12 Congress added the clause, "transacts business," in order to assist the enforcement of the act by ridding actions of the web of refined decisions that had been woven about the word "found." It made no attempt, however, to state in general terms what constituted "transacting business" beyond saying (p. 373), that a corporation did so in any district "if in fact, in the ordinary and usual sense, it 'transacts business' therein of any substantial character." However, the Court discussed the issue at length in United States v. Scophony Corporation, [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,238], 333 U. S. 795, 807, 808. In that case the defendant, a foreign corporation, had, as here, "transacted business" by means of a subsidiary corporation whose conduct it reserved the right to supervise and regulate. It is true that the issue was whether that made the defendant "found" within the district where it was sued, but since the Court held that it did, a fortiori, it was a ruling that the defendant had been "transacting business" there. Therefore, it seems to me that we can, and indeed must, take what was said as an authoritative gloss upon §12. The Court declared that the statute meant the "practical everyday business or commercial concept of doing or carrying on business 'of any substantial character' "; and that the amendment had substituted "practical business conceptions" in place of "the previous hair-splitting legal technicalities encrusted upon the 'found'—'present'—'carrying-on-business' sequence."

Judge Galston made very detailed findings that are too long and too many, to quote, but I append numbers 10, 11 and 12, because these succinctly state the facts that appear to me to be controlling. The plaintiffs object that these improperly imputed to the defendant such of the described activities as took place after the organization of a corporation, which the findings speak of as "Agency":—a wholly owned subsidiary whose officers were "in the main" the defendant's officers. I rely upon the following language in United States v. Scophony Co., supra (pp. 814, 815), which seems to me to make "Agency's" business "business transacted" by the defendant: "The contracts created controls in Scophony, and in the American interests as well, which taken in conjunction with the stock controls called for continuing exercise of supervision over and intervention in American Scophony's affairs. We need not decide whether, in view of the agreements' continuing and persuasive effects, they could be considered as sufficing in themselves to make Scophony 'found' within the New York district. Whether so or not, they set the pattern for a regular and continuing program of patent exploitation requiring, as we have said, Scophony's constant supervision and intervention."

I cannot see why this language does not apply almost literally, mutatis mutandis, to the contract of December 2, 1935, between the defendant and "Agency" along with which the defendant assigned to "Agency" the contract of Skouras Brothers of June 13. Of course it is true that a jury might not have believed the testimony offered by the defendant as to what was done under these contracts, although they did not put in any evidence to contradict it. Moreover, there might be a difficulty, if there had been no evidence that "Agency" had ever acted under the contract. However, that the plaintiffs may not assert, for it would cut the ground from under the complaints, which are based upon acts of the defendant after the contracts had been made. Hence, if the jury disbelieved the testimony of the defendant's witnesses as to what they had done, they must assume that other persons committed the wrongs charged in the complaints, and yet that they did not do so in performance of the contract with "Agency," for that contract, if once in effect, set up a "program" of "constant supervision and intervention"; and made the defendant "transact business." Surely we are not warranted in treating seriously such a web of dialectical fantasy.

The only evidence that the plaintiffs produced was the defendant's repeated assertions that it did not do any business in California, and had no agents there. Although, as I have said, these were indeed admissible against it, they amounted to no more than statements of the legal result of whatever the defendant had done, and they raised no issue as to the authority vested in the Skouras Brothers by the contract of June 13, 1935, and in "Agency" thereafter. Any conduct in California in performance of those contracts ipso facto made the defendant "transact business" in that state, no matter how often the defendant chose to deny that that had been the legal effect of what was done. I need not therefore answer the argument that all parties to a conspiracy are not mutual agents in the sense that what any one of them does is a "transaction of business" of all the rest.

In conclusion it seems to me worth while to observe that, although the result of my brothers' reasoning will indeed require the defendant to defend on the merits actions arising under the Anti-Trust Acts, toward which the Supreme Court, especially of late, has shown particular favor, it does so at the expense of a precedent of the greatest value to large corporations doing a wide interstate business. I cannot see why, if what we are deciding is right, a corporation by doing its local business through subsidiary corporations over whom it retains supervisory control, will not compel those whom it may damage to sue in some district where it can be "found," as distinct from any one in which it "transacts business." If so, the whole purpose of the amendment to § 12 will be defeated.

Appendix

"10. National Agency Corporation, a wholly-owned subsidiary of National, is a Delaware corporation which was organized in 1935. The name of this company was changed to National Theatres Amusement Co., Inc., and it was referred to at the trial by both names. It is referred to in these findings as 'Agency.' Agency was organized to render certain services and perform certain activities for National, which prior to the organization of Agency had been rendered and performed by National. Agency qualified to do business in New York in February, 1936, and in California in August, 1942. The same individuals were, in the main, the officers of National and of Agency. The two companies occupied the same premises.

"11. Agency entered into a contract with National on December 2, 1935, under which Agency agreed to perform extensive services for National and its subsidiaries. Under that contract Agency agreed to keep National fully informed of all matters relating to the affairs and business of National and its subsidiaries, including, with respect to the operating subsidiaries, the daily results of theatre operations, profits and losses, cash position, nature of the properties owned and changes therein and the general corporate set-up of all such subsidiaries. Agency agreed to maintain National's books of account and furnish other acccounting services such as preparation of statistical information, tax returns and similar matters. National agreed to pay Agency $3,000 per week for the services rendered to and for it. Throughout all of the period from the date of the contract in 1935 until the institution of these actions in 1951, Agency performed services for National and its subsidiaries as provided in that contract. Such services were performed in California and in New York and elsewhere.

"12. The contract of June 13, 1935, between the Skouras brothers and National was assigned to Agency on December 2, 1933. The assignment provided that National, however, retained all its rights under its contract with the Managers. The assignment contained the following provision:

'It is understood that notwithstanding such assignment to you, we retain all our rights and privileges under said contract, including, without limitation, the right to terminate the same, and that by such assignment you receive only the rights to the services of the Managers above referred to and the right to enforce performance thereof in any way not inconsistent with our rights in such connection * * *.'

"Under the employment contracts with the Skouras brothers, National paid their salaries until Agency was formed. After the organization of Agency, the fixed salaries were paid by that company pursuant to the assignment from National to Agency, but the portion of their compensation which was based upon the profits of National was paid by National. The payments made by Agency were made by it as the agent for National and for all purposes here were the same as though made directly by National."

[¶ 68,819] Eagle Lion Studios, Inc., Eagle Lion Films, Inc., PRC Productions, Inc., Chesapeake Industries, Inc. v. Loew's, Inc., RKO Theatres, Inc., and RKO Film Booking Corp.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. October Term, 1956. No. 96. Docket No. 24224. Argued November 15, 1956. Decided September 9, 1957.

Plaintiffs appeal from a judgment dismissing their action on the merits following a trial without jury before Honorable ARCHIE O. DAWSON in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Reported below [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,374] 141 F. Supp. 658. Affirmed.

Clayton and Sherman Antitrust Acts

Combinations and Conspiracies—Exclusion of Motion Pictures from Subsequent Run Theatres—Concerted Discrimination—Sufficiency of Evidence.—A trial court ruling that two motion picture theatre circuits and a film booking company did not combine and conspire to exclude companies, engaged in the production and distribution of motion pictures, from the opportunity of licensing, on a competitive basis, their feature motion pictures to the circuits' theatres, which exhibited fetaure motion pictures in the New York metropolitan area on runs subsequent to the first run, was affirmed. The companies did not offer any direct proof of a combination or conspiracy to deprive them of an equal competitive opportunity to license their films. Many of their films were licensed for exhibition in the circuits' theatres, but the companies failed to prove that the theatre circuits concertedly discriminated against the companies in the licensing of films. A decree entered in a Government antitrust action against the circuits; a comparison of the ratio of the income received by the companies from the subsequent run theatres in the New York metropolitan area to the income received nationally, as compared to the ratio of the income received by major distributors from the subsequent run theatres in the area to the income which such distributors received nationally; and other statistics did not establish the existence of a conspiracy. There was nothing in the record to support the claim that the treatment accorded any specific film distributed by the companies was dictated by any consideration other than independent business judgment. The presidents of both of the circuits denied that there was any agreement between the circuits relating to the licensing of the companies' films, and there was testimony that the poor returns on the companies' films were attributable to their quality.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.540, 2005.660.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Proof of Conspiracy—Statistical Comparisons.—A trial court correctly ruled that detailed statistics comparing film rentals earned by affiliated companies, engaged in the production and distribution of motion picture films, with those earned by certain major film distributors did not establish the existence of a conspiracy by two theatre circuits and a film booking company to exclude the companies from the opportunity of licensing, on a competitive basis, their feature motion pictures to the circuits' theatres, which exhibited feature motion pictures in the New York metropolitan area on runs subsequent to the first run. The companies had contended that if they did not receive as large a proportion of their national film rentals from the New York subsequent run theatres as did the major distributors, the difference was attributable to discrimination against their films resulting from the concerted action of the theatre circuits, who were the dominant exhibitors in the New York first subsequent run market. Nothing contained in the statistics, however, supported an inference that the theatre circuits agreed with each other to discriminate against the exhibition of the companies' films. The statistics relating to the above contention and other statistics compiled by the companies were susceptible of conflicting interpretations, helpful alike to the theatre circuits' position as well as the companies' position.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.410.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Evidence Admissible to Prove Antitrust Law Violations—Government Decree—Identity of Issues.—A trial court correctly ruled that findings of fact and conclusions of law contained in a final decree entered against two motion picture theatre circuits in a Government antitrust action did not constitute prima facie evidence of a conspiracy by the theatre circuits to exclude companies, engaged in the production and distribution of motion pictures, from the opportunity of licensing, on a competitive basis, their feature motion pictures to the circuits' theatres, which exhibited feature motion pictures in the New York metropolitan area on runs subsequent to the first run. In determining, under Section 5 of the Clayton Act, the effect of a judgment in a prior antitrust suit, it is not the court's function to consider inferences, whether reasonable or not, that might be drawn from the language of the prior judgment. In construing a prior judgment, the court in the subsequent action does not sit as a trier of fact, that is, it does not have wide license to draw inferences from the judgment and record in the prior litigation. The court is circumscribed by the relatively narrow limits of the doctrine of estoppel. It must be guided by the well-established principles of collateral estoppel. A "judgment on one cause of action is not conclusive in a subsequent action on a different cause of action as to questions of fact not actually litigated and determined in the first action." The issue in the instant suit was not "distinctly determined" in the Government litigation. The Government suit involved action directed at other theatre exhibitors, and the instant suit involved action directed at independent motion picture distributors.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9012.410.

For the appellants: James L. O'Connor (William L. McGovern, Robert L. Wright, Seymour Krieger, and Arnold, Fortas & Porter, Washington, D. C., of counsel), New York, N. Y.

For the appellees: Davis, Polk, Wardwell, Sunderland & Kiendl (S. Hazard Gillespie, Jr., Francis W. Phillips, and Robert B. Fiske, Jr., of counsel), New York, N. Y., for Loew's, Inc.; and O'Brien, Driscoll & Raftery (Edward C. Raftery, George A. Raftery, and William F. Whitman, of counsel), New York, N. Y., for RKO Theatres, Inc., and RKO Film Booking Corp.

Affirming a decision of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,374; for a prior opinion of the U. S. Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, see 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 67,957, reversing in part and affirming in part a decision of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, 1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,763.

Before: CLARK, Chief Judge, and HINCKS and WATERMAN,[1] Circuit Judges.

[Nature of Action]

WATERMAN, Circuit Judge [In full text]: The appellants, four affiliated corporations formerly engaged in the production and distribution of motion pictures, appeal from a judgment dismissing their complaint after a trial before the Court without a jury. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,374] 141 F. Supp. 658 (S. D. N. Y. 1956). The appellants had brought suit against Loew's, Inc., RKO Theares, Inc., and RKO Film Booking Corp., the appellees, to recover treble damages under the anti-trust laws, 15 U. S. C. A. §§ 1, 2, 15. These defendants, during the period in issue, were engaged in the exhibition of motion pictures. The complaint, insofar as it concerned the appellees, set forth a claim for damages for losses allegedly resulting from a conspiracy to exclude the plaintiffs during the period 1946-1950 from licensing their films on a competitive basis to the "first subsequent run" theatres of Loew's and RKO in the metropolitan area of New York City.[2]

[1] This appeal was argued before a panel composed of Chief Judge Clark and Judges Frank and Hincks. Judge Frank died before any opinion had been prepared. Thereafter Judge Waterman was substituted.

Since the facts pertinent to this litigation were set forth in detail by Judge Dawson in his comprehensive opinion below, see [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,374] 141 F. Supp. 658, we will mention only those facts necessary to the disposition of this appeal.

The plaintiffs and their predecessor organizations produced and distributed motion pictures from 1943 to 1951. During this period they also distributed the films of certain other domestic and foreign producers made either in this country or abroad. The defendants, at the times material to this action, operated motion picture theatres in metropolitan New York, which were known, respectively, as the Loew's and RKO circuits. During the years 1946 to 1950, the years involved in this suit, the Loew's circuit in the metropolitan area comprised approximately 60 "subsequent run" theatres, and the RKO circuit between 30 and 40 such theatres. The term "subsequent run" applies to all theatres in the New York area except the 40 or more "first run" theatres concentrated in the Broadway midtown area of New York City. During this period in suit there were at least 600 subsequent run theatres in metropolitan New York, as that area was defined by the pleadings. However, these theatres fell into an elaborate hierarchy of "first subsequent run," "second subsequent run," and so forth. Approximately 45 of the Loew's theatres were in the "first subsequent run" category, whereas from 31 to 36 of the RKO theatres (depending on the year in question) were so designated.

Although no findings were made below as to the total number of "first subsequent run" theatres in the New York metropolitan area, it is apparently undisputed that the defendants occupied a dominant position in the "first subsequent run" exhibition market. The evidence at trial also tended to show that this market was the crucial one in the entire New York metropolitan subsequent run exhibition field, because the rental rates, billings, and playing positions of individual films throughout their subsequent run history were substantially influenced, if not determined, by the treatment they received from the "first subsequent run" theatres.

Each of the two defendant circuits exhibited about 208 pictures a year—or approximately 4 a week. Generally the same program, comprised of a double feature, would be played simultaneously throughout the first subsequent run theatres of an entire circuit. The playing engagements were typically for the "long half" of the week (Thursday through Sunday) or for the "short half" of the week (Monday through Wednesday). An individual film could receive "top" or "equal" billing, or could be placed as the "second" feature, during either the long or short half of the week.

From 1946 to 1950, the plaintiffs distributed 195 films, which earned total gross film rentals of $39,107,800 in this country, of which $2,362,200 was received from subsequent run theatres in the New York metropolitan area. The trial court found, 141 F. Supp. at 663, that > "of the 195 pictures distributed by the plaintiffs during the period in question, the defendants exhibited 85 pictures on one or the other of its circuits in the New York metropolitan area * * * Each of the defendants exhibited certain other pictures distributed by the plaintiffs in one or more theatres amounting to less than the full circuit. Loew's played some 39 additional pictures in addition to the 50 which it played on the entire circuit. RKO exhibited in one or more of its theatres during the period in question some 55 additional pictures."

[2] The metropolitan area was defined in the complaint as "the five boroughs of greater New York City, southern portion of Westchester County and western portion of Nassau County, New York State." No part of the State of New Jersey was included.

[Trial Court Issues]

Thus the plaintiffs did not attempt to prove below, nor do they contend on appeal, that the defendants conspired to totally exclude their pictures from exhibition in the defendants' theatres. Rather, the issues in controversy were framed in a pretrial order as follows:

"1. Did the defendants combine and conspire in violation of the anti-trust laws of the United States to exclude the plaintiffs from the opportunity of licensing on a competitive basis their feature motion pictures to Loew and RKO theatres which exhibit feature motion pictures in the New York metropolitan area on runs subsequent to first run Broadway? (Emphasis added.)

"2. If so, were the plaintiffs directly damaged in their business or property as the result of the said illegal combination and conspiracy, and, if so, in what amount?"

[Ruling]

The trial court answered both questions in the negative, and, dismissing the complaint, entered judgment for the defendants. On appeal, we affirm that judgment, since we discern no error of law in the proceedings below, and we do not believe that the trial court's findings of fact were "clearly erroneous." Fed. R. Civ. P. 52(a).

[Evidence]

At trial, in order to sustain their burden of proof on both issues, the plaintiffs relied primarily upon (1) the findings of fact and conclusions of law contained in the final decree of the Paramount case, United States v. Loew's Inc. et al., Equity No. 87-273, S. D. N. Y., filed Feb. 8, 1950 [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,573], aff'd, 339 U. S. 974 (1950) (for prior history, see United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 66 F. Supp. 323 [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,470], 70 F. Supp. 53 [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,526] (1946), reversed and remanded in part, 334 U. S. 131 [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,244] (1948); 85 F. Supp. 881 [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,473] (1949)); (2) detailed statistics comparing film rentals earned by the plaintiffs during the period in question with those earned by the eight major distributors in the Paramount case; (3) the testimony of the president of one of the plaintiffs; (4) a letter written by the president of another of the plaintiffs to the president of Loew's.

[Contentions on Appeal]

On appeal, the plaintiffs urged two principal grounds for reversal: (1) that the trial court erred in its construction of the Paramount judgment; and (2) that the trial court did not properly evaluate the comparative film rental statistics.[8] We find both of these contentions without merit.

1. The Paramount Judgment

[Clayton Act]

"A government [anti-trust] suit, while primarily in the public interest, if successful, also accrues to the immediate benefit of those injured by the wrongful conduct." T. C. Theatre Corp. v. Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,500], 113 F. Supp. 265, 269 (S. D. N. Y. 1953). Under section 5 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. A. § 16,

"A final judgment or decree heretofore or hereafter rendered in any civil or criminal proceeding brought by or on behalf of the United States under the antitrust laws to the effect that a defendant has violated said laws shall be prima facie evidence against such defendant in any action or proceeding brought by any party against such defendant under said laws or by the United States under section 15a of this title, as to all matters respecting which said judgment or decree would be an estoppel as between the parties * * *"

Relying on section 5, the appellants have strenuously contended throughout this litigation that the judgment in the Paramount case constitutes prima facie evidence of a conspiracy by the appellees to deny the plaintiffs competitive access to the appellees' theatres in metropolitan New York.

[Prior Government Judgment]

The Paramount judgment embodied findings of fact and conclusions of law based on the situation in the motion picture industry as it existed in 1945. The plaintiffs argue, however, that the conditions found to exist at that time continued until 1950, the date of the final order in the Paramount case.

[8] The plaintiffs on appeal do not appear to rely to any real extent on the testimony and correspondence of their officers that was introduced at trial. Nevertheless, we shall advert briefly to that evidence later in the opinion.

As the trial court pointed out, "the primary issue in that [the Paramount] case related to the effect under the anti-trust laws of a combination between the large producers of motion pictures who also controlled, to a substantial extent, the places of exhibition of those motion pictures." The great bulk of the many findings of fact and conclusions of law contained in the final Paramount decree do not touch upon the narrow issue here at bar. See United States v. Loew's Inc. et al., Equity No. 87-273, S. D. N. Y., filed Feb. 8, 1950 [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,573], aff'd, 339 U. S. 974 (1950). The appellants direct our attention, however, to several findings and conclusions, particularly Finding No. 154(d) and Conclusion No. 16, which they contend are evidence of the alleged conspiracy set forth in their complaint. Especial emphasis is placed on the following sentence of Finding No. 154(d):[4]

> "In New York City Loew and RKO divided the neighborhood prior run product of the various defendant distributors under a continuing arrangement so that there was no competition between them in obtaining pictures."

Conclusion of Law No. 16 in the Paramount case reads as follows:

> "Loew's, Incorporated, has violated the Sherman Act by conspiring with RKO to monopolize and monopolizing the first neighborhood run in New York City, and by the dividing of that market between itself and RKO."

[Trial Court Ruling]

After examining Finding No. 154(d) and Conclusion No. 16, as well as the other portions of the Paramount record that were relied upon by plaintiffs,[5] the trial court, see 141 F. Supp. at 667, concluded that > "while the findings may perhaps constitute evidence * * * that Loew's and RKO had no competition between themselves in obtaining pictures from the defendant distributors who were parties to the Paramount case and had monopolized between themselves the first neighborhood run in New York City, the findings, standing by themselves, are certainly not evidence that there was no competition between Loew's and RKO in obtaining and distributing pictures of so-called 'independents' such as the plaintiffs in the present case."

[Appellants' Contention]

The appellants would have us believe that this was a niggardly construction of the Paramount judgment and that the only fair import of that judgment, as applied to the issue at bar, was that the plaintiffs were denied the opportunity to compete on an equal basis with the eight major distributors in the sale and licensing of their films to the defendants. Their argument appears to be: The defendants not only agreed not to compete with each other for the films of the eight major distributors, but each defendant also agreed to give preferential treatment to the films of those distributors that were allocated to it, provided that the films of those distributors met the particular defendant's minimal exhibition standards and were obtainable by it on satisfactory terms. That is, according to the appellants, the finding in Paramount of a concerted assignment by the defendants here of certain distributors necessarily implied a finding that there was an affirmative duty on the

[4] Finding No. 154(d), in its entirety, reads as follows:
"154(d). In New York City Loew and RKO divided the neighborhood prior run products of the various defendant distributors under a continuing arrangement so that there was no competition between them in obtaining pictures. On one occasion where Paramount was having a long dispute with Loew's as to rental terms for Paramount films to be shown in Loew's New York neighborhood circuit of theatres, no attempt was made by Paramount to lease its films to RKO for exhibition in the latter's circuit, nor was any effort made by RKO to procure Paramount films as they both evidently preferred to adhere to the existing arrangement, under which Loew's circuit consistently exhibited the films of itself, Paramount, United Artists, Columbia and half of Universal, while RKO exhibited the films of itself, Fox, Warner, and half of Universal. Accordingly, the showing that 85% of Loew's theatres are in competition with theatres of other defendants is misleading and may properly be reduced by the exclusion of its New York neighborhood theatres. If this is done, it would give Loew a percentage of approximately 42% of its theatres in competition with other defendants in cities over 100,000."

[5] In addition to Finding No. 154(d) and Conclusion No. 16, the appellants call our attention to Findings No. 84, 99, 100, 127, 147(c), 156(b), and 158, and Conclusions No. 7 and 12 of the final decree in the Paramount case, Equity No. 87-273, S. D. N. Y., filed Feb. 8, 1950 [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,573], aff'd, 339 U. S. 974 (1950). We have examined these findings and conclusions, as well as the many other findings and conclusions embodied in that decree. We conclude that their relevance to the issues here in suit is even less than that of Finding No. 154(d) and Conclusion No. 16, which are discussed in detail in our opinion infra.

part of each defendant to use, whenever possible, the product of the distributors assigned to it, in addition to the negative duty not to compete for the product of those distributors that were assigned to the other defendant. The impact of such a conspiracy upon the plaintiffs would be to deny them truly competitive access to the defendants' theatres, inasmuch as their product would be purchased by each defendant only to fill marginal needs that were not satisfactorily met by the Paramount distributors assigned to it.

[Scope of Clayton Act]

The appellants contend that the construction they argue for is the only reasonable inference to be drawn from the Paramount finding and conclusion quoted above. In so doing, however, they misconceive the import and applicability of section 5. In determining, under that section, the effect of a judgment in a prior anti-trust suit it is not our function to consider inferences, whether reasonable ones or not, that might be drawn from the language of the prior judgment. Under section 5 a judgment in a prior suit is prima facie evidence "as to all matters respecting which said judgment * * * would be an estoppel as between the parties thereto * * *" (Emphasis added.) Thus, in construing a prior judgment for purposes of this statute, the court in the subsequent action does not sit as a trier of fact, i.e., it does not have wide license to draw inferences from the judgment and record in the prior litigation. Rather, the court is circumscribed by the relatively narrow limits of the doctrine of estoppel:

> "The evidentiary use which may be made under § 5 of the prior conviction of respondents is * * * to be determined by reference to the general doctrine of estoppel * * * Such estoppel extends only to questions 'distinctly put in issue and directly determined' in the criminal prosecution." Emich Motors Corp. v. General Motors Corp. [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,778], 340 U. S. 558, 568-69 (1951).

See also Partmar Corp. v. Paramount Pictures Theatres Corp. [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,674], 347 U. S. 89, 102 (1954); Theatre Enterprises, Inc. v. Paramount Film Distributing Corp. [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,640], 346 U. S. 537, 542 (1954); Paramount Film Distributing Corp. v. Village Theatre [1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,239], 228 F. 2d 721, 727 (10 Cir. 1955); Loew's, Inc. v. Cinema Amusements, Inc. [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,648], 210 F. 2d 86, 90 (10 Cir. 1954), cert. denied, 347 U. S. 976; Monticello Tobacco Co. v. American Tobacco Co. [1952 Trade Cases ¶ 67,300], 197 F. 2d 629, 631-32 (2 Cir. 1952), cert. denied, 344 U. S. 875; T. C. Theatre Corp. v. Warner Bros. Pictures [1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,500], 113 F. Supp. 265, 269-70 (S. D. N. Y. 1953).

Subsequent to the Emich decision, this court stated in Monticello Tobacco Co. v. American Tobacco Co. [1952 Trade Cases ¶ 67,300], 197 F. 2d 629, 631-32 (2 Cir. 1952) (per Judge Clark):

> "* * * whatever is crucial to the treble-damage case and is not distinctly determined in the previous government suit must be proven by direct evidence. Dipson Theatres v. Buffalo Theatres, 2 Cir. 190 F. 2d 951, 958, certiorari denied 342 U. S. 926, 72 S. Ct. 363. Section 5 does not permit a haphazard use of a criminal judgment merely for its aura of guilt, or 'to imply new wrongdoing from past wrongdoing.' Hastie, C. J., dissenting in Milgram v. Loew's, Inc., 3 Cir., 192 F. 2d 579, 595. See also Note, 65 Harv. L. Rev. 1400, 1404-1407." (Emphasis added.)

Hence, in determining the import of the Paramount judgment, we must be guided by the well-established principles of collateral estoppel. It is true that where a question of fact essential to the judgment is actually litigated and determined by a valid and final judgment, the determination is conclusive between the parties in a subsequent action on a different cause of action. But "a judgment on one cause of action is not conclusive in a subsequent action on a different cause of action as to questions of fact not actually litigated and determined in the first action." Restatement, Judgments § 68 (1942). (Emphasis added.)

[Government Decree Not Evidence]

Applying these principles to the Paramount judgment we conclude that the issue here in suit was not "distinctly determined" in the Paramount litigation. In that case the court found that these defendants had agreed not to compete with each other for the films of the eight major distributors. The aim, and apparent effect, of that conspiracy was the monopolization by the defendants of the first subsequent run exhibition market in metropolitan New York, to the detriment of other theatre exhibitors in that area. Thus the court in Paramount did not address itself to the different issue now before us, i.e., whether these defendants conspired together to exclude these plaintiffs, who were independent distributors, from the opportunity of licensing their pictures on a competitive basis to the defendants' theatres in metropolitan New York.

Nor was there any finding in the Paramount case to the effect that the defendants had agreed with each other to impose upon themselves an affirmative duty to give preference to the motion pictures of those major distributors that were assigned to them, thereby foreclosing the plaintiffs from access to all but the marginal exhibition needs of the defendants. In short, we must look elsewhere if we are to find any evidence of the conspiracy that the plaintiffs here charge.

2. Comparative Film Rental Statistics

[Purpose of Statistics]

At the trial the plaintiffs relied on certain statistical data both as evidence of the conspiracy charged in their complaint and as evidence of the amount of damages allegedly suffered by them as a result of that conspiracy. On appeal, they advance these statistics for the primary purpose of showing injury; secondarily, as proof the existence of the conspiracy. We shall first consider them in the latter context, however, since it is necessary to find a conspiracy by the defendants adversely affecting these plaintiffs before we reach the question of damages. And, of course, if no conspiracy is found, all evidence admitted on the question of damage becomes of no moment.

[The Statistics]

At trial the plaintiffs introduced, as their Exhibit 10, a chart entitled "Ratio of Subsequent Run Rental from Metropolitan New York to National Film Rental Less Such Subsequent Run Rental." This chart indicated that the plaintiffs had received 6.4% of their film rentals on the 195 pictures distributed by them during the years 1946 to 1950 from subsequent run theatres in the metropolitan area of New York. The chart also showed that, on the basis of 96 "representative" pictures, the eight major distributors earned 8.9% of their film rentals from New York subsequent run theatres during the period of the alleged conspiracy.

The 96 "representative" pictures of the eight major distributors were selected by the following method: All films of each distributor for each of the years from September 1, 1946, to August 31, 1950, were put in 32 separate lists in the order of the total gross national revenue each earned. Three median rentals were then selected from each list: (1) the median rental for the entire list; (2) the median rental from the top quarter of the pictures; and (3) the median rental from the lowest quarter of the pictures.

These statistics were introduced in support of the following evidentiary hypothesis advanced by the plaintiffs: If the plaintiffs did not receive as large a proportion of their national film rentals from the New York subsequent run theatres as did the major distributors, the difference was attributable to discrimination against the plaintiffs' pictures resulting from the concerted action of the defendants, who were the dominant exhibitors in the New York first subsequent run market.[6]

Using the difference between 6.4% and 8.9% (2.5%), the plaintiffs calculated that by reason of the defendants' concerted discrimination, they lost at least $417,000 in net rentals on the films distributed by them during the four years in suit. The figure of $417,000 was arrived at by first taking 2.5% of the difference between the plaintiffs' total domestic gross film rentals and their New York neighborhood gross film rentals. The resulting sum, $919,000, was then reduced by subtracting 54.6% therefrom, an amount representing the average share of the gross rental that was passed on to the producer.[7]

The trial court made the following breakdown of the plaintiffs' statistics:

[6] It would seem that, in order for this hypothesis to have any color of validity, it must be assumed that the plaintiffs were not discriminated against elsewhere, or at least not to the extent that they were discriminated against in metropolitan New York.

[7] Apparently no allowance was made for any other expenses incident to the earning of film rentals.

EAGLE LION

No. of Pictures	Pictures with National Film Rental	Ratio of Metropolitan Sub-run Rent to National Less Metropolitan Sub-run Rent
97	Under $100,000	6.9%
51	100,000 to 200,000	5.4%
10	200,000 to 300,000	6.7%
16	300,000 to 400,000	5.9%
3	400,000 to 500,000	8.6%
18	Over 500,000	6.7%
195		6.4%

8 DISTRIBUTORS

No. of Pictures	Pictures with National Film Rental	Ratio of Metropolitan Sub-run Rent to National Less Metropolitan Sub-run Rent
7	Under $100,000	5.2%
10	100,000 to 200,000	4.9%
7	200,000 to 300,000	6.6%
6	300,000 to 400,000	5.1%
5	400,000 to 500,000	7.1%
61	Over 500,000	9.2%
96		8.9%

As is clearly revealed by this analysis, only the 18 pictures distributed by the plaintiffs that earned national rentals in excess of $500,000 drew proportionally less revenue from the New York subsequent run market than did comparable box office attractions distributed by the eight major distributors. Indeed, on films earning less than $500,000 nationally, the plaintiffs received a slightly higher proportion of national rental from the metropolitan subsequent run market than did the eight majors. On appeal, the plaintiffs attempt to explain this latter phenomenon by pointing out that many of their lower-earning pictures were foreign made, and thus were films that traditionally earn a higher percentage of their total national rentals in the New York area than domestic productions. Be that as it may, nothing contained in the statistics applicable to the great bulk of plaintiffs' pictures (177 out of 195 earned less than $500,000 nationally) supports an inference that the defendants agreed with each other to discriminate in any way against the exhibition of the plaintiffs' films.

[Concerted Discrimination]

Nor did the court below find any evidence of concerted discrimination with respect to those 18 pictures distributed by the plaintiffs that earned over $500,000 nationally.

> "All 18 of these films each had a first neighborhood run in the entire Loew's or the entire RKO circuit in metropolitan New York. Seventeen of the pictures played the long half of the week, and six had top billing." 141 F. Supp. at 670.

The accuracy of these findings has not been attacked on appeal. Any further meaningful comparison between the New York rentals of these films and those of the major distributors in the $500,000-plus bracket is complicated by the fact that 61 out of the 96 "representative" pictures of the majors are in this high-earning category, whereas only 18 out of the 195 films distributed by the plaintiffs were comparably successful in their national performances.

The plaintiffs maintain, however, that even though many of their films were exhibited in the defendants' theatres, they were shown on discriminatory terms, i. e., pictures distributed by the plaintiffs allegedly were forced to endure longer "clearances" between first and subsequent runs, and were obliged to accept less favorable rental terms than comparable box office attractions distributed by the eight majors. We can find nothing in the record to support the claim that the treatment accorded any specific film distributed by the plaintiffs was dictated by any consideration other than the independent business judgment of the defendants' officers. The trial judge was unimpressed by the plaintiffs' attempts to show concerted discriminatory treatment of certain individual pictures distributed by the plaintiffs. See 141 F. Supp. at 672-73. We accept his conclusion that no proof of a conspiracy to discriminate against any of these films was established by the testimony and statistics adduced by the plaintiffs.

[Clearances]

In support of the claim that their pictures, when considered collectively, were forced to endure unwarrantedly long clearances between first and subsequent runs, and low flat rentals rather than a percentage of the box office receipts, the plaintiffs introduced the following compilation of statistics:

	Average Circuit Rental	Average New York Metropolitan Rental Less First-Run Broadway
Long Half—Top or Equal Billing
Eight Majors	$97,500	$190,000
Eagle Lion	55,200	101,000
Long Half Second
Eight Majors	15,300	40,000
Eagle Lion	15,200	30,000
Short Half
Eight Majors	7,500	16,000
Eagle Lion	2,700	7,500

The plaintiffs point out that the average circuit rental ($55,200) for their pictures that played "Long Half—Top or Equal Billing" in the defendants' circuits was substantially less than the average circuit rental ($97,500) for films distributed by the eight majors that were accorded comparable playing positions. The plaintiffs also call our attention to the disparity between the average circuit rental ($7,500) for pictures of the majors that were exhibited during the "short half" of the week in the defendants' circuits and the average rental ($2,700) for films distributed by the plaintiffs and shown during the "short half." No significant difference for films playing the "Long —Second" was revealed by this chart. ($15,300 for the majors as against $15,200 for the plaintiffs.)

The defendants, on the other hand, emphasize the second column in this chart—the figures representing the "Average New York Metropolitan Rental Less First-Run Broadway." These figures take into account revenue from all subsequent run theatres in the New York area, not just those owned or operated by the defendants. Using the figures in both the first and second columns to compute comparative ratios, we find that on pictures shown during the long half of the week, top or equal billing, the plaintiffs received 54.6% of their New York subsequent run film rental from the defendants' theatres, whereas the eight majors received only 51.3% of their metropolitan subsequent run rental on pictures playing those positions from the Loew's and RKO circuits. A similar computation reveals that on pictures given second billing on the long half of the week, the plaintiffs received 50.6% of their New York subsequent run film rental from the defendants, whereas the eight majors derived only 38.3% from this source. Thus on pictures falling into these two categories, the plaintiffs fared proportionally better in the defendants' circuits, as compared with other New York neighborhood theatres, than did the eight majors—a fact clearly tending to rebut the plaintiffs' claims of discrimination against their pictures by the defendants.

It is only on pictures playing the short half of the week that the plaintiffs received a smaller proportion (36%) of their total New York subsequent run rental from the defendants than did the eight major distributors (47%). However, as we noted above, the plaintiffs received a higher proportion of their total domestic film rental from the New York subsequent run theatres on pictures nationally grossing less than $500,000 than did the majors on comparable box office attractions. In general, pictures playing the "short half" fell into this low revenue category.

[No Evidence of Conspiracy]

Thus, once again, the plaintiffs' statistics are susceptible of conflicting interpretations, helpful alike to the defendants' position as well as the plaintiffs'. We therefore find that the comparative film rental statistics, in and of themselves are not reliable proof of the existence of the alleged conspiracy.

3. Other Evidence

[Plaintiffs' Testimony]

The only testimony of an officer of the plaintiffs was that of Mr. MacMillan, the president of Chesapeake Industries, the parent corporation. He testified that sometime in 1950, after the decree had been entered in the Paramount case, he went to the offices of the defendants and complained about discrimination against the plaintiffs' films, saying to the president of RKO "that unless we got competitive access to the circuit we would have no alternative but to bring a suit for damages under the antitrust laws." [8]

[8] The plaintiffs introduced a letter written in August 1948 by Arthur Krim, the President of Eagle Lion Studios, to Joseph Vogel, the President of Loew's, and the latter's reply. Krim complained that Loew's was unjustifiably discriminating against the plaintiffs' pictures. Vogel answered to the effect that Loew's had shown "ninety per cent" of the pictures offered to it by the plaintiffs, and that the terms on which those pictures were licensed were influenced solely by business considerations.

The trial judge properly gave little weight to this self-serving declaration, particularly since MacMillan admitted that he "personally had nothing to do with the sale or distribution of pictures to the exhibitors." The other witnesses called by the plaintiffs contributed no independent competent testimony tending to establish the existence of the alleged conspiracy.

[Defendants' Testimony]

The presidents of both defendant corporations took the stand and stoutly denied that there was any agreement between the defendants relating to the licensing of the plaintiffs' pictures. They each also disclaimed knowledge of licensing negotiations that the other defendant had with the plaintiffs. Additionally the defendants called as a witness one Max Youngstein, who had been in charge of "advertising, publicity and exploitation" for plaintiff Eagle Lion Films from 1946 to 1948. He testified that he was not aware of any conspiracy by the defendants to discriminate against the plaintiffs' pictures. In his opinion, the poor returns on the plaintiffs' films were attributable to their quality, since, from the basis of box office appeal, they were at "the very bottom rung of the ladder" and "much inferior" to films contemporaneously offered by other distributors.

Also introduced by the defendants was the testimony of Russell Downing, the president and managing director of Radio City Music Hall, a large first run New York theatre that was not affiliated or connected with any producer or distributor. Downing testified that out of the 195 pictures distributed by the plaintiffs, only four were submitted to his theatre for "screening" and consideration, and that not one of these four was accepted because, in the opinion of the witness, they did not meet the standards of quality—at least as measured by potential box office drawing power —required by the Music Hall.

[Absence of Evidence]

Perhaps significantly, the plaintiffs did not put on the stand any individuals who had been engaged in negotiating for the distribution of their pictures during the period of the alleged conspiracy, and who would have had first hand knowledge of conspiratorial discrimination, if any, experienced by the plaintiffs.

[Dismissal Affirmed]

Thus an examination of the entire trial record, as well as an analysis of the Paramount judgment, supports the findings of the trial judge and his ultimate conclusion that the plaintiffs failed to prove the existence of the alleged conspiracy. Since the conspiracy was not proven, we do not examine the questions plaintiffs raise relating to the elements of alleged damages they claim to have suffered, and with respect to which much of their expert testimony was directed.[9]

Judgment affirmed.

[Dissenting Opinion]

[Applicability of Government Decree]

CHARLES E. CLARK, Chief Judge (dissenting): The trial judge in my view gave the Paramount judgment not only "a niggardly construction," but one quite opposite to its intended meaning as to the issues here involved. By so doing he deprived the plaintiffs of its effect as "prima facie evidence" against these defendants as provided in the statute, 15 U. S. C. § 16. For the judgment found specifically that in New York City these defendants divided the neighborhood prior run product of the distributor defendants under continuing arrangement, "so that there was no competition between them in obtaining pictures." Paramount Finding No. 154(d). It also held that they conspired to and did monopolize the first neighborhood run in New York City and divided that market between them. Paramount Conclusion No. 16. The judge here construed all this as not including the independent distributors and as saying only that Loew's and RKO merely divided the market for their coconspirators' films. He read the major holding of "no competition between them in obtaining pictures" as though it had added at the end, "of the major distributors." This curiously narrow and unrealistic reading is belied by the words precisely used, by the findings and conclusions in other parts of the judgment, and by the background against which the words must be read.

[9] Among these elements was a claim that the plaintiffs were forced to liquidate under unfavorable conditions with a resulting "out-of-pocket liquidating loss" of $146,400.

With deference I submit that the quoted provisions are clearly intended to express the broader deduction that there was no real competition between these defendants in obtaining any pictures, whether distributed by independents or by the major distributors. Unless this were so, they would not be actually dividing the New York City market between them. This reading moreover accords with other Paramount findings and conclusions which expressly include independent exhibitors and distributors. Thus Paramount Finding No. 84 states that both independent exhibitors and independent distributors had to conform to the fixed scale of clearance, runs, and admission prices set by defendants if they wished to get satisfactory runs for their pictures or to compete in exhibition with defendants' theatres or those to which they had licensed their pictures. And Finding No. 147(c) is an express determination of "lessened competition among defendants and between them and independents." Similar holdings appear elsewhere in the judgment, as in Finding 156(b) and Conclusions 7 and 12.

Moreover, this reading alone is consistent with the general broad findings of the Paramount decision that these defendants and the major film companies effectuated a conspiracy on a national scale to restrain trade by monopolizing the distribution of motion pictures through various unfair practices, such as block booking, imposition of fixed runs and fixed admission prices on independent distributors, exclusion of independents as desired, use of vertical integration to further their business of exhibiting pictures, and so on. To hold that this gigantic and complete monopoly does not reach the independent distributors, but leaves them free to compete with the big companies, does not make sense. And, as we have seen, it is disproved by the findings and conclusions actually stated and the relief finally granted.

Here the defendants have adroitly supplied a backdrop for the narrowing construction they support by urging that "the Paramount case was for exhibitors, not distributors." And this case has been somewhat heralded as a novel treble-damage claim, since it is brought not by independent movie theatres damaged by discrimination in procuring pictures to exhibit, but by the film producers and distributors themselves. It is of course true that the private cases previously before us have been brought by exhibitors, and this may indeed be the first case of other independents. But this atmosphere of novelty is not enough to justify denial of relief to plaintiffs. No such limitation is stated in the Paramount judgment itself; and various deductions which the parties draw from attempts at expansion or contraction of its form, as rejected by the then sitting judges, seem to me but the more to support the adequacy of what they did and thought they were doing. The statute, 15 U. S. C. § 16, supra, gives the benefit of the prima facie evidence rule in any action "by any party" under the antitrust laws. And that would seem to be conclusive to reach and benefit these plaintiffs. Obviously the findings concerning independent exhibitors and distributors were quite within the direct issues in the case, and the extensive discussion here of the "doctrine of estoppel" appears to be only another way of saying that the findings did not mean what plaintiffs claim and I believe to be their fair and common-sense interpretation.

The Paramount findings pertain to the year 1945. But the plaintiffs showed by quite adequate evidence that the same conditions continued in the period 1946 through 1950. And as the plaintiffs point out, the judges in the Paramount case at a later stage heard evidence as to conditions in 1948 without finding the need of making changes. The findings quoted were actually dated February 8, 1950. Moreover, plaintiffs point out that Eagle Lion Studios succeeded in 1946 to the business of PRC Pictures, Inc., one of the three nationwide independent film distributors found in the Paramount case to be adversely affected by the defendants' conspiracy.

I conclude that the plaintiffs thus presented a prima facie case which it became the duty of the defendants to rebut. The error of the court in denying this position to the plaintiffs was actually somewhat compounded by its ruling denigrating the Paramount judgment to the force only of some "evidence" in the case—an inconsistent approach not at all justified under the statute, and one which could only confuse. For if that judgment was no more inclusive in its terms than the judge ruled, then it was not evidence here at all.

[Damages]

Thus dismissal below was unwarranted. Possibly we could proceed to final judgment on the basis that the prima facie case had not been rebutted. The preferable course, however, would appear to be a remand for reexamination by the trial court of the evidence in the light of the statutory command. This seems to me particularly desirable because the trial judge found this evidence of damage inadequate to justify a plaintiffs' judgment. Actually considerable evidence involving statistical comparisons was introduced; although some of the deductions doubtless contained fallacies of the kind the judge criticized, yet a more sympathetic approach might have contributed some constructive suggestions and deductions for the assaying of this evidence. Thus a comparison of the reactions of New York City and national audiences or of Eagle Lion's successful films with other selected films of the major distributors seems perfectly possible to yield something more nearly factual than general conclusions based on what is supposed to be the degree of cultural sophistication of New Yorkers over others. In the present posture of the case I deem it hardly worthwhile to document these suggestions in detail, but I must call attention—for fear that it has been overlooked—of the well established principle casting upon the wrongdoers the risk of uncertainty as to the damages that flow from a wrong. William H. Rankin Co. v. Associated Bill Posters of United States and Canada, 2 Cir., 42 F. 2d 152, certiorari denied Associated Bill Posters of United States and Canada v. Wm. H. Rankin Co., 282 U. S. 864; Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Parchment Paper Co., 282 U. S. 555, 561-564; Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,445], 327 U. S. 251, 264; Package Closure Corp. v. Sealright Co., 2 Cir. [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,227], 141 F. 2d 972, 979. Of course plaintiffs' films do not all stand on the same level. Some were successful and some were not. Some quite probably deserved the low artistic and box-office-appeal rating given them by defendants. But there appeared to have been some fairly conspicuous expectations. It does not seem an impossible task for the trier to discriminate fairly between these elements of damage and to achieve a just over-all result.

[Congressional Policy]

There seems to be a developing trend in some of our trial courts of hostility toward the "big" antitrust case and of discovering obstacles—going even back to matters of pleading and pre-trial—in the way of a free showing of the need of remedial relief. Humanly speaking we can well sympathize, for these trials are a burden, if not a bore, to a busy, overworked court. But we are dealing with settled and cherished Congressional policy which is not for us to change or hamper. I suggest that these judicially formed limitations are a definite infringement of legislative policy. However serious the load, I do not believe our able trial judges desire to take any permanent course thus opposed to legislative purposes. But here, while doubtless not contemplated, the course of trial has had that consequence. I think, therefore, it requires and deserves a new start at the trial level.

[Vote of Deceased Judge]

I feel the greater confidence in the views I have expressed because Judge Frank, who originally heard the appeal, voted to reverse, and set forth similar conclusions in a tentative memorandum he had prepared before he died.

[¶ 68,820] Frank I. Gordon and Marion V. Gordon v. Loew's Incorporated, et al. John C. Gordon, Helen Gordon and Joseph Gordon v. Loew's Incorporated, et al.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. Nos. 12,214 and 12,215, respectively. Filed September 16, 1957.

On Petition for Rehearing.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Defenses—Statute of Limitations—Applicable Statute—Tolling of Statute.—A United States Court of Appeals, on a petition for rehearing, adhered to its ruling that a New Jersey two-year statute of limitations was applicable to, and barred, a treble damage action brought under Section 4 of the Clayton Act. On rehearing, the court held that the two-year statute barred another treble damage action which had been before the court for review, and that it was not necessary to consider whether the pendency of a Government antitrust suit suspended the running of the statute of limitations since the Government suit had terminated more than two years before either of the treble damage actions had been commenced.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9005.05, 9010, 9010.100, 9010.275.

For the appellants: Richard Orlikoff, Chicago, Ill.

For the appellees: Willard G. Woelper, Newark, N. J.

Denying a petition for rehearing of a decision of the U. S. Court of Appeals, Third Circuit, 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,783, affirming judgments of the U. S. District Court, District of New Jersey, 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,573.

Before MARIS, STALEY and HASTIE, Circuit Judges.

Opinion of the Court

[Petition for Rehearing]

By MARIS, Circuit Judge [In full text]: The plaintiffs in these two cases have filed a petition for rehearing. So far as they seek a reargument of the question of the applicability to a federal antitrust suit of the two years limitation imposed by section 2A:14-10 of the Revised Statutes of New Jersey, the petition presents nothing which has not heretofore been fully presented to and considered by the court. We, therefore, merely state that we adhere to the conclusion expressed in the opinion heretofore filed that this statute is applicable to bar the suit of Frank and Marion Gordon.

[Clayton Act, Section 5]

For the first time in this court the plaintiffs John, Helen and Joseph Gordon now state in the petition for rehearing that the six years limitation of section 2A:14-1 of the Revised Statutes of New Jersey is not applicable to bar their suit because a Government antitrust suit, entitled United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc. et al., was pending against the present defendants in the District Court for the Southern District of New York during a portion of the period of six years before they brought their suit. It is true, as these plaintiffs state, that under section 5 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. A. § 16, the running of the New Jersey statute of limitations would have been suspended during the pendency of this Government antitrust suit as to every private right of action on any matter complained of in said suit. It is unnecessary for us to consider whether such a suspension actually occurred, however, since it is conceded that the Government antitrust suit in question had terminated as against all the defendants in both the present suits more than two years before either of these suits was begun.

[Second Suit Barred]

Since, as we have held, the two years statute of limitations of New Jersey was applicable to bar the suit brought by Frank and Marion Gordon, that statute was also applicable to bar the similar suit brought by John, Helen and Joseph Gordon even if the six years statute was suspended by the pendency of the Government suit. Accordingly the question of the applicability of the six years statute to the suit of John, Helen and Joseph Gordon is wholly academic.

The petition for rehearing will be denied.

Order

Upon consideration of the petition for rehearing filed by the appellants and the appellees' brief in opposition thereto it is ordered:

(1) That the opinion filed in these cases on July 31, 1957 [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,783] is amended by striking out the last sentence of the opinion, prior to the direction for the entry of judgment, reading as follows: "It is worth noting also that if the federal statute of limitations of four years which now applies to antitrust cases had been applicable to the cases before us it would have barred both of them."; and

(2) That the petition for rehearing is denied.

[¶ 68,821] Johny E. McCarroll, Willie J. McCarroll and Thomas L. Hall, a copartnership doing business as McCarroll & Hall Construction Co., also known as McCarroll & Hall v. Los Angeles County District Council of Carpenters, et al.

In the Supreme Court of the State of California, in Bank. L. A. 24470. Filed September 13, 1957.

Appeal from an order of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County PHILBRICK MCCOY, Judge.

California Cartwright Act

Combinations and Conspiracies Under State Laws—Labor Unions—Application of Antitrust Laws.—In affirming the issuance of a preliminary injunction restraining a union from calling or continuing a strike against a contracting company, the reviewing court held that, in view of its conclusion that the issuance of the injunction was justified by the breach of a collective bargaining agreement, it was not necessary to consider the contracting company's claim that the union violated the California Cartwright Act by restraining trade without any legitimate labor objective.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2441.05.

For the appellants: Arthur Garrett and James M. Nicoson, Los Angeles, Cal.

For the respondents: Hill, Farrer & Burrill, by Ray L. Johnson, Jr., Los Angeles, Cal.

For a prior opinion of the California District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division One, see 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,582.

[Strikes—Relief Sought]

TRAYNOR, Justice [In full text except for omissions indicated by asterisks]: Plaintiffs are engaged in the contracting business in the Los Angeles area. They brought the present action against defendant labor unions and their officers for damages and injunctive relief against strikes allegedly called by defendants.

[Complaint]

In their second amended complaint plaintiffs allege that plaintiffs and defendants are parties to a collective bargaining agreement known as the BCA-AF of L Master Labor Agreement. This agreement provides that a contractor shall have complete freedom in hiring workmen, except that he must first call on the local union having jurisdiction over the area in which the contracting work is to be done to satisfy his need for labor. The local union must immediately furnish the required number of competent and skilled workmen, and if after forty-eight hours notice it has failed to do so, the contractor is free to obtain workmen from any available source. Furthermore, the contractor is permitted to transfer workmen up to ten per cent of his current requirements in any craft from the jurisdiction of one local union to the jurisdiction of another local union. He may transfer more than ten per cent if permitted by the constitution and by-laws of the craft at the time the collective bargaining agreement was entered into. The by-laws of the Los Angeles County District Council of Carpenters permit such a transfer up to fifty per cent of a contractor's requirements, and also require a local union to honor a contractor's request for specific workmen. The agreement also provides that the unions will not call a strike against a contractor during the life of the agreement, but that all grievances or disputes over the interpretation or application of the terms of the agreement will be settled by a specified grievance procedure and by arbitration.

The complaint further alleges that plaintiffs entered into contracts to do the carpentry work on various construction projects in the Los Angeles area. Pursuant to the collective bargaining agreement, plaintiffs called on defendant local unions to supply them with workmen. The workmen sent to plaintiffs were, however, unskilled and incompetent, and furthermore defendants informed plaintiffs that they would not be permitted to transfer workmen from the jurisdiction of one local union to the jurisdiction of another local union in excess of ten per cent of their current requirements. Defendants also refused to honor plaintiffs' requests for named workmen or to permit plaintiffs to transfer their regular workmen from different parts of Los Angeles County to specific construction projects. Defendants ordered strikes of plaintiffs' employees on specific construction projects, and finally brought about a strike of all plaintiffs' employees.

The complaint alleges that the only reasons defendants gave for their conduct were that plaintiffs are labor contractors and are violating state safety regulations; that in fact plaintiffs are not labor contractors since they undertake to do complete carpentry jobs and not merely to furnish workmen, and that in any event labor contracting is prohibited neither by law nor by the collective bargaining agreement; that a state safety inspector found that plaintiffs were not violating any state safety regulations; and that defendants' purpose in calling strikes was to harass plaintiffs and totally destroy their business.

[Causes of Action]

Plaintiffs seek to state three causes of action: breach of the collective bargaining agreement through a violation of the no-strike clause, a tortious attempt to destroy plaintiffs' business without any legitimate labor objective, and a violation of the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 16700-16758) by restraining trade without any legitimate labor objective. On the basis of the complaint, testimony, and numerous affidavits, the trial court issued a preliminary injunction against defendants' calling or continuing a strike against plaintiffs, and it is from this order that defendants appeal. In view of our conclusion that the issuance of the injunction was justified by the breach of the collective bargaining agreement, we do not find it necessary to consider the second and third causes of action stated in the complaint.

* * *

[Affirmed]

The order is affirmed.

We concur: GIBSON, C. J., SPENCE, J., and McCOMB, J.

We concur in the judgment: SHENK, J., and SCHAUER, J.

Dissent: CARTER, J. [Dissenting Opinion not reproduced.]

[¶ 68,822] United States v. Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Western District of Virginia, at Roanoke. Criminal Action No. 5790. Dated August 6, 1957.

Case No. 1327 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Indictment—Defendants' Plea of Nolo Contendere.—A motion by defendants to change their pleas of "not guilty" to pleas of nolo contendere was denied on the ground that the defendants offered nothing to indicate that their case was a proper one for the acceptance of such pleas. Whether or not a plea of nolo contendere should be accepted depends upon the gravity of the offense and whether or not the violation of the law was knowing and intentional. If the latter conditions exist, the proper plea is a plea of "guilty." Where the facts indicate an inadvertent violation of the law or one that is accompanied by no wrongful intent, a plea of nolo contendere may be accepted. The defendants were, however, given the opportunity to renew their motion in the future.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8025.860.

For the plaintiff: Herbert Brownell, Jr., Attorney General of the United States, Washington, D. C.; Victor R. Hansen, Asst. Attorney General of the United States, Washington, D. C.; John Strickler, United States Attorney, Roanoke, Va.; and Samuel Karp and Robert Brown, Jr., Attorneys, Department of Justice, Washington, D. C.

For the defendants: J. H. Whicker, Jr., of Whicker and Whicker, North Wilkesboro, N. C., and Gilmer, Harman and Sadler, Pulaski, Va., for Carolina Mirror Corp. and Edd F. Gardner; W. P. Sandridge, Winston-Salem, N. C., and R. Linwood Holton, Jr., Roanoke, Va., for Stroupe Mirror Co.; and Patrick A. Gibson, of Hunton, Williams, Gay, Moore and Powell, Richmond, Va., and Hannibal N. Joyce, of Joyce and Stone, Martinsville, Va., for Virginia Mirror Co.

Memorandum by the Court

[Change of Pleas]

JOHN PAUL, District Judge [In full text]: This matter comes on upon the motion of several of the defendants [1] to be allowed to change their pleas of not guilty, which they have heretofore entered, to pleas of nolo contendere.

The court has heard the arguments of counsel in support of said motion and has considered also a written memorandum filed by counsel for these defendants in support of said motion. After full consideration of the matter, I am of opinion that these defendants should not be allowed to plead nolo contendere, at least at the present time.

[Plea of Nolo Contendere]

During the oral argument I stated from the bench my general disinclination to accept pleas of nolo contendere for the reasons that I thought they were in the nature of "face-saving" pleas and were tendered because the defendants did not wish to bear the supposed odium of pleading guilty, although they might in fact be guilty of the offense charged and know that they were guilty. At the same time I indicated that I recognized that the plea of nolo contendere could well be accepted in a proper case.

[Relevant Considerations]

The difficulty in the present case is that these defendants have offered nothing to indicate to the court that this is a proper case for the acceptance of a plea of nolo contendere. In the argument and in the written briefs submitted, counsel for the defendants cite numerous cases in which pleas of nolo contendere have been accepted in cases involving violation of the anti-trust laws. But numerous as these cases are they represent nothing more than instances where the court has seen fit, in its discretion, to accept the plea. Whether or not a plea of nolo contendere should be accepted depends, in my opinion, upon the gravity of the offense and whether or not the violation of the law was knowing and intentional. If these latter conditions exist, then the proper plea is a plea of guilty. Where the facts indicate an inadvertent violation of the law or one that is accompanied by no wrongful intent, a plea of nolo contendere may well be accepted. However, nothing has been laid before this court which sufficiently acquaints it with the facts in the case to know whether a plea of nolo contendere would be proper.

In the concluding paragraph of the brief submitted by the defendants it refers to the "value of a nolo plea in a case like this where any violation is necessarily of a technical non-aggravated nature." I do not doubt the sincerity of counsel in holding the opinion that the offense here is of a technical and non-aggravated nature, but the court does not have sufficient information of the facts in order to determine whether in its opinion this is an accurate description of the nature of the offense committed here.

[Renewal of Motion]

If it is possible for counsel to submit a statement of the facts on which this indictment is based, of which facts there is no material contradiction, so that the court may be better informed as to the conditions under which the charged violation of the law occurred then the court will be in better position to determine whether or not it is a proper case for the acceptance of a plea of nolo contendere. In other words, it is my present opinion that nothing has been shown to justify the court in accepting such a plea, but that the matter is not foreclosed if counsel choose at some future time to renew their motion, supported by a statement of facts which would justify the court in giving it further consideration.

[[1] Carolina Mirror Corp., Edd F. Gardner, Stroupe Mirror Co., and Virginia Mirror Co., Inc.]

[¶ 68,823] Skaggs Drug Center v. General Electric Company.

Miles Laboratories, Inc. v. Skaggs Drug Center.

In the Supreme Court of the State of New Mexico. No. 6204. Filed September 27, 1957.

Appeal from the District Court of Bernalillo County. REIDY, Judge.

New Mexico Fair Trade Act

Fair Trade—Constitutionality of New Mexico Fair Trade Act—Nonsigner Provision—New Mexico Constitution.—Section 2 of the New Mexico Fair Trade Act (the nonsigner provision) "is unconstitutional and void as an arbitrary and unreasonable exercise of the police power without any substantial relation to the public health, safety, or general welfare insofar as it concerns persons who are not parties to" fair trade contracts. The Fair Trade Act is a price fixing statute, designed primarily to destroy competition at the retail level. However, it was held that the Fair Trade Act does not violate Article 4, Section 38 of the New Mexico Constitution, which provides that the "legislature shall enact laws to prevent trusts, monopolies, and combinations in restraint of trade."

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3040.20, 3085.33, 3258.

For the appellant: W. A. Keleher, John B. Tittmann, and T. B. Keleher, Albuquerque, N. M.

For the appellees: Simms, Modrall, Seymour, Sperling & Roehl, and George T. Harris, Jr., Albuquerque, N. M., for General Electric Co.; and Rodey, Dickason, Sloan, Mims & Akin, Albuquerque, N. M., and Cawley & Byron, Elkhart, Ind., for Miles Laboratories, Inc.

Reversing a judgment of the New Mexico District Court, County of Bernalillo, 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,471.

Opinion

[Constitutionality]

DAVID W. CARMODY, District Judge [In full text]: This case involves the questioned constitutionality of the New Mexico Fair Trade Act, being Chapter 44 of the Session Laws of 1937, which now appears as Article 49-2-1 et seq., N. M. S. A., 1953. Actually, there are two consolidated cases which were consolidated by the court below and heard as one appeal in this court.

[Parties—Stipulated Facts]

Originally the Skaggs Drug Center as plaintiff brought suit in Bernalillo County against the General Electric Company, seeking a declaratory judgment with respect to the Fair Trade Act. The General Electric Company answered and by way of counterclaim sought an injunction against Skaggs Drug Center to prevent it from further sales of General Electric fair traded products at a price below that fixed by the General Electric Company. At about the same time Miles Laboratories, Inc., brought suit against Skaggs Drug Center, seeking an injunction to prevent Skaggs from selling Alka Seltzer and One-A-Day vitamin tablets at a price less than those established by Miles Laboratories. The two cases were consolidated for the purpose of argument, the facts having been stipulated to, and the lower court found the Fair Trade Act to be constitutional and entered injunction on behalf of both General Electric and Miles Laboratories as against Skaggs Drug Center. It was stipulated below that both General Electric and Miles Laboratories had engaged in extensive national and local advertising and had built up and established a valuable goodwill in their respective trade-marked products, that the products are in fair and open competition in the state of New Mexico with commodities of the same general class manufactured and sold by others, that Skaggs had sold products of both of the corporations at less than the retail prices fixed by them with knowledge of the existing so-called fair trade agreement and the prices fixed thereby, and that Skaggs had advertised in the local newspapers in Albuquerque extensively, calling to the public's attention the fact that the products are available at certain prices which are less than established minimum retail prices.

For the purpose of this opinion, Skaggs Drug Center will be referred to as appellant and both General Electric Company and Miles Laboratories, Inc., will be referred to jointly as appellee.

[Background of Fair Trade]

A brief background of the fair trade acts is necessary in order to give a clear understanding of the situation which now faces the court. In the early days of the 1930 depression the state of California passed the first fair trade act. The purpose of the California act, and the others passed subsequently, was to "protect trade-mark owners, distributors, and the public against injurious and uneconomic practices in the distribution of the articles of standard quality under a distinguished trade-mark or name", Cal. Sta. 1931, c. 278, p. 583. The basic theory of this legislation was that there would be injury to the producer in cut-rate sales of his trade-marked goods where the consumer would associate a reduced price with a cheapening of brand quality, or where a distributor, in an effort to attract customers into his store at little or no profit, forces other distributors to match the price reduction and thereby makes it unprofitable for other distributors to carry the other trade-marked brand. The California act as finally amended was sustained by the Supreme Court of California in the frequently cited case of Max Factor and Company v. Kunsman, 5 Cal. 2d 466, 55 P. 2d 177, affirmed 299 U. S. 198, and it should be noted that a great many of the subsequent cases from other jurisdictions which sustain the fair trade laws adopt the language of the above case to a very large extent.

[Survey of Rulings]

Subsequent to the original California enactment and principally during the depression years, most of the other states in the Union adopted a similar or identical law, until at the present time 45 states have enacted this type of legislation, only Texas, Missouri, and Vermont having resisted such an enactment, by reason of constitutional provision or otherwise. It is of interest to note that the so-called fair trade acts have been before the highest appellate courts of 27 states, and in 16 of the states the legislation has been sustained as constitutional, and in 11 as unconstitutional; however, these figures by themselves are almost meaningless because of the varying constitutional provisions in the different states and also by reason of the fact that the various courts have ruled either favorably or unfavorably, as the case may be, on widely differing theories. In addition to state decisions, the Supreme Court of the United States has been called upon on several occasions to rule upon these laws and the principal case relied upon by the proponents of the laws is the Old Dearborn Distributing Company v. Seagram Distillers Corporation [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,141], 299 U. S. 183, 81 L. Ed. 109. This was an opinion by Mr. Justice Sutherland, which was the unanimous opinion of the court. Basically, the court's decision in this case is that the ownership of a trade-mark and goodwill constitutes property in a real sense, and injury to which, as with other species of property, is subject to litigation; that price cutting by retail dealers is injurious to the goodwill and business of the producer and distributor and injurious to the general public as well. It is interesting to note that the New York Court of Appeals which originally held the fair trade acts unconstitutional, Doubleday D. and Co. v. R. H. Macy and Co., 269 N. Y. 272, 199 N. E. 409, 108 A. L. R. 1325, one year later, following the Old Dearborn decision, supra, ruled the fair trade laws constitutional in a very short opinion, Bourjois Sales Corp. v. Dorfman [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,155], 273 N. Y. 167, 7 N. E. 2d 30, 110 A. L. R. 1411, in effect merely adopting the ruling of the Supreme Court of the United States. Actually, most of the states whose highest courts affirmed the constitutionality of the statutes did so in the 1930 and early 1940 era. Conversely, the greater bulk of the decisions declaring the statute unconstitutional have been by rulings of appellate courts in more recent years, although, of course, there are exceptions to both of the above statements.

[Nonsigner Provision]

The section of the statute involved appearing in the N. M. S. Annotated (1953) Compilation, § 49-2-2, is as follows:

> "Sale below stipulated price declared unfair competition—Liability of vendor, —Wilfully and knowingly advertising, offering for sale or selling any commodity at less than the price stipulated in any contract entered into pursuant to the > provisions of section 1 (49-2-1) of this act, whether the person so advertising, offering for sale or selling is or is not a party to such contract, is unfair competition and is actionable at the suit of any person damaged thereby."

The basic attack on the statute over the years in practically all courts has been upon the theory that § 2 of the acts provides that the sale of the trade-marked items at a price less than that stipulated to is a violation of the act, whether the seller is a party to the stipulated price contract or not. This is referred to throughout the various decisions as a "vertical agreement," fixing the resale prices of a commodity. Thus, in theory at least, if a manufacturer of a trade-marked article has a contract with one retailer in a state which fixes the minimum price, then all other retailers in that state selling the same product are bound thereby. It can be readily seen that such a provision is readily amenable to considerable litigation, the manufacturer or distributor contending that it is valid in order to protect his property interest in the trade-mark or goodwill, and the retailer who wishes to sell the same for less contending that he is the owner of the property and should be able to sell it at whatever price he desires. The above is a very great simplification of the problem. It should be mentioned that the socalled non-signer or vertical provision of the Fair Trade Act has been determined by the Supreme Court of the United States as in violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. (See Schwegmann Brothers v. Calvert Distilleries Corp. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,823], 341 U. S. 384, 95 L. Ed. 1045 and prior cases cited therein.) Shortly after this decision in 1951 Congress passed the McGuire Act, 15 U. S. C. A. § 45, 66 Statute 652, for the specific purpose of exempting the non-signer provision from the prohibition of the Sherman Act. So much for the background of the present controversy.

[Restraint of Trade]

Appellant contends, in the first instance, that the Fair Trade Act violates Article 4, § 38 of the New Mexico Constitution, this being the restraint-of-trade provision, which is as follows:

> "The legislature shall enact laws to prevent trusts, monopolies, and combinations in restraint of trade."

Appellant's argument is that at the time this provision was written into the New Mexico Constitution in 1911 the Sherman Anti-Trust Act had been in effect for twenty years, and that the Supreme Court of the United States had ruled that the Sherman Act prohibited as an illegal combination in restraint of trade the type of price-fixing scheme which is provided for in the Fair Trade Act, Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park and Sons Co., 220 U. S. 373, 55 L. Ed. 502, and that, therefore, the members of the Constitutional Convention in writing the Constitution had in mind the Sherman Act and the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States with respect thereto.

This argument, which at first blush would appear sound, were it not for the fact that the Territorial Legislature in 1891 had passed a law which provided in part as follows:

> "Every contract or combination between individuals, associations, or corporations having as its object, or which shall operate to restrict trade or commerce or control the quantity, price, or exchange of any article of manufacture or product of the soil or mine is hereby declared to be illegal."

Chapter 10, Laws of 1891. It should be noted that the 1891 law which was passed a year after the Sherman Act specifically contained the word "price," which is neither in the Sherman Act nor in our constitutional provision; therefore, it would seem to follow that, if the makers of the Constitution were cognizant of the provisions and decisions with respect to the Sherman Act, they were certainly familiar with or knew the contents of the acts of the Territorial Legislature which were in effect at the time of the Constitutional Convention. It does not sound reasonable that the members of the Constitutional Convention failed to consider the verbiage of the law of 1891 so as to include the same in the Constitution and yet considered decisions under the Sherman Act. We cannot agree with counsel that in 1911 the makers of our Constitution intended to include the words, "price control", in our Constitution, nor do we see why the same should be placed therein by implication. To us it is obvious that the constitutional prohibition contained in Article IV, § 38 is aimed at preventing such monopolies and combinations as would, in effect, result in a practically complete destruction of competition. To our view, the act in question does not have that prohibitive effect and it is, therefore, determined that the so-called Fair Trade Act does not violate the afore-mentioned section of our Constitution.

[Due Process of Law]

Appellant next contends that the Fair Trade Act deprives the appellant of property without due process of law, in violation of Article II, §§ 4 and 18 of the Constitution of the State of New Mexico. These particular sections are as follows:

> "All persons are born equally free, and have certain natural, inherent and inalienable rights, among which are the rights of enjoying and defending life and liberty, of acquiring, possessing and protecting property, and of seeking and obtaining safety and happiness."
>
> "No person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law; nor shall any person be denied the equal protection of the law."

This, to our view, raises a much more serious question than that above disposed of. It is on this point particularly that the courts of so many of our sister states have announced rulings diametrically opposed to each other, some courts ruling that the general welfare of the public would be served by such statutes and other courts ruling absolutely adversely and contrarywise.

Some of the more outstanding cases sustaining the constitutionality of the acts are Max Factor and Company v. Kunsman, supra; Burroughs, Wellcome and Co. v. Johnson Whole Perfume Co., [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,194], 128 Conn. 596, 24 A. 2d 841; Johnson and Johnson v. Weissbard [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,159], 131 [121] N. J. Eq. 585, 191 Atl. 873; Sears v. Western Thrift Stores of Olympia, Inc. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,152], 10 Wash. 2d 372, 116 P. 2d 756; Burche Co. v. General Electric Company [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,078], 382 Pa. 370, 115 A. 2d 361.

So also some, but not all, of the decisions of the states holding to the contrary are Miles Laboratories, Inc., v. Eckerdy [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,700] 73 S. 2d 680; Cox v. General Electric Company [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,934], 211 Ga. 286, 85 S. E. 2d 514; General Elecrtic Co. v. Wahle [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,333], 207 Ore. 302, 296 P. 2d 635; Olin Mathieson Chemical Corp. v. Francis [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,463], 134 Colo. 160, 301 P. 2d 139.

In addition, there are extensive annotations in A. L. R., the two latest of which are to be found at 125 A. L. R. 1335 and 19 A. L. R. 2d 1139.

[Economic Philosophy]

A great deal of the conflict arises by reason of the fact that court after court, regardless of its final holding, mentions, the question of the economic philosophy of the fair trade acts. The courts which have sustained the same generally state that it is a question for the legislature to determine as to whether the economic policy as set out by the acts is wise or unwise, and that it is not a judicial function to determine this policy. Many courts and many of the individual judges will disagree as to the economic theory and it is our feeling that almost every court which has ruled upon this problem has had to draw the line between judicial responsibility and legislative policy, as stated by the Supreme Court of California in the Max Factor and Co., case, supra:

> "The power of the court is limited to determining whether the subject of the legislation is within the state's power and if so, to determine whether the means adopted to accomplish the result are reasonably designed for that purpose and have a real and substantial relation to the objects sought to be attained."

The California court in this case also stated:

> "Neither the state nor the federal constitution guarantee any personal absolute liberty of action. The liberty guaranteed by our law is a liberty subject to regulation in the public good . . . an equal liberty rather than an absolute liberty."

Finally, in this case the court said:

> "The police power is no longer limited to measures designed to protect life, safety, health, and morals of the citizens, but extends to measures designed to promote the public convenience and the general prosperity . . . and includes economic measures regulating competition . . ."

Diametrically opposed to this is the decision of the Supreme Court of Florida, which, in Miles Laboratories, Inc. v. Eckerd, supra, stated the following:

"As we have stated before, the real effect of the non-signer clause is anti-competitive price fixing; not the protecting of the good will of trade marked products as other courts have held. Goodwill, it has been said, should be determined by the price which the goods can command in a competitive market, and not by the ability of the manufacturer to sell at a pegged retail price which he himself selects. Corey, Fair Trade Pricing: A reappraisal, 30 Harv. Bus. Rev. 47, 60. Except in times of economic emergency such inflexible price arrangements which the act sanction are not in line with our traditional concepts of free competition, which have traditionally been the 'yard stick' for protection of the consuming public. The real vice of the non-signer clause is the absence of that standard, and the decisions of this Court cited herein so hold. In removing the said standard the non-signer clause must fail as an invalid use of the police power foı a private, not a public purpose."

Numerous decisions coud be cited giving both sides of the argument, but with such a wealth of conflicting authorities, it is felt that no useful purpose would be gained by the citation and quotation from many of the cases from our sister states.

[Police Power]

It is contended by appellees that Arnold v. Board of Bar Examiners, 45 N. M. 57, 107 P. 2d 799, places this court in the class of those courts which have refused to strike down the fair trade acts, in which this court said:

"Obviously the question of monopolies in restraint of trade as respects such matters as are now under discussion (price fixing) yields to a more important consideration, that of reasonably exercising the police power over a business or profession having a vital relation to public welfare and health."

It should also be mentioned that in the Arnold case this Court quoted the Supreme Court of Minnesota with approval as to the following statement:

"The police power is not limited to the protection of the public health, morals, and safety. It extends also to economic needs."

It should be born in mind, with respect to the Arnold case, that there this court determined that the business concerned directly affected public health and it is, therefore, not directly analogous to the present case and is not authority upon which the court should rule in the instant case. It should not require any argument whatsoever to point out that the sale of electric irons having a General Electric label can in no sense affect the public health. Of course, it might be claimed that the sale of vitamin pills or alkaline tablet could in a sense affect public health, but it is not believed that they do in the sense intended by the framers of our Constitution. In fact, a great many of the articles which come under the Fair Trade Act have little or no relation to the public health in any sense. (See Shakespeare Co. v. Lippmann's Tool Shop Sporting Goods Co. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,303], 334 Mich. 109, 54 N. W. 2d 268), in which the article in question was a trademarked line of fishing tackle and in which case the Michigan court in a very well reasoned opinion concluded that the sale of fishing tackle was not in anywise affected with the public interest.

[Georgia]

The Supreme Court of Georgia in Cox v. General Electric Company, supra, in commenting upon the decisions of other states as to the fair trade acts, made the following very pertinent statement:

"It is earnestly argued that a number of the supreme courts have upheld the validity of their Fair Trade Acts, which were almost, if not entirely, identical with the Georgia statute under consideration, and our attention is called to a number of decisions by the Supreme Court of the United States. We are aware of the fact that a number of the State Suprme Courts have upheld these acts, a number have not passed upon them, and others have held them invalid, We are also familiar with the conflicting decisions on this question by the Supreme Court of the United States, as pointed out in the special concurring opinion of Chief Justice Duckworth in Harris v. Duncan, supra. We are here, however, dealing with the statutes of this state and with the question of whether or not they violate the Constitution of the State of Georgia. What the courts of other States have decided is not controlling, and this is one of the few powers left to States to decide for themselves regardless of what the Supreme Court of the United States may or may not have decided. We are also familiar with the modern trend to allow the government to encroach more and more upon the individual liberties and freedom. So far as we are concerned, we will not strike down the Constitution of our State for this purpose; neither will we follow the crowd. The scheme described in the petition now under consideration permits a manufacturer, under the guise of protecting his property rights in a trade name and trademark, to control the price of his product down through the channels of trade into the hands of the ultimate consumer, and into the hands of persons with whom he has no contractual relation whatever. This statute clearly violates the provisions of the due process clause of the Constitution of the State of Georgia."

[Oregon]

So also the Supreme Court of Oregon in General Electric Co., v. Wahle, supra, in an extremely well considered opinion held that the Fair Trade Act was void as an arbitrary and unreasonable interference with private property rights beyond the police power of the state, having no reasonable relation to public morals, health, safety or general welfare. Particularly on the issue of the police power, the Court stated at pages 644 and 645 of the Pacific Reporter opinion, the following:

"Viewed from a realistic standpoint, it is difficult to find any justification for the Fair Trade Act based upon considerations of the public health, safety, morals, and welfare. We can see no real and substantial connection between the nebulous theory that fixed minimum resale prices are necessary to protect the good will of the trademark owner and the welfare of the public.

* * *

"In 49 Yale L. J. 607 and in 21 Chicago L. Rev. 175, are to be found exhaustive and well-written articles concerning the Fair Trade statutes by two eminent scholars, viz., Harry Shulman, Sterling Prof. of Law, Yale Law School, and Carl H. Fulda, Prof. of Law, Rutgers University, respectively. From the facts and statistics given, the accuracy of which seem beyond question, it is plainly apparent that the consumer is not benefited, but on the contrary is harmed by the operation of the Fair Trade Act. The consumer is the public. He is compelled to pay a higher price for a given commodity in order that the retailer may be guaranteed a higher fixed, and often unreasonable, profit. If Professors Shulman and Fulda are correct in their observations, and we have no reason to believe otherwise, it is obvious that the whole scheme of the Fair Trade Acts is one for private, rather than public, gain, a scheme fathered by highly organized groups of distributors and retailers, interested not in the public weal, but only in their own selfish ends. Manifestly, such a scheme bears no relation whatever to the public morals, health, safety, or general welfare."

[Colorado]

A very recent decision by the Supreme Court of the State of Colorado, which to our view states the modern trend with respect to the holdings of courts on this subject and contains language the reasoning of which we feel should be adopted in New Mexico, in Olin Mathieson Chemical Corp. v. Francis, supra, at page 152 of the Pacific Reporter, the court said:

"Any act of the General Assembly which arbitrarily destroys or impairs the right of the individual to the free use and enjoyment of his property, lawfully acquired, and permits the fixing of prices for the benefit of a special group, is opposed to the constitutional concept of a free people and should not be allowed to stand. Legislation of this kind evidences the ability of organized minorities to induce legislation for their special benefit at the expense of the unorganized purchasing masses. During a recent decade numerous attempts were made to regiment the general public and in each instance they were struck down as violative of constitutional rights of a free people. We have not yet arrived at the place in America where the many must yield to the few, so that the latter may make ever increasing profits at the expense of those who still believe in the principle of free and competitive trade and commerce, untrammeled by legislative fiats.

"The Colorado Fair Trade Act does not necessarily apply to all trademark owners, producers and distributors. It becomes operative only as to those who elect and attempt to bind non-contracting retailers dealing in the same commodities. What today may be invalid as restraint of trade, may under our Act at the whim of the manufacturer be perfectly lawful next week. What we are saying is that such restraint of trade and destruction of price competition may thus vary from time to time at the will of the manufacturer or distributor. The Act is primarily and essentially a price-fixing statute, and unless authorized under the police power, offends against the constitution. The defendant has not obligated himself to fix reseale prices at the stipulated minimum by virtue of any contract he has entered into. He is compelled to do so by the terms of this Act. We must look not to the statute, but to the contract between plaintiff and Fisher to determine the minimum price, below which the defendant shall not sell."

[Price Fixing Statute]

This case is a suit in equity, and it should always be born in mind that equity regards the substance, rather than the form. In substance, therefore, what is the real purpose of the Fair Trade Act? No matter what high-sounding terms are used, such as "free and open competition," "unfair competition," and "protection of good will," it is a matter of common knowledge that it is a price-fixing statute, designed primarily to destroy competition at the retail level. The high-sounding phrases used with respect to the trademark owners are simply excuses and not a reason for the law.

In the Old Dearborn case, supra, the court's final conclusion was that a non-signer was subject to the price-fixing provisions of the act, upon the theory that such individual, such as the appellant here, by purchasing the trade-marked goods with knowledge of the fair trade contract, impliedly assented to the contract and by such implied assent ratified, became a party to, and was bound by, the contract. This theory has been adopted by the courts which sustain the constitutionality of the statutes. In other words, they say that this is not a price-fixing statute. To us, this is an unrealistic view and to say that it is not a price-fixing statute is to deny the obvious. Once the price is fixed by contract or contracts between the manufacturer and the retailer or retailers, the non-signer is bound and the price becomes a fixed price to the non-signer. If this power of the owner of trade-marked goods to set the price at which the non-signer must sell is not the power to fix prices, then what is it? However, the courts sustaining the acts, including the Supreme Court of the United States, in effect, have been adhering to the form of the statute and overlooking the substance. This we do not feel is a proper view.

Although we fully realize the fact that several courts are not in complete accord upon the questions discussed in this opinion, nevertheless, we are of the opinion that the better reasoning and logic are to be found in those decisions above quoted at some length which have declared the Fair Trade Acts unconstitutional and void.

[Line of Authority]

It should be noted that this particular statute is in no wise a revenue producing measure, nor does the state, as such, become a party to its effect in any way. If such were the case, an entirely different line of authority would have to be considered, but, inasmuch as this is not true, there is no necessity in lengthening this opinion by a discussion of this subject.

[Nonsigner Provision Invalid]

In view of the above, it will be determined that § 2, Chapter 44 of the Laws of 1937: (49-2-2 N. M. S. A. 1953) is unconstitutional and void as an arbitrary and unreasonable exercise of the police power without any susbtantial relation to the public health, safety, or general welfare insofar as it concerns persons who are not parties to contracts provided for in § 1, Chapter 44, Laws of 1937 (49-2-1 N. M. S. A. 1953).

[Other Questions]

Appellants have raised several additional questions, particularly with respect to the contention that the statute is unconstitutional by reason of being an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power to individuals, as establishing special-class legislation and granting special privileges and immunities and as having a defective title. These points not being necessary for this decision, they are specifically not ruled upon by the court. Neither will the court rule upon the appellant's contention that the statute is violative of the Sherman Act, either before or as amended by the McGuire Act.

[Reversed]

The District Court of Bernalillo County will be reversed with directions to vacate its judgments heretofore entered and to enter a judgment in conformity with thiis opinion.

It is so ordered.

We concur: EUGENE D. LUJAN, C. J., DANIEL K. SADLER, J., and J. C. COMPTON.

KIKER, J., absent from the state not participating.

[¶ 68,824] Francis J. Curtis, Trustee in Bankruptcy of B. P. R. Corporation v. Loew's Incorporated, et al.

In the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey. Civil Action File No. C-203-55. Filed June 10, 1957.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Pretrial Procedures—Interrogatories—Relevancy—Opinions and Conclusions—Unnamed Entities.—In a bankrupt theatre corporation's treble damage action, interrogatories seeking information required by the corporation to support its charges of monopolization, discrimination, restraint of competition, and conspiracy were relevant. The information sought would either constitute evidence or might be reasonably expected to lead to evidence. Interrogatories seeking information as to activities and transactions antedating the commencement of the operation of the corporation's theatres were proper because they might reasonably be expected to lead to evidence indicating intent, course of dealing, plan, concert of action, development of monopoly, effect on competition, and numerous other elements which the corporation must establish. An objection to certain interrogatories on the ground that they sought opinions and conclusions, some of them from a corporation or corporations, was overruled, and an objection to interrogatories directed to "affiliated, associated, subsidiary and predecessor companies and corporations" of the defendants was sustained because they related to unnamed entities.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9013.875.

For the plaintiff: Stein, Stein & Engel by Howard Engel and Richard Orlikoff (Illinois Bar).

For the defendants: Toner, Crowley, Woelper & Vanderbilt by Willard G. Woelper.

For a prior opinion of the U. S. District Court, District of New Jersey, see 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,573.

Opinion

[Interrogatories]

REYNIER J. WORTENDYKE, JR., District Judge [In full text]: This opinion is evoked by defendants' motion on objections to plaintiff's interrogatories. The action is for treble damages under Section 4 of the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. A. § 15), and an epitome of the allegations of the complaint is afforded in an earlier opinion of this Court in the same litigation, reported in [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,573] 147 F. Supp. 398.

[Plaintiff—Damage Period]

The indicated bankrupt corporation is alleged to have been lessee and operator of three motion picture theaters in the City of Chicago, viz.: Royal Theater, 1453 Milwaukee Avenue, Banner Theater, 1611-13 North Damen Avenue and Paulina Theater, 1339 North Paulina Street. The period of claimed damage charged as resulting from the actions of the defendants complained of is designated as that extending from March 1, 1944 to June 10, 1951.

In arriving at the following conclusions the Court has considered the oral arguments of counsel and filed briefs; also, the letter from plaintiff's attorney dated May 14, 1957, the documents enclosed therewith, and the letter of defendants' attorneys of June 5, 1957 relating to the foregoing.

Defendants' Objections to Plaintiff's Interrogatories Dated April 16, 1956.

[General Objection]

1. Defendants' comprehensive objection to all of plaintiff's interrogatories is overruled. Leonia Amusement Corp. v. Loew's Incorporated (D. C. N. Y. 1955) [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,134] 18 F. R. D. 503; New Dyckman Theater Corp. v. Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corp. (D. C. N. Y. 1954) [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,853] 16 F. R. D. 203, 207.

[Relevancy]

2. Defendants impugn the relevancy of the following groups of plaintiff's interrogatories, viz.:

Nos. 2 through 20	50	86
22	51	88
23	61 through 63	89 and
26	65 through 71	92.
35 through 38	80 through 84
44 through 47	85a

"In passing upon interrogatories, it is customary for the Court to inquire whether they are relevant and material, but to determine from the complaint itself their relevancy and materiality." New Dyckman Theater Corp. v. Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corp. (supra) at p. 207.

The presently objecting defendants have not moved to strike the complaint. They may not collaterally attack it by way of objections to interrogatories. The complaint remains as part of the frame-work of issues from which the relevancy of the interrogatories may be appraised. Plaintiff's burden in a case of this kind, and the appropriate judicial attitude toward his efforts to discharge that burden, are clearly expressed by Judge Yankwich in Fanchon & Marco v. Paramount Pictures (D. C. Cal. 1951, [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,909] 100 F. Supp. 84, affd. (9 Cir. 1954) [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,843] 215 F. 2d 167, cert. den. 348 U. S. 912 (1955), where he says (at p. 89):

"So he who claims to have been injured by such preference must show (a) that the preference was the result of concert of action between the defendants, (b) that it was unreasonable and not based upon the various factors which courts have considered as reasonable considerations entering into the determination,—such as admission price, showing of double features, gift night and other exploitation methods, the rental terms, the extent to which comparative theaters compete with each other,—and (c) that he has been damaged by such action.

"As to the manner of proof, the Courts have adopted a liberal attitude and have permitted inferences of joint action to be drawn from parallel action."

See also Stanzler v. Loew's Theater and Realty Corporation, (D. C. R. I. 1955) [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,439] 19 F. R. D. 286.

[Information as to Charges]

The interrogatories in the first of the foregoing groups seek answers which will disclose facts required by the plaintiff to support his charges of monopolization, discrimination, restraint of competition, and conspiracy which are clearly set forth in the complaint. Information sought will either constitute evidence for the plaintiff or may be reasonably expected to lead to evidence required by the plaintiff to support the charges. The situation presented by the issues framed by the pleadings in the present case is, in numerous aspects, similar to that recognized as supporting a cause of action for treble damages in United States v. Paramount Pictures (1947) [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,244], 334 U. S. 131. Most, if not all of the violations of the anti-trust laws found to exist in Paramount are charged to have taken place in the case at bar. While it is true that the present plaintiff's bankrupt, hereinafter referred to as B. P. R., did not commence to operate its three theaters until March 1, 1944, and that its termination of the operation of Paulina Theater took place on June 10, 1951, the pleaded so-called "Chicago System" of film licensing, with all the criticized phases of participation therein by the defendants, renders clearly relevant to the present issues the series and background of negotiations, agreements, practices, understandings, conspiracies and acquiescence and participation in concerted conduct claimed to have adversely affected B. P. R. despite their origin prior to the commencement of theater operation by B. P. R. As the plaintiff properly points out in his memorandum, the incorporation in Rule 33 of the Rules of Civil Procedure of the provisions of Rule 26(b) thereof enunciates the criterion determinative of the propriety of a discovery interrogatory that the matter inquired into must be relevant to the issues in the action or must appear reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. Vilastor Kent Theater Corp. v. Brandt (D. C. N. Y. 1955) [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,102] 18 F. R. D. 199. More specifically, even though an agreement among the defendants may have been originally entered into prior to the commencement by B. P. R. of its theater operations, the terms of that agreement, if adhered to by the defendants during the period of the bankrupt's theater operations, are not only relevant but may, in themselves, be evidential of some of the anti-trust violations charged in the complaint. In any event, they would seem to afford a likely avenue to discovery of relevant, and therefore admissible, evidence of the motives, reasons and objects of the conduct complained of. The complaint in the case at bar is not "notice pleading," but a very comprehensive narrative and catalog of acts, conditions and consequences extending over a period of time commencing prior to the entry of B. P. R. into theater operation in Chicago. Viewed against the allegations of the complaint, as elaborated by the testimony of Ben Eisenberg, given in his pretrial deposition, the number and scope of the charges upon which the plaintiff bases his claim to recovery renders relevant and proper the group of interrogatories immediately under discussion.

This Court does not feel that it can properly decide any of the ultimate issues in this case as a means of determining at this stage of the proceedings the propriety of the interrogatories under attack. The general principles stated in the various authorities cited by the objecting defendants in their brief on the present motion are, of course, sound, but are not of controlling application here.

Passing to interrogatory No. 22, while the period of time therein referred to commences prior to the commencement of bankrupt's theater operations, that period terminates well within the period of such operation and the question asks for changes effected in the exhibition run for each theater, the motive, reason and objective behind each of which changes may only appear from facts surrounding the inception of the system of runs to which the question relates. A similar situation is implicit in the inquiry in interrogatory No. 23. I therefore find both of these two interrogatories proper.

["Clearances"]

Counsel for defendants emphasizes the necessity for "clearances" in the allocation of licenses for motion picture film exhibition, but one of the questions which must arise in the present case involves the determination of the reasonableness of the "clearance" granted by defendants under licenses to favored theaters, for the purpose of concluding whether such "clearance" grants were discriminatory, or tended to restrain competition. Cf. Chorak v. RKO Radio Pictures (9 Cir. 1952) [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,267] 196 F. 2d 225, cert. den. 344 U. S. 887. I therefore find interrogatory No. 26 proper.

[Admission Prices]

The next group (Nos. 35 through 38) comprises inquiries into the identity of exhibiting theaters paying defendant distributors differing rates for film rentals; whether minimum admission prices were imposed by the distributors at any time on exhibiting theaters since January 1, 1942; the relationship, if any, between the minimum admission price requirement and a particular feature picture; and knowledge (for the purpose of determining acquiescence or concert) on the part of any defendant that minimum admission prices had been designated by others. These interrogatories I also consider proper.

["Favored" Theatres]

Interrogatories numbered 44 and 45 refer to licenses by the defendants of feature pictures to B & K and Essaness theaters, who are charged with having been favored over those of B. P. R. Interrogatories numbered 46 and 47 refer to specifically named theaters of which the ownership and control may be shown to have resided in one or more of the defendants, or which may have been the beneficiaries of defendants' discrimination. I see nothing in the interrogatories themselves, when viewed in the light of the allegations of the complaint and the testimony of Eisenberg, which render these interrogatories objectionable, and I therefore sustain them.

[Price Allocations]

Interrogatories numbered 50 and 51 make inquiry respecting price allocations in licensing feature pictures for outlying runs in Chicago. I see no basis for criticizing these interrogatories and they are sustained.

[Advantageous Playing Periods]

Interrogatories numbered 61 through 63 evidently relate to the Eisenberg deposition and seek to bring home to defendants' knowledge, through their employees, the desire of the three therein named theaters for more advantageous playing periods. Defendants have not satisfied me that these interrogatories are improper. While I cannot visualize exactly how the plaintiff will fit the information secured through answers to these interrogatories into its proof picture on the trial, the broad scope of the complaint, supplemented by the deposition testimony of Eisenberg, induces me to feel that the inquiries in the criticized interrogatories are justified. They are therefore sustained.

[Discrimination]

I cannot concur in defendants' contention that interrogatories numbered 65 through 71 seek information which is irrelevant. Each of them points directly to specific charges of discrimination frequently reiterated in the testimony of Eisenberg. These questions also relate the asserted discriminations to the charge of consequent restraint of competition. The objections to the questions are over-ruled.

[Dealings and Operations]

It seems apparent that interrogatories numbered 80 through 84 relate (1) to the general course of dealing (concededly over a period of time commencing prior to the operation of the B. P. R. theaters) tending to support the charge of discrimination in favor of B & K theaters; (2) to the operation by any of the defendants of the Palace Theater; and (3) to the receipt by any of the defendants of requests from any theater in Chicago for leave to bid or negotiate for the first or second outlying run in any zone established by the defendants. One cannot read the Paramount case (supra) in the Supreme Court without being forced to the conclusion that the scope of inquiry apparent from the group of interrogatories presently discussed does not exceed the bounds of relevancy in the light of the charges in the complaint and the testimony of Eisenberg. These interrogatories are sustained.

["Substantial Competition"]

Because two successive interrogatories put by the plaintiff are numbered 85, the defendants refer to the second of these two as No. 85a. The emphasis in interrogatory referred to as 85a seems to be on the words "substantial competition" and the answer to the inquiry may reasonably be expected to be offered in behalf of the plaintiff to show that there may have been some restraint of competition even though not substantial in character. The inquiry is therefore relevant and is sustained.

[Other Rulings]

Interrogatory No. 86 is supportable upon the same theory as that which leads me to sustain its immediate predecessor, and it will be similarly treated.

Interrogatories numbered 88 and 89 go directly to the crux of this case as I understand it from the pleadings and the depositions, in view of the principles enunciated by our Supreme Court in the Paramount case above cited. They are therefore sustained as relevant.

Interrogatory No. 92 is also sustained for similar reasons.

[Transactions Antedating Operations]

3. Included in paragraph numbered 3 of defendants' objections to plaintiff's interrogatories are those which I have already dealt with and some others. The essence of the defendants' objection set forth in paragraph numbered 3 is the relation of the interrogatories therein enumerated to a period of time antedating March 1, 1944 when B. P. R. Corp. commenced operating the Banner, Paulina and Royal Theaters. An examination of all of the interrogatories criticized on this ground convinces me that they are proper because they may reasonably be expected to lead to evidence indicating intent, course of dealing, plan, concert of action, development of monopoly, effect on competition, and the numerous other elements which will be required to support some or all of the grounds of liability on which the plaintiff bases his right to recover in this action.

To be more specific, interrogatory numbered 1 seeks information regarding the relationships between the defendants on the one hand and Balaban & Katz and Essaness on the other, respecting the licensing of feature pictures for exhibition in Chicago. Although the commencement of the period of dealing between these parties in this connection is designated as January 1, 1940, the development of the ultimate relationship, which persisted when B. P. R. entered the situation, and which is alleged to have adversely affected its competitive opportunities, renders relevant the circumstances surrounding the inception of the arrangement, as well as the successive steps preceding and leading up to the commencement of the alleged adverse impact upon the theaters of the plaintiff. For similar reasons, the other interrogatories which relate to periods of time commencing before March 1, 1944, when tested by the appropriate criteria, seem to me to be entirely proper, and are therefore sustained. Milgram v. Loew's Inc., (3 Cir. 1951) [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,938], 192 F. 2d 579, 584. Defendants' objections to the interrogatories listed in paragraph numbered 3 of their statement of objections are overruled.

[Opinions and Conclusions Not Sought]

4. and 5. Defendants criticize certain of plaintiff's interrogatories for the reason that they seek opinions and conclusions, some of them from a corporation or corporations. Of course, it is obvious that the individual mind may express a conclusion; while a corporation, having no mind, cannot do so except as one of its officers or agents may be authorized and competent to speak for the corporation.

Typical of the interrogatories criticized on this ground is that numbered 20, which reads as follows:

> "20. During the period from January 1, 1942 to November 1, 1947, were your pictures available to the Southtown Theater to play immediately following the Tivoli Theater? If so, state why they were made available to the Southtown Theater to play immediately following the Tivoli, and if not, why not."

This interrogatory comprehends three inquiries,—the first may be answered yes or no. It must, of course, be read in conjunction with the charges in the complaint and the inquiries in the other interrogatories from which the connotation of the adjective "available" will readily appear. Simply paraphrased, the first portion of the interrogatory seeks to learn whether Southtown was permitted to play pictures of the defendants immediately after the run at the Tivoli. That inquiry calls not for a conclusion, but for a positive or negative answer. The next subdivision of the interrogatory assumes an affirmative answer to the first part and seeks the reason for such availability; and the final query, against the possibility of a negative answer to the first part, seeks the reason for nonavailability. Certainly the defendant whose picture is referred to should know better than anyone else whether it was available to a specified exhibiting theater at any particular time, and if so, why, and if not, why not.

Defendants cite Judge Rodney's opinion in United States v. Columbia Steel Co. (D. C. Del. 1947) 7 F. R. D. 183, as authority for the claimed impropriety of the interrogatories for seking a conclusion. The principle in Columbia Steel is well recognized. But it seems to me to be inapplicable to the interrogatories presently under consideration. Defendants say in their brief, page 34:

> "Plaintiff's interrogatories 18, 19 and 20 are of the 'Why not?' type. That is, they ask whether the defendants licensed certain theaters in certain ways, and, if not, why they did not do so."

Certainly the inquiry whether the defendants licensed certain theaters in certain ways does not call for an opinion or a conclusion, but merely seeks to extract information respecting the intent, the motives and the objectives of the defendants in acting as they did, and this is sought for the purpose of determining the relationship of their actions (or acquiescence) to monopolization, discrimination, and restraint of competition, allegedly adversely affecting B. P. R. As far as the "Why not" phase of the interrogation is concerned, the answer would not be an opinion, nor would it be a contention; but rather a reason, the relevancy of which to the question of the legality or illegality of the criticized action seems perfectly obvious. Because I do not find that the interrogatories in this group (enumerated in paragraph 4 of the defendants' objections) are argumentative in nature and call for answers in the nature of opinions or conclusions, I over-rule the objections to them.

The same interrogatories which are criticized in objection number 4 of the defendant are also criticized in the objection numbered 5 on the ground that because the defendants are bodies corporate, and therefore artificial persons, the interrogatories cannot be answered because only a natural person can give an opinion. Because I have ruled that these interrogatories do not call for opinions, and because Rule 33 directs that interrogatories to a private corporation shall be answered by any officer or agent who shall furnish such information as is available to the party, I adhere to my decision to over-rule the objections to these interrogatories enumerated respectively in paragraphs 4 and 5 of the defendants' statement of objections.

[Unnamed Entities]

6. Finally, defendants object to such of the interrogatories as purport to be directed to "'affiliated, associated, subsidiary and predecessor companies and corporations'" of the defendants. This objection is well taken. To so much of such interrogatories as purport to relate to such unnamed entities, I sustain the defendants' objections upon the authority of Stanzler v. Loew's Theater and Realty Corp. (D. C. R. I. 1955) [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,439] 19 F. R. D. 286, and Savannah Theater Co. v. Lucas & Jenkins (D. C. Ga. 1943) 10 F. R. D. 46.

[Order]

An order may be presented in conformity with the views hereinabove expressed.

[¶ 68,825] United States v. Edward Lowenthal.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. September Term, 1957—September Session, 1957. No. 12034. Dated October 2, 1957.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. LABUY, District Judge.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Violation of Cease and Desist Order—Civil Penalty Suit—Appeal.—A judgment imposing penalties on an individual for two violations of a Federal Trade Commission order prohibiting him from representing that his business is other than that of obtaining information for use in the collection of debts was affirmed. The trial court's refusal to grant the individual's motion for a directed verdict was not error since a motion for a directed verdict is not applicable to nor proper in a nonjury trial. A registered mail return receipt, relating to the service of the Commission's order upon the individual was properly admitted in evidence pursuant to Section 5(f) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, which provides in part, that a return post office receipt shall be proof of service of a Commission order.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5089.16; FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8641, 8661.50.

For the plaintiff-appellee: Robert Tieken and John Peter Lulinski.

For the defendant-appellant: Robert J. Downing and John F. Neylan.

Affirming a judgment affixing penalties for violations of a Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order in Dkt. 4832.

Before MAJOR, FINNEGAN and PARKINSON, Circuit Judges.

[Appeal]

PARKINSON, Circuit Judge [In full text]: In this appeal the defendant seeks reversal of a judgment of the District Court affixing penalties for two violations of a cease and desist order of the Federal Trade Commission entered on April 27, 1944.

[Trial Court]

Trial was to the court and upon the conclusion of the Government's case the defendant filed a written motion for a directed verdict "pursuant to Rule 50(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure," which was overruled, and the defendant then rested without offering any evidence in defense.

[Claimed Errors]

The only errors relied on for reversal by the defendant are rulings on the evidence and the failure to grant his motion for a directed verdict.

[Directed Verdict]

Rule 50 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure applies to trials by jury only and a motion for a directed verdict is not applicable to nor proper in a nonjury trial. Morris v. Prefabrication Engineering Co., 5 Cir., 1947, 160 F. 2d 779.

[Evidence]

The defendant complains of the admission in evidence of the last page of Gov-

-rnment's Exhibit 1. This exhibit was a certified copy of the findings and conclusions, the cease and desist order of April 27, 1944, the registered mail return receipts of the Respondents and the certificate of the Secretary of the Federal Trade Commission certifying that no petition was served upon the Commission to set aside the cease and desist order of April 27, 1944 "issued and served by the Federal Trade Commission." It was admitted in evidence without objection with the exception of the last page consisting of the registered mail return receipts to which the defendant objected for the reason that they had nothing to do with the cease and desist order and the signatures thereon had not been identified.

Title 15 U. S. C. § 45(f) provides, in applicable part, that > "the return post office receipt for said * * * order * * * registered and mailed as aforesaid shall be proof of the service of the same."

Substantiated by the certificate of the Federal Trade Commission, the testimony of the witness Equi and the presumption of regularity which supports the official acts of public officials, U. S. v. Chemical Foundation, 1926, 272 U. S. 1, 14, the return registered mail receipt of Edward Lowenthal was properly admitted pursuant to this statute.

The undisputed evidence is that the cease and desist order against Edward Lowenthal was entered by the Federal Trade Commission on April 27, 1944 and was served on him by registered mail on May 1, 1944 and became final on June 30, 1944; that the witness, Philip Equi, an attorney-examiner for the Federal Trade Commission, interviewed Edward Lowenthal in his office on North Dearborn Street in Chicago, Illinois on more than one occasion, and on or about December 28, 1951 he visited a building on North Dearborn Street in Chicago, Illinois to see Edward Lowenthal and when he entered the building he looked on the directory in the lobby and saw Edward Lowenthal's name listed together with Retailers Service Bureau and Thomas Webster at room number 800; that he went to room number 800, on the door of which was printed the inscription of Retailers Service Bureau; that he entered the door and found a man who identified himself as Edward Lowenthal; that he had a conversation with Edward Lowenthal and told him he was investigating his compliance or non-compliance with the cease and desist order of April 27, 1944; that Edward Lowenthal admitted to him that he was the Edward Lowenthal named in Government's Exhibit 1, and they discussed the order and Edward Lowenthal indicated he wished to co-operate with the Federal Trade Commission and would be willing to discuss entering into a stipulation with the Commission; and that he was the owner or was trading or doing business as Thomas Webster and Retailers Service Bureau.

This was sufficient evidence to support the findings of the District Court.

The requests for admissions and the responses thereto were not introduced in evidence and in this case the District Court was not required to give any consideration thereto on the trial on the merits.

There having been sufficient evidence, exclusive of Government's Exhibit 6, to support the findings of the District Court, the admission in evidence of Government's Exhibit 6 was not reversible error. Herlihy Mid-Continent Company v. Northern Indiana Public Service Company, 7 Cir., 1957, 245 F. 2d 440.

[Affirmed]

Finding no reversible error, the judgment is affirmed.

[¶ 68,826] State of Minnesota by J. W. Clark, Commissioner of Department of Business Development, Appellant v. Harry K. Wolkoff and Max Levin, trustees of Halpern Family Trust, et al., Respondents; Minnesota Council of Retail Trade Associations, intervenor, Appellant.

In the Minnesota Supreme Court. No. 37025. No. 60, Ramsey County. Filed October 4, 1957.

Minnesota Unfair Trade Practices Act

Sales Below Cost—Unlawful Purpose or Effect of Injuring Competitors and Destroying Competition—Sufficiency of Evidence.—The dismissal of an action to enjoin operators of a retail grocery chain from offering and selling merchandise at less than cost in violation of the Minnesota sales below cost law was affirmed. The evidence supported the trial court's finding that advertisements and sales at less than cost were not made for the purpose or with the effect of injuring competitors and destroying competition. Under the Minnesota law, both injury to competitors and the destroying of competition must be established as either the purpose or the effect of such advertisements or sales. The law provides that any sale by a retailer below an eight per cent mark-up, for the purpose or with the effect of injuring competitors or destroying competition, shall be prima facie evidence of a violation. Therefore, by showing such a sale with the purpose or effect of either injuring competitors or destroying competition, a plaintiff makes a prima facie showing of both elements. However, the establishment of a prima facie case is by no means conclusive.

The trial court did not err in admitting in evidence advertisements showing that the defendants' competitors were charging the same or lower prices. Such evidence was reasonably corroborative of the defendants' contentions that it was customary to set prices on the basis of what competitors were charging and that their purpose in setting these prices was not injury to competitors or destruction of competition. The fact that competitors were charging the same or lower prices for a reasonable time before and after the alleged violations was valid evidence that the defendants' prices did not, and even could not, have the effect of injuring such competitors or destroying competition. Evidence supported the trial court's finding that the advertisements and sales did not destroy or even diminish competition and had no effect whatever in the direction of destroying competition. The phrase "destroying competition" requires, at the very least some substantial damage to the competitive atmosphere of the defendants' trade area or to a competitor.

See Sales Below Cost, Vol. 2, ¶ 7151.25.

Sales Below Cost—Defense—Meeting of Competition—Good Faith—Legal Prices. —A merchant who, in good faith, sets the price of an article on the basis of a competitor's price, which price he in good faith believes to be a legal one, does not violate the Minnesota sales below cost law. The statutory exemption to sales below cost made in good faith to meet the legal prices of a competitor does not require a person charged with selling below cost to establish the absolute legality of the competitors' prices. In an action charging that operators of a retail grocery chain sold merchandise at less than cost, a trial court properly admitted in evidence advertisements showing that competitors of the grocery chain were charging the same or lower prices on identical merchandise. The court did not err in determining that the grocery chain acted in good faith in believing that it was meeting legal prices. The very fact that a competitor advertises a certain price on a given article over a long period of time without being challenged, and apparently without adverse economic effects, may warrant a merchant in assuming that such price is a legal one.

See Sales Below Cost, Vol. 2, ¶ 7161.25.

For the appellants: Miles Lord, Attorney General, and Howard H. Gelb, Special Attorney, St. Paul, Minn., for the State of Minnesota; and Loftsgaarden & Loftsgaarden, St. Paul, Minn., for Minnesota Council of Retail Trade Associations, Intervenor.

For the respondents: Lipschultz, Altman, Geraghty & Mulally, St. Paul, Minn.

Syllabus

1. Under Minnesota law, offers or sales at less than cost are illegal only where both injury to competitors and the destroying of competition are established as either the purpose or the effect of the defendant's action.

2. M. S. A. 325.06(4), which requires, among other things, that the provisions of § 325.04 shall not apply to any sale made in good faith to meet the legal prices of a competitor, does not require that the defendant establish the absolute legality of his competitor's prices in order to rely on such price and come within such exemption. If a merchant in good faith sets the price of an article on the basis of a competitor's price, which he in good faith believes to be a legal price, there is no violation.

3. Section 325.06(4) does not prevent the introduction of competitor's prices in all instances or for all purposes without the foundation required by this section. Where the defendants claim that sales below cost were necessary to actual business survival as well as a type of business promotion and advertising, and that such sales did not have the effect of destroying competition, competitors' prices, for a reasonable time before and after the defendants' prices, may be shown to substantiate such claims.

4. In an action by the state to enjoin the operators of a small retail grocery chain from offering and selling merchandise at less than cost as prohibited by law, the evidence examined and held to support the trial court's finding that, although certain items were advertised and sold at less than cost, such advertisements and sales were not made for the purpose or with the effect of injuring competitors and destroying competition.

5. A trial court sitting without a jury need only find the ultimate issuable facts. Where the decisive facts found by the trial court are sustained by the evidence, it is not necessary to specifically discuss proposed findings of fact which would not change the result.

6. Where full latitude is afforded a plaintiff on cross-examination of a defendant, including the use of parts of the defendant's deposition, there is no prejudicial error in the trial court's excluding the introduction of the entire deposition of the defendant, particularly where the plaintiff does not set forth the allegedly damaging evidence contained in the deposition and no offer of proof appears in the record.

Affirmed.

Opinion

[Trial Court Ruling]

DELL, Chief Justice [In full text]: In this action the state seeks to enjoin the defendants from offering and selling merchandise at less than cost as prohibited by law. Following a trial without a jury, the court found that while there were advertisements and sales at less than cost, there was not the necessary purpose or effect required by statute to constitute a violation of law and that, therefore, the defendants were entitled to judgment of dismissal on the merit. Plaintiff appeals from the order denying its alternative motion for amended findings and conclusions, or a new trial.[1]

[Defendants' Business]

When this action was instituted, defendants owned four retail grocery stores in different areas of St. Paul operating under the trade name of Cut Price Super Markets. Subsequently the defendants acquired a fifth store. In the latter part of 1955 defendants advertised and sold certain brands of ketchup, coffee, and sugar at less than their cost. Certain of their competitors testified that they were injured by such action. The evidence indicates that defendants operated in a highly competitive market—their competitors ranging from large national chains, operating as many as 50 stores in defendants' trade area, to one-store independents. One of defendants' stores has four large chain competitors within eight blocks; another has three within one mile; and another has five within a mile and a half. The evidence indicates that within a rather broad limitation set by actual cost the most important factor in setting the price of an item is what competitors are charging for such items. Such features as trading stamps, large color advertisements, and giveaway policies of competitors, as well as other obvious economic factors, also influenced the determination of what price to give a particular item. Defendants' position appears to be that these advertisements and sales were made in good faith as necessary to actual business survival and were not made with the purpose or effect required by the statute. They introduced numerous advertisements of their competitors showing that they were charging the same or lower prices for these identical items. There is also undisputed evidence that defendants' relative position in their market had declined in the two years prior to these advertisements and sales while some of their competitors showed substantial increases during this same period.

[1] Intervenor's position is substantially the same as plaintiff's and therefore will not be considered separately.

[Requisite Purpose or Effect]

1. Some preliminary consideration of the applicable law is necessary. Not every sale below cost is condemned under Minnesota law. Such an offer or sale must be accompanied by a certain purpose or have a certain effect. Twenty-nine other states have statutory prohibitions against sales below cost applicable to most industries and products.[2] All but one of these states[3] require that the offer or sale be made with some specific culpable purpose or have such an effect.[4] The absence of such a qualification would seem to render such a law unconstitutional.[5]

Under M. S. A. 325.04, only those offers or sales of goods at less than cost are declared illegal which are made:

> "* * * for the purpose or with the effect of injuring competitors and destroying competition, * * *." (Italics supplied.)

It is to be noted that both injury to competitors and the destroying of competition must be established as either the purpose or effect of the defendants' actions in order to find or sustain a violation. Apparently realizing the difficulty of enforcement of this type of law, the legislature provided some aid to the establishment of the dual purpose or effect necessary.[6] It provided that any sale by a retailer below an 8-percent markup, for the purpose or with the effect of injuring competitors or destroying competition, shall be prima facie evidence of a violation.[7] Thus, by showing such a sale with the purpose or effect of either injuring competitors or destroying competition, a plaintiff makes a prima facie showing of both elements. However, the establishment of a prima facie case is by no means conclusive.[8] If a court finds from competent and sufficient evidence that the challenged offer or sale was not, in fact, made with the requisite dual purpose nor had such effect, then it must find that there is no violation.[9]

[Advertisements of Competitors]

2. We will first consider plaintiff's contention that the trial court erred in admitting the advertisements of the defendants' competitors, since this evidence constituted a major part of the defendants' case.[10] These advertisements were published during a period from approximately six months prior to defendants' alleged violations until about one month after the advertisements and sales challenged in this action. Certain of these advertisements were introduced to show the high degree of competition in the St. Paul grocery market. They were used to demonstrate the competitive influence of large advertisements, gift stamps, and other

---

[2] 2 CCH, TRADE REGULATION REPORTS par. 7101. Nine other states have similar prohibitions applicable to certain specific industries or products. Id. See, also, Louisiana Wholesale Distributors Assn. v. Rosenzweig [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,262], 214 La. 1, 6, 36 So. (2d) 403, 404.

[3] New Jersey has no requirement of purpose or effect. This statute has been declared unconstitutional because of this defect. State v. Packard-Bamberger & Co. Inc. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,240], 123 N. J. L. 180, 8 A. (2d) 291.

[4] 2 CCH, TRADE REGULATION REPORTS par. 7151.

[5] See, State v. Packard-Bamberger & Co., Inc. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,240], 123 N. J. L. 180, 8 A. (2d) 291; see, also, Fairmont Creamery Co. v. Minnesota, 274 U. S. 1, 47 S. Ct. 506, 71 L. Ed. 893; McElhone v. Geror [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,042], 207 Minn. 580, 292 N. W. 414; Commonwealth v. Zasloff, 137 Pa. Super. 96, 8 A. (2d) 801; Perkins v. King Soopers [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,677], 122 Colo. 263, 221 P. (2d) 343. But, see, May's Drug Stores v. State Tax Comm. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,741], 242 Iowa 319, 45 N. W. (2d) 245.

[6] Such aid to the establishment of a violation is not uncommon. See, e. g., Rev. Code of Wash. § 19.88.140 (intent); Calif. Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 17041, 17026 (cost).

[7] M. S. A. 325.52.

[8] See, Blumberg v. Palm, 238 Minn. 249, 253, 56 N. W. (2d) 412, 415; Topinka v. Minnesota Mutual Life Ins. Co. 189 Minn. 75, 248 N. W. 660; State v. Twentieth Century Market [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,073], 236 Wis. 215, 221, 294 N. W. 873, 876.

[9] See, Opinion Attorney General, No. 681-A, November 8, 1946 [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,516]; Opinions Attorney General, No. 417-E, November 24, 1947 [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,208], February 4, 1949 [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,372], March 23, 1949 [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,406], and July 5, 1949 [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,459].

[10] Plaintiff actually assigns as error certain determinations allegedly made in the trial court's memorandum. While a memorandum may be used to explain ambiguous or vague findings, it is extremely doubtful if any error in a memorandum would warrant a new trial or reversal. Since a correct decision will not be reversed because it was based on the wrong reasoning (1 Dunnell, Dig. [3 ed.] § 421), the opinion of the trial judge, as expressed in a memorandum opinion, may be disregarded. However, since plaintiff's argument under this assignment appears to be directed to the alleged erroneous admission of certain advertisements, we will consider the assignment of error as so specified.

giveaway features employed by defendants' competitors. The competitive activity of the defendants' trade area is a legitimate area of inquiry in actions of this kind and insofar as they were introduced for this purpose, we cannot say that the trial court erred in admitting such evidence.

[Meeting Competition]

Plaintiff contends more specifically, however, that insofar as these advertisements showed that the defendants' competitors were charging the same or lower prices on identical items, they were inadmissible since there was no preliminary showing as required by § 325.06(4). This section states that the provisions of § 325.04 shall not apply to sales made:

> "In an endeavor made in good faith to meet the legal prices of a competitor selling the same commodity, articles, goods, wares, or merchandise in the same locality or trade area."

We are of the opinion that the record furnishes a sufficient evidentiary basis to warrant the trial court in concluding that these preliminary requirements were satisfied.

There is obviously sufficient evidence to justify a finding that these competitors were in the same locality or trade area. The principal area of dispute relates rather to the issue of the "legality" of these competitors' prices. Plaintiff takes the position that § 325.06(4) requires that the defendant must establish the absolute legality of these competitors' prices at his peril. We do not agree. Such an interpretation would ignore the qualification of "an endeavor made in good faith," an all-important phrase in this exemption. We are of the opinion that an examination of the history of this type of provision and a consideration of the practicalities involved necessitates a less strict interpretation.

An exemption such as this is common in unfair trade acts. Eighteen states have provisions similar to Minnesota, i. e., exempting sales below cost made in good faith to meet the legal prices of a competitor.[11] Eight states require only good-faith meeting of competition without reference to the legality of his price.[12] Certain acts originally were absolute in requiring that the competitor's price was a "legal" price, without regard to the good faith of the defendant. Such an absolute requirement has been termed invalid.

As stated in Commonwealth v. Zasloff [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,034], 338 Pa. 457, 465, 13 A. (2d) 67, 71:

> "* * * And how could a merchant know whether a selling price which he proposed to fix was legal because it met 'the legal price of a competitor for merchandise of the same grade, quantity and quality'? How could such 'legal price of a competitor' be ascertained without examining the competitor's books in order to determine whether his price was legal? The standard set by the act to differentiate criminal from legitimate sales is so vague, indefinite and incapable of practical application that this in itself would make its enforcement a violation of the due process clause: * * *."

In State v. Packard-Bamberger & Co. Inc. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,240], 123 N. J. L. 180, 185, 188, 8 A. (2d) 291, 294, 295, the New Jersey Supreme Court made this comment on such an absolute provision:

> "* * * How a person is to determine the legality of the price of a competitor is not declared, and the impracticability, if not the impossibility of determining the 'legality' of a competitor's price is obvious.
>
> * * *
>
> "* * * A person might believe he was complying with the provisions of this act in all respects, and find himself guilty of its violation because * * * he met the price of a competitor, believing such price to be a lawful one, when it was not * * *."

Thus, in response to arguments similar to plaintiffs' here, the qualification of "good faith" has been held to obviate any absolute requirement that the defendant must establish the legality of the competitor's prices. In People v. Pay Less Drug Store [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,296], 25 Cal. (2d) 108, 117, 153 P. (2d) 9, 14, the California Supreme Court pointed out:

[11] Ark. Stat. 1947 Ann. § 70-306(d); Calif. Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17050(d); Colo. Rev. Stat. 1953. § 55-2-6(4); Ky. Rev. Stat. § 365.040(4); La. Rev. Stat. 1950, 51:426(7); Rev. Stat. of Maine 1954, c. 184, § 3(VIII); Rev. Codes of Mont. 1947, § 51-107(d); N. H. Rev. Stat. Ann. 1955. 358:3(h); N. J. Stat. Ann. (Perm. ed.) § 56:4-14 (e); N. Dak. Rev. Code of 1943, § 51-1007(7); Okla. Stat. Ann. (Perm. ed.) Title 15, § 598.7; Ore. Rev. Stat. § 646.120(4); Tenn. Code Ann. § 69-304(h); Utah Code Ann. 1953, § 13-5-12(d); Code of Va. 1950, § 59-19(7); Rev. Code of Wash. § 19.88.100(4); W. Va. Code of 1955, § 4678(8h) (d); Wyo. Comp. Stat. 1945, § 39-410(D).

[12] Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 44-1463(7); Idaho Code, § 48-407(d); Gen. Stat. of Kan. 1949, § 50-405(e); Ann. Code of Md. art. 83, § 114(h); Ann. Laws of Mass. c. 93, § 14G(h); Rev. Stat. Neb. 1943, § 59-1206(7); Purdon's Pa. Stat. Ann. (Perm. ed.) Title 73, § 216(g); Wis. Stat. 1955, § 100.30 (6)(g).

"* * * The requirement is not absolute. It is merely that the defendants shall have endeavored 'in good faith' to meet the legal prices of a competitor. A similar provision was upheld in State v. Sears, 4 Wn. 2d 200 [103 P. 2d 337, 345], the court saying 'that if a merchant in good faith reduces his prices to meet those of a competitor, who he in good faith believes has a legal price, he will not be violating either the intent or the wording of the act.' The provision therefore is not like that involved in Commonwealth v. Zasloff, * * * also, State v. Packard-Bamberger & Co., * * * holding invalid a provision which exempted the merchant if the price was made 'to meet the legal price of a competitor' as an absolute requirement without according him the opportunity of showing his good faith."

In McIntire v. Borofsky [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,266], 95 N. H. 174, 177, 59 A. (2d) 471, 474, the New Hampshire Supreme Court stated concisely:

"One of the exceptions to the act is 'where the price of merchandise is made in good faith to meet legal competition.' * * * If this required the retailer to examine his competitor's books to ascertain whether the competition was legal, it would be of doubtful validity. * * * All that is required of the retailer, however, is an endeavor 'in good faith' to meet the legal prices of his competitor."

We are of the opinion that such an interpretation is the practical and correct one. If a merchant in good faith sets the price of an article on the basis of a competitor's price, which price he in good faith believes to be a legal one, there is no violation.

In the case now before us we cannot say that the court erred in determining that the defendants acted in good faith in believing they were meeting legal prices. The inferences are conflicting. Although we may have reached a different determination on a de novo consideration, there is sufficient evidence in the record to permit the trial court to infer the good faith of the defendants, including direct testimony of such "good faith." The very fact that a competitor advertises a certain price on a given article over a long period of time without being challenged, and apparently without adverse economic effects, may warrant a merchant in assuming that such price is a legal one.

[Evidence of Purpose or Effect]

3. Furthermore, plaintiff's entire argument appears to be based on the assumption that this section prevents the introduction of competitor's prices in all instances, for all purposes, unless there is the required foundation set forth in this section. Again we cannot agree. Even if such evidence were inadmissible as a defense under § 325.06 (4) insofar as it relates to defendant's meeting of competitor's prices, this does not render its admission fatal where it may be properly admitted for another purpose.

From a review of the record, it appears that the defendants' theory in introducing this evidence was much broader than merely supporting a claim that they were meeting competitor's prices. As previously mentioned, part of this evidence was directed to showing the high competitive features of defendants' trade area. The defense also contended that it was customary to set prices on the basis of what competitors were charging for the same items, and that their "purpose" in setting these prices was not injury to competitors or destruction of competition but rather actual business survival as well as a type of promotion and advertising to counteract the giveaway and trading-stamp schemes of certain competitors. These contentions, if believed, would fairly negate any claim that the prices were established to injure competitors or destroy competition. This evidence is reasonably corroborative of such contentions. It is doubtful if such a "purpose" is merely "meeting the prices" of a competitor within the meaning of § 325.06(4) so as to prevent the introduction of such evidence without the preliminary foundation required by that section.

Furthermore, it is apparent that the defendants also introduced this evidence to show that their prices did not have the effect of injuring competitors or destroying competition. Plaintiff alleged in the complaint that the defendants' sales under cost were made for the purpose or had the effect of injuring competitors and destroying competition. Proof of either "purpose" or "effect" would warrant a finding of violation. Thus, defendants were entitled to introduce evidence tending to show that their acts did not have the effect claimed. The fact that competitors were charging the same or lower prices for a reasonable time before and after the alleged violations was valid evidence that the defendants' prices did not, and even could not, have the effect of injuring such competitors or destroying competition in the market involved.

Plaintiff's objection to the admission of this evidence was general and was not accompanied by any request for a qualification or restriction of the use of such evidence. Evidence lawfully admissible for one purpose cannot be excluded merely because it may be used for another purpose. Upon proper request the court should limit its application, but where the objection is to the whole and not accompanied by a request for restriction of its use, the trial court commits no prejudicial error in admitting the evidence.[13]

Plaintiff also contends that these advertisements were too remote in time from the date of the alleged violations charged in this action. We are of the opinion that they are not so remote as to warrant this court's interference.

The admission and exclusion of evidence rests, to a large degree, in the discretion of the trial court.[14] We cannot say that in the matter now before us the trial court abused such discretion.

[Sufficiency of Evidence]

4. Plaintiff next contends that the trial court erred in finding that the defendants' advertisements and sales were not in violation of law. The trial court found generally in accordance with the statutory language that the advertisements and sales were not made for the purpose or with the effect of injuring competitors and destroying competition. In its memorandum, however, the court indicated that while it felt that the plaintiff did make a prima facie case because of the evidence of "slight" injury to some independent competitors, in its opinion it was clear that the acts of the defendants were not done with the purpose or effect required under the law. Since, as previously discussed, both injury to competitors and destroying competition are necessary to establish a violation, the absence of either a purpose or effect of destroying competition will warrant a judgment for the defendants without regard to any injury to competitors. We are of the opinion that the record before us amply supports the trial court's position.

[Purpose of Defendants]

As far as the purpose of the defendants is concerned, we have the testimony of one of the defendants, a managing partner whose duty it was to compute and determine the selling price for the various grocery items sold by Cut Price. His testimony is replete with legitimate reasons why the challenged prices were established—reasons other than an intention to injure competitors or destroy competition. This witness testified that in setting the selling price on any item, the major consideration was the prices advertised by competitors on these same items and that was one reason for such prices. He further indicated that these prices were established to counteract the promotional and advertising effect of giveaway and trading-stamp schemes of competitors and to regain business which the defendants had recently lost. He testified that there was as much as a 20-percent decline in the number of families that shopped in their markets in the three years preceding this action and offered the results of an independent survey to support such contentions. He attributed defendants' declining position to the low prices set by competitors plus the development by their competitors of the use of trading stamps and other "giveaways" as stimulated by extensive advertising campaigns. He testified that the only form of competition open to the defendants and the independents were low prices. This witness identified the numerous advertisements, both before and after the date of the alleged violation charged in this action, showing the defendants' competitors were advertising the same or lower prices for these identical items.

Purpose or intent are seldom, if ever, easy elements to prove. They necessarily involve subjective determination. They may, of course, be inferred from the objective conduct of the person concerned. In this case there is direct testimony of the defendants' "good faith" from the person responsible for setting prices for the defendants' stores. There is also abundant corroborative evidence that his sole motive was defensive in the face of competitors' actions. The evidence is sufficient to support a finding that the advertisements and sales were not made for the purpose of either injuring competitors or destroying competition.[15]

[13] State v. DeZeler, 230 Minn. 39, 41 N. W. (2d) 313; see, Van Brunt v. Greaves, 32 Minn. 68, 19 N. W. 345.

[14] Klingman v. Loew's Inc., 209 Minn. 449, 296 N. W. 528; see, 19 Dunnell, Dig. (3 ed.) § 9714.

[Effect of Defendants' Actions]

We must then consider the effect of the defendants' advertisements and sales. While the trial court indicated that it did feel that the defendants' actions had the effect of injuring some competitors "to a slight degree," it emphasized that "It is also clear that these sales did not destroy or even diminish competition," and "had no effect whatever in the direction of destroying competition."

The phrase "destroying competition" or its equivalent is a part of the unfair-trade statutes of 15 states in addition to Minnesota.[16] Other states use the phraseology "substantially lessening competition" or its equivalent,[17] an obviously more workable test.

Although "destroying competition" is a common test in unfair-trade laws, it appears to have had no specific judicial interpretation.[18] Perhaps this is due to the unstrategic position of this phrase in the laws of most states. Nine of the fifteen states using this phrase provide a less absolute, alternative basis of establishing a violation.[19] The other six speak solely of a purpose or intent to destroy competition with no reference to effect.[20] Proving such an intention is obviously something quite different—something less—than proving that the defendants' acts had the effect of destroying competition. Thus, among the states which do require or permit the establishment of a violation by proof of some "effect," only Minnesota requires the plaintiff to prove the effect of "destroying competition."

Webster defines "effect" and "destroy" as follows:

> Effect: "That which is produced by an agent or cause; * * * result; outcome; * * * consequence * * *."
>
> Destroy: "To undo or unbuild; to ruin the structure, organic existence, or condition of; * * * to demolish; * * *. To ruin completely or to injure or mutilate beyond possibility of use, * * *. To bring to naught by putting out of existence; * * *. To annihilate; to cause to vanish; to abolish; * * * to nullify; * * *."[21]

In short, the obvious literal requirement to satisfy this test might be held to require the complete elimination of all effective competition.[22] A strong argument could be made for such an interpretation based on the availability of obvious alternative words such as "damage" to indicate a lesser condition. However, in considering the practicalities of the evil sought to be remedied

[15] See, Ellis v. Dallas [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,345], 113 Cal. App. (2d) 234, 248 P. (2d) 63.

[16] Ark. Stat. 1947 Ann. § 70-303; Calif. Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17043; Colo. Rev. Stat. 1953, § 55-2-3; Gen. Stat. of Conn. § 6716; Ky. Rev. Stat. § 365.030; Rev. Stat. of Maine 1954, c. 184, § 2; Ann. Code of Md. art. 83, § 113; Ann. Laws of Mass. c. 93, § 14F; Rev. Codes of Mont. 1947, § 51-103; N. H. Rev. Stat. Ann. 1955, 358:2; Ore. Rev. Stat. § 646.100(1)(a); R. I. Acts and Resolves of 1939, c. 671, § 2; Rev. Code of Wash. § 19.88.040; W. Va. Code of 1955, § 4678 (8b); Wyo. Comp. Stat. 1945, § 39-407.

[17] Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 44-1464; Idaho Code, § 48-404; Gen. Stat. of Kan. 1949, § 50-402; La. Rev. Stat. 1950, 51:422; Rev. Stat. Neb. 1943, § 59-1203; N. Dak. Rev. Code of 1943, § 51-1003; Okla. Stat. Ann. (Perm. ed.) Title 15, § 598.3; Purdon's Pa. Stat. Ann. (Perm. ed.) Title 73, § 213; Tenn. Code Ann. § 69-303; Utah Code Ann. 1953, § 13-5-7; Code of Va. 1950, § 59-13. Code of Laws of S. C. 1952, § 66-65, speaks of "driving out competition * * *." Wis. Stat. 1955, § 100.30(4), speaks only of injuring a competitor. N. J. Stat. Ann. (Perm. ed.) § 56:4-8, requires no purpose or effect; see footnote 3, supra.

[18] Compare, under milk licensing law, where "destructive competition" was defined as that which would "tend not only to damage but to destroy competition." Matter of Eisenstein v. Du Mond, 268 App. Div. 320, 323, 51 N. Y. S. (2d) 811, 814.

[19] The following states offer injury to competitors as an alternative basis. Calif. Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17043; Gen. Stat. of Conn. § 6716; Rev. Stat. of Maine 1954, c. 184, § 2; Ann. Code of Md. art. 83, § 113; Ann. Laws of Mass. c. 93, § 14F; N. H. Rev. Stat. Ann. 1955, 358:2; R. I. Acts and Resolves of 1939, c. 671, § 2. Ore. Rev. Stat. § 646.100(1)(a), condemns actions which may lessen, injure, destroy, prevent, hinder, or suppress the competition of competitors. Rev. Code of Wash. § 19.88.040, speaks of offenses which destroy or tend to destroy competition.

[20] Ark. Stat. 1947 Ann. § 70-303; Colo. Rev. Stat. 1953, § 55-2-3; Ky. Rev. Stat. § 365.030; Rev. Codes of Mont. 1947, § 51-103; W. Va. Code of 1955, § 4678(8b); Wyo. Comp. Stat. 1945, § 39-407.

[21] Webster's New International Dictionary (2 ed.) (1947).

[22] Cf. Matter of Eisenstein v. Du Mond, 268 App. Div. 320, 323, 51 N. Y. S. (2d) 811, 814.

and the apparent legislative intent, such a requirement would approach absurdity,[23] for seldom, if ever, is all competition eliminated by the most severe price cutting. Nor should the administrative body responsible for enforcement of such laws be required to wait until such a condition exists before attempting some legal restraint.

It is our duty to construe and interpret a statute so as to give it practical meaning and effect within the legislative intent.[24] However, until a proper factual case is presented which requires a clear determination and offers a practical situation in which all the conflicting problems and considerations in the area involved are apparent, a court should restrain from theorizing. This should be particularly true in the field of economic regulation. The eventual goal of any interpretation must be viewed in the practical situation existing in the field to be regulated.[25]

In the matter now before us, it does not appear necessary or proper to establish a rigid standard or definition of the phrase "effect of * * * destroying competition." Certainly the phrase requires, at the very least, some substantial damage to the competitive atmosphere of the defendants' trade area or to a competitor. Here there is no showing of substantial damage to even one competitor, much less any effect whatsoever on the competitive atmosphere of the St. Paul retail-grocery market. A careful review of the evidence leaves serious doubt that plaintiff's evidence could support a finding of the destroying of competition in the broadest possible meaning of that phrase, if the trial court had made such a determination. The evidence certainly affords ample support for the finding that the defendants' actions did not have the effect of destroying competition. Whether the actions of the defendants were with the requisite dual purpose or had such effect was a question of fact to be resolved by the trier of fact.[26] We emphasize what we have repeatedly said, that we may only interfere with the findings of the lower court where the evidence taken as a whole furnishes no substantial support for such findings. If the evidence fairly tends to support the findings—if reasonable persons might draw different conclusions from the evidence—then the findings should not be disturbed.[27]

[Evidence]

Plaintiff's witnesses, independent competitors of the defendants, testified to extremely vague injuries, resorting to obvious speculation not only as to defendants' actions being the cause of any loss, but the very fact of any loss at all. The only definite economic estimate of loss was by one witness and amounted to $4. The defense successfully brought out many other factors which could have been responsible for the supposed losses. On the other hand, there was ample evidence introduced by the defendants to show that the same competitive atmosphere apparently prevailed some time before as well as after the alleged violations. As previously pointed out, there was evidence that the defendants' competitors were advertising the same or lower prices on these same products as much as 5 months before the defendants' advertisements and for some time thereafter. It also appears that during the 2 years preceding these alleged violations the defendants' relative position in the market had decreased almost 21 percent while certain of their competitors had increased their position as much as 41 percent and 46 percent. While this evidence would not necessarily prevent the defendants' actions from being illegal by, in fact, destroying competition and injuring competitors at the time of such practices, it does offer persuasive support for the trial court's conclusions. A consideration of the evidence in its entirety indicates ample support for the disputed finding.

[Defendants' Position in Market]

5. The trial court found that the defendants operated a chain of grocery stores in St. Paul "in competition with many other chain grocery companies, many of whose operations were larger than those of the defendant." The plaintiff contends that the court erred in this finding by failing to state that defendants were also in competition with grocers smaller than the defendants. Plaintiff only makes token reference to this alleged error, citing no authority in sup-

[23] See, 17 Dunnell, Dig. (3 ed.) § 8947.
[24] See, 82 C. J. S., Statutes, § 312; 17 Dunnell, Dig. (3 ed.) § 8937, et seq.
[25] See, 17 Dunnell, Dig. (3 ed.) § 8940.
[26] See, Mering v. Yolo Grocery & Meat Market (Cal.), 127 P. (2d) 985; State v. Twentieth Century Market [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,073], 236 Wis. 215, 221, 294 N. W. 873, 876.
[27] See, 1 Dunnell, Dig. (3 ed.) § 411.

port of its position that such an omission constitutes reversible error. The truth of the finding is undisputed. We know of no rule requiring the trial court to state every fact. Obviously the court was attempting to merely indicate that the defendants were not the "giant" of its trade area, a fact amply supported by the evidence. We fail to see how the fact that it was also not the smallest would change the decision. Only the ultimate issuable facts must be found.[28] Where the decisive facts, as found by the trial court, are sustained by the evidence, it is not necessary to specifically discuss proposed findings of fact which would not change the result.[29]

[Exclusion of Deposition]

6. Finally plaintiff alleges error in the trial court's refusal to admit in evidence the deposition of one of the defendants, a managing partner of the stores and the principal witness for the defense. It is apparent from the record that extensive latitude was permitted in the cross-examination of this witness, including the use of part of the deposition for attempted impeachment. The record is not clear as to the exact purpose for which the plaintiff sought to introduce the deposition. It came after thorough and extensive cross-examination of this witness and was offered so that "perhaps the matter can be simplified * * *." Considerable cross-examination followed and finally counsel for plaintiff stated "That is all I have of this witness." No further particular parts of the deposition were offered for impeachment or otherwise. Plaintiff does not set forth the allegedly damaging evidence it now claims is contained in the deposition and no offer of proof appears in the record. A court cannot assume the materiality of evidence not included in the record nor in any way disclosed, and in the absence of any showing of the nature and substance of such evidence, this court cannot determine whether it was erroneously excluded or if plaintiff was prejudiced by such exclusion.[30]

As we understand it, plaintiff's position is that Rule 26.04(2) of Rules of Civil Procedure gives him the absolute right to introduce a party's or managing agent's deposition. This rule states:

> "The deposition of a party or * * * managing agent * * * may be used by an adverse party for any purpose." Plaintiff omits reference to the preceding qualifying language of the main body of Rule 26.04, that a deposition may be used "so far as admissible under the rules of evidence, * * *."

We do not read into this rule a mandatory requirement that a court must admit the deposition of an adverse party regardless of trial circumstances.[31] As stated in Arnstein v. Porter, (2 Cir.) 154 F. (2d) 464, 470:

> "* * * As we have said, 'a deposition has always been, and still is, treated as a substitute, a second-best, not to be used when the original is at hand' * * *" and at footnote 11:

> "* * * Of course, under the Rules, the deposition of an adverse party may be used 'for any purpose,' but it is not a compulsory substitute for his examination in open court."

In view of the full latitude afforded plaintiff in cross-examination of the witness, and the unrestricted use of the deposition, short of its blanket admission, and since the plaintiff has not set forth the allegedly damaging evidence contained in the deposition nor protected itself by a proper offer of proof at the trial, we find no error in the court's exclusion of the deposition.

Affirmed.

[¶ 68,827] Noerr Motor Freight, Inc.; Kramer Bros. Freight Lines, Inc.; McLean Trucking Company; Lansdale Transportation Co., Inc.; T. M. Zimmerman Company; W. I. Womeldorf & Sons Company; Rodgers Motor Lines, Inc.; Akers Motor Lines, Inc.; Keystone Lawrence Transfer & Storage Company; W. J. McCormick Truck Transportation; Martin Brothers; Pennsylvania Transfer Company; F. W. Lusk Transfer Company; Davidson Transfer & Storage Company; Suwak Trucking Company; C. W. Dillie; A. W. Bauman, Jr. Trucking Company; Martsolf Bros.; Spector Motor Service, Inc.; G. C. Braden Trucking Company; Edward G. Horn Trucking Co.; Seaboard Tank

---

[28] 19 Dunnell, Dig. (3 ed.) § 9851.

[29] Johnson v. Grady, 187 Minn. 104, 244 N. W. 409.

[30] See, Gutmann v. Klimek, 116 Minn. 110, 133 N. W. 475.

[31] See, United States v. United Shoe Machinery Corp. (D. Mass.) [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,631], 93 F. Supp. 190.

Lines, Inc.; Friedman's Express, Inc.; Karn's Transfer, Inc.; Lombard Bros. Incorporated; Lester C. Newton Trucking Company; and Pennsylvania Motor Truck Association, Plaintiffs; and D. F. Bast; Ed. Chadderton Trucking; Cooper-Jarrett, Inc.; Eastern Freight-Ways, Inc.; Fowler & Williams, Inc.; William F. Grossett, Inc.; Fischbach Trucking Co.; Hall's Motor Transit Co.; Mushroom Transportation Co., Inc.; Miller Motor Express, Inc.; Yale Transport Corporation; Daily Motor Express; McCullough Transfer Co.; and York Transportation Co., Intervening Plaintiffs v. Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference; Walter S. Franklin, Individually and as President of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company; M. W. Clement, individually and as former President of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company; R. W. Brown, individually and as former President of the Reading Company; Joseph A. Fisher, individually and as President of the Reading Company; Lewis D. Freeman, individually and as Trustee of New York, Ontario & Western Railway; Fred W. Okie, individually and as President of Union Railroad Co. (Pittsburgh); Pennsylvania Railroad Company; New York Central Railroad Company; Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company; Norfolk & Western Railway Company; Charles J. Graham, individually and as President of Pittsburgh & West Virginia Railway; Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company; Reading Company; New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company; Lehigh Valley Railroad Company; Lehigh & New England Railroad Company; Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Company; Delaware & Hudson Railroad; Erie Railroad Company; Western Maryland Railway; Pittsburgh & West Virginia Railway; New York, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad Company; Boston & Maine Railroad; Central Railroad Company of New Jersey; Central Railroad Company of Pennsylvania; Maine Central Railroad Company; New York, Ontario & Western Railway; Lehigh & Hudson River Railroad; Union Railroad Company (Pittsburgh); Canadian Pacific Railway Company; Canadian National Railways; and Carl Byoir & Associates, Inc., Defendants.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. Civil Action No. 14715. Dated October 10, 1957.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Conspiracy To Lessen Competition in Long-Haul Carriage of Freight—Campaign To Destroy Good Will of Industry—Fomentation of Governmental Restrictions.—Railroads, their local association, and a public relations firm were found to have engaged in an unlawful conspiracy to injure interstate long-haul truckers and their local association (the plaintiffs) in the northeastern section of the United States. The defendants conspired with the intent and object of substantially lessening competition in the industry and achieved such object by conducting a campaign designed to destroy the good will of the long-haul trucking industry and by fomenting governmental restrictions. The defendants formed a conspiracy for an illegal objective (injury to the truckers' business and good will and, if possible, the elimination of the truckers as competitors), and, in concert, they attempted to use both legal and illegal means to accomplish their illegal objective. The defendants' activities did not constitute a mere appeal to the legislature. Evidence established the formation of so-called "independent citizen groups" which were mere pawns in circulating information derogatory to the truckers, the dissemination of false information to customers of the truckers, the organization of groups to protest the use of the highways by the plaintiffs' "Big Trucks," and the duping and using of public officials and officials of independent organizations to accomplish the purpose of driving the truckers out of competition with the defendants. The defendants' activities constituted an unreasonable restraint of trade. However, the activities were not illegal per se.

The defendants' counterclaims charging that the truckers engaged in similar activities were dismissed on the ground that the activities engaged in by the truckers did not constitute an unlawful conspiracy to injure the railroads. The truckers had as their purpose the defense and promotion of their interests. While both the railroads and the truckers used, or wanted to use, fronts and/or the propaganda technique, the truckers always used the technique for the affirmative purpose of seeking legislation which would be beneficial to themselves rather than to burden the railroads.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005, 2005.280.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Elements and Proof of Unlawful Conspiracy—Participation in Conspiracy—Membership in Association—Knowledge of Illegal Acts.—Where railroads, their local association, and a public relations firm were found to have engaged in an unlawful conspiracy to injure interstate long-haul truckers by conducting a campaign to destroy the good will of the long-haul trucking industry, certain defendants which were members of the railroad association contended that the evidence was insufficient to link them as co-conspirators. In rejecting the contention, the court ruled that mere membership in an unincorporated association, in and of itself, was not sufficient to establish liability for conspiracy, and that, if the purposes of an association are lawful on their face, its members should not be held for the acts of the association outside its purposes, unless knowledge of the illegal acts is brought home to the members. On the basis of the evidence, the defendants, although not involved in the carrying out of the details of the campaign, had full knowledge of its illegal object and general means for achieving that objective. Furthermore, there was ample evidence to support the finding of agency on the part of the presidents of these corporate defendants to impute their conduct to the respective corporate defendants. In order for one to be found guilty as a conspirator, it need only be shown that, with knowledge of the conspiracy, he knowingly performed acts designed to promote or aid in the attainment of the object of the known conspiracy.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.410, 2017.121.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages and Injunctive Relief—Defenses—Legislative or Executive Acts—Monopoly Created by State Legislation—Appeals to Legislature and Constitutional Rights—Motive of Plaintiff.—Where railroads, their local association, and a public relations firm were found to have engaged in an unlawful conspiracy to injure interstate long-haul truckers by conducting a campaign to destroy the good will of the long-haul trucking industry, the court rejected the defenses based on the defendants' contentions that a judicial tribunal may not invalidate a duly promulgated legislative or executive act; the doctrine of separation of powers precludes a search for executive or legislative motives in carrying out their respective functions; a monopoly created by virtue of duly enacted state legislation is without the ambit of the antitrust laws; their activities merely constituted an appeal to the legislature; and that to deprive them of the right to act would be to deprive them of the constitutional rights of freedom of speech, freedom to assemble, and freedom to petition the legislature; and the plaintiffs, in instituting the action, were motivated by a desire to bring the defendants into disrepute in furtherance of their own objective to acquire a monopoly of the long-haul freight business.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9010.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages and Injunctive Relief—Injury to Public—Causal Relation Between Injury and Antitrust Violation.—The activities of railroads, their local association, and a public relations firm in conspiring to injure interstate long-haul truckers by engaging in a campaign to destroy the good will of the truckers were held to be a substantial factor and the proximate cause of injury to the public. Public injury must be established in a private antitrust action. The truckers established a resultant increase in the cost to shippers and consumers of all commodities necessary to life. If the effect of the conspiracy is to increase the cost of operation of the truckers, thereby increasing consumer's costs, an injury to the public is effected. The loss of business suffered by the truckers and the expense entailed by the trucking industry in counteracting the defendants' activities was tremendous and quite obviously resulted in higher costs to the consumer. Also, because of the legislative activities of the defendants, the public was deprived of the flexible service and convenience supplied by this mode of transportation in certain states.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.350, 9009.475.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages and Injunctive Relief—Injury to Plaintiff—Causal Relation Between Injury and Antitrust Violation.—The activities of railroads, their local association, and a public relations firm in conspiring to injure interstate long-haul truckers by engaging in a campaign to destroy the good will of the truckers were held to constitute a substantial factor in injurying the truckers in their business and property. Regardless of the success or failure of legislation proposed by the railroads and unfavorable to the truckers, an injury to the truckers was accomplished. There was a loss of good will to the trucking industry and individual truckers, and the damages flowing from the expenses entailed by the truckers in counterbalancing the defendants' campaign showed private injury.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.275, 9009.350.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages and Injunctive Relief—Injunctive Relief—Threatened Injury.—Where railroads, their local association, and a public relations firm were found to have engaged in an unlawful conspiracy to injure interstate long-haul truckers and their local association by conducting a campaign to destroy the good will of the long-haul trucking industry, the court found that the truckers and their association had been irreparably harmed and that there was a strong possibility that the defendants were ready, willing, and able to continue with their campaign. The truckers and their association were entitled to an injunction against the defendants. However, individual defendants were to be excluded from the injunction because they were either officers or employees of the corporate defendants, and, as such, would be bound by the terms of the injunction to be issued.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9022.50, 9024.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages and Injunctive Relief—Damages—Attorneys' Fees and Costs.—Where railroads, their local association, and a public relations firm were found to have engaged in an unlawful conspiracy to injure interstate long-haul truckers and their local association by conducting a campaign to destroy the good will of the long-haul trucking industry, the court ruled that, in view of a stipulation stating that costs including attorneys' fees were borne by the truckers' association only, costs and fees would not be awarded in favor of the individual truckers. An award of costs and reasonable attorneys' fee would be made in favor of the truckers' association and against all of the corporate defendants, including the public relations firm. The expense to each railroad defendant (excluding the railroads' association and individual defendants) would be apportioned according to their percentage contribution to the association for a specified year. The public relations firm would contribute 20 per cent of the costs and fees.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9011.725, 9011.800.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages and Injunctive Relief—Damages—Expenditures to Defend Good Will—Damages Resulting from Veto of Bill.—Where railroads, their local association, and a public relations firm were found to have engaged in an unlawful conspiracy to injure interstate long-haul truckers and their local association by conducting a campaign to destroy the good will of the long-haul trucking industry, the court ruled that the truckers' association was entitled to damages for the loss occasioned by the expenditures required because of the defendants' campaign of destruction of good will, and that the truckers were entitled to nominal damages in the amount of six cents each (to be trebled). Eighty per cent of the damages would be assessed against the corporate defendants other than the public relations firm; twenty per cent of the damages would be assessed against the public relations firm; and no damages would be assessed against the individual defendants and the railroad association. Damages against the corporate defendants would be assessed on the basis of their percentage contribution to the association for a specified year. While the truckers established the fact of damage resulting from the defendants' activities, they had, by stipulation, specifically limited themselves to those damages proximately flowing from a veto of a Pennsylvania bill. Money damages cannot be awarded for injuries proximately resulting from a duly promulgated executive act. A governor acting pursuant to his authority in vetoing a bill cannot be a proximate cause of monetary injury to a party who would have been benefited by the legislation in question. Also, the court noted that it must apply the same standard to the ascertainment of the fact of damage as it does to the ascertainment of the amount of actual damage. However, superimposed upon this rule is the rule that legal injury cannot flow as a proximate result of a legislative or executive act.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9011.400, 9011.520.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages and Injunctive Relief—Evidence Admissible To Prove Violations—Proof of Regional Conspiracy—Damages Limited to Single State.—Where long-haul truckers and their local association alleged a conspiracy by railroads and others in the whole of the northeastern part of the United States, the defendants' contention that, because the plaintiffs limited themselves to proof of damages only within a single state, they should be likewise limited in proof of the conspiracy was rejected.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9012.130.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages and Injunctive Relief—Evidence Admissible To Prove Violations—Proof of Conspiracy—Acts Occurring After Monetary Damage Caused.—Testimony of activities of conspirators occurring after the act which allegedly caused actual monetary damage to the plaintiffs was admissible in evidence. The testimony was relevant to show the need for injunctive relief against alleged continuing activities against the plaintiffs. Furthermore, it was relevant to show a true picture of the alleged conspiracy.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9012.130, 9025.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages and Injunctive Relief—Jurisdiction Over Parties—Unincorporated Association—Waiver of Objections to Venue and Jurisdiction—Filing of Counterclaim.—The activities of an unincorporated association within Pennsylvania were sufficient to establish that the association was doing business within the state and therefore to establish venue in the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. Service upon the president of the association constituted service upon the association. Furthermore, the association waived any objection to venue or jurisdiction by joining in the filing of a counterclaim in the action.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9008.

For the plaintiffs: Dilworth, Paxson, Kalish & Green.

For the defendants: Montgomery, McCracken, Walker & Rhoads for Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference. Ballard, Spahr, Andrews & Ingersoll, and Hughes, Hubbard, Blair & Reed for Carl Byoir & Associates, Inc. Barnes, Dechert, Price, Myers & Rhoads for The Pennsylvania Railroad Co., M. W. Clement, and Walter S. Franklin. Harold B. Bornemann for Lehigh & New England Railroad Co. Dennis P. Donovan for Canadian National Railways. Drinker, Biddle & Reath for Central Railroad Co. of New Jersey, Central Railroad Co. of Pennsylvania, Norfolk & Western Railway Co., and Western Maryland Railway. Carl E. Glock and James B. Anderson for Fred W. Okie and Union Railroad Co. Guckes, Shrader & Burtt for Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. Morgan, Lewis & Bockius for Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Co., Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co., Erie Railroad Co., Lehigh & Hudson River Railway Co., New York, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad Co., The Reading Co., R. W. Brown, and Joseph A. Fisher. Daniel Mungall, Jr., and Stradley, Ronon, Stevens & Young for Boston & Maine Railroad, Canadian Pacific Railway Co., The Delaware & Hudson Railroad Corp., Maine Central Railroad Co., and New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co. Myers, McVeigh, Mansfield & O'Brien for New York Central Railroad Co. T. W. Pomeroy, Jr., and Paul Maloney for Pittsburgh & West Virginia Railway Co. and Charles J. Graham. Saul, Ewing, Remick & Saul for Lehigh Valley Railroad Co. White, Williams & Scott for New York, Ontario & Western Railway and Lewis D. Freeman.

For prior opinions of the U. S. District Court, Eastern District of Pennsylvania, see 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,338 and 1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,544, 67,538.

Opinion

[Nature of Action]

CLARY, District Judge [In full text except for omissions indicated by asterisks]: The present action involves a suit for an injunction and treble damages under the Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts, Sections 1 and 2 of the Act of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, 15 U. S. C. A. § 1, et seq., and Section 15 of the Act of October 15, 1914, 38 Stat. 731, 15 U. S. C. A. § 15, by 41 interstate long-haul truckers and the Pennsylvania Motor Truck Association, hereinafter called "PMTA," against some 35 railroads operating in the northeastern part of the United States; the Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference, hereinafter referred to as the "Conference" or "ERPC," and Carl Byoir & Associates, Inc., a New York public relations firm, hereinafter called "Byoir." Opinions dealing with preliminary motions to dismiss, discovery matters, and a motion to file an amended answer and counterclaim are reported at [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,544] 113 F. Supp. 737 (E. D. Pa. 1953); [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,538] 14 F. R. D. 189 (E. D. Pa. 1953), and [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,338] 19 F. R. D. 146 (E. D. Pa. 1956).

The basic allegation in both the claim and the counterclaim is that the defendants on the one hand conspired to obtain a monopoly of and to drive the plaintiffs out of the business of long-haul freight transportation in the northeastern section of the United States by various and sundry means, which will be more fully discussed later in this opinion, and on the other hand the defendants claim that the plaintiffs themselves were engaged in an illegal conspiracy for the identical purpose to obtain a monopoly of the long-haul freight industry in the same part of the United States and to force the railroads out of that segment of the transportation business in the area.

* * *

THE COUNTERCLAIMS

[Nature of Claims]

A review of the evidence presented in this case by which the defendants attempted to establish a conspiracy on the part of the truckers to monopolize the long-haul transportation industry in the northeastern part of the United States reveals consistent and persistent activities on the part of the truckers which in many respects parallel the activities of the railroads in the field. It is the contention of the railroads on the basis of that testimony that if, in the opinion of the Court, an illegal conspiracy on the part of the truckers has not been established, the evidence of the truckers' activities as presented in the defendants' testimony shows a course of conduct which justified every activity of the railroads as reasonable competition in a free enterprise competitive system.

* * *

[Legislative Activities]

With the above factors in mind, it will be seen that through the decade of 1940 to 1950 there was a distinct clash between the railroads and the truckers in the State of Pennsylvania over any legislation which would be favorable to the truckers. That the truckers and PMTA attempted to do everything possible to attain their legislative objectives and aims is amply established by this record. While the defendants in this case attempted to label the legislative efforts as an attempt to divert business from the counterclaimants, it was actually an attempt by the truckers to obtain legislative approval to enter into competition with the defendants and counterclaimants in a field in which up to that time by legislative action they had a complete monopoly. The record establishes that the truckers wrote to and made personal contacts with legislators in support of bills increasing the weight of trucks; that they had representatives of other industries write and make personal contacts with legislators in Harrisburg without disclosing trucker connections; and that they had such persons intentionally refrain from advising the legislators and the said officials that the letters and contacts had been solicited; that they solicited from legislators statements in support of their position and had news releases issued thereon. There is no doubt also that in every way possible the truckers tried to eliminate the opposition to its legislative program of the Pennsylvania State Grange and the Pennsylvania State Association of Township Supervisors, and even the railroads. The latter was a suggestion that shippers route through other lines rather than the Pennsylvania Railroad. It is clear, however, that the suggestion from the truckers was made in order to weaken P. R. R. objections to the Big Truck Bill and was not designed to drive the P. R. R. from the transportation field.

[Tax Manual]

About the middle of the decade PMTA had a tax manual prepared charging that the railroads of Pennsylvania themselves did not pay their fair share of taxes as compared with other states and made a wide distribution of it to legislators, banks, security investment houses, etc. That this action was directed against the railroads running through Pennsylvania is entirely clear. However, the truckers had been the target of a strong campaign directed to the public with the purpose of convincing the public that trucks did not pay their fair share of taxes. In such a competitive situation it is well within reasonable limits of competitive practice that the truckers, if they could do so, be permitted to likewise show the public that their competitors, the railroads, were actually guilty of the fault charged against the truckers. Further, this material was sent out with attribution to the PMTA, something the defendants never did in this campaign.

* * *

[Study]

A firm of consultants, Wilder & Associates, was also employed to make a study of the activities in the public relations field of PMTA, express an opinion thereon, and make recommendations for a change of policy. This completely objective study, completed and published in December of 1949, showed clearly the attitude of the public toward the truckers as to the areas in which they were deficient and made recommendations looking to the elimination of such deficiencies. It is most impressive to the Court, sitting as a jury in this case, that no part of this 81 page report is critical of the railroads or any suggestion made that the truckers might obtain further business at the expense of the railroads; and certainly there was no suggestion of any conspiracy to attain such ends. * * *

* * *

[Truck Bill]

As stated above, under Pennsylvania activities, the Big Truck Bill was passed with a resounding majority in both Houses. Eventually the Bill was vetoed by the Governor as above outlined. Defendants contend strongly that PMTA in arranging for support of the Bill was guilty of such unfair concerted action against them as to amount to substantial evidence of conspiracy on the part of the trucking industry to drive the railroads out of business. The fallacy of that reasoning lies in the fact that the truckers were striving to accomplish and end in support of their own industry in order to allow that industry to compete with the railroads, and everything done in this connection was well within the limits of fair competition in private enterprise. There is not nearly sufficient evidence to convince the Court sitting as a jury in this case that the truckers intended by this action anything other than self-help, and any action taken was not calculated to destroy the railroads but merely to obtain an opportunity to compete for the business with the railroads in a field theretofore denied them by statute.

* * *

* * * The defendants have asked the Court to find that all of these allegations on the part of the truckers were false and were made for the purpose of destroying the railroads' position in the transportation industry. Nothing could be farther from the real fact. The actions were taken to protect themselves from serious and unwarranted in fact attacks. They charged that the edited film inaccurately put the trucking industry in an odious light, which it did. They charged that the United States Government, through the Bureau's sponsorship of the edited film, was devastatingly and inaccurately critical of the trucking industry, which it was. They charged also that on April 13, 1953 it was the purpose of the railroad industry to distribute a pamphlet in connection with accomplishing the same sinister purpose, which at that time it was. While the charge that the tentative findings of the Highway Research Board were fraud from beginning to end, originated by paid railroad agents using railroad money, is not supported by the evidence, the interpretation as distorted by Byoir and released to the public as the official findings did constitute a fraud upon the public and even constituted a fraud on the Chief Executive of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, through the Secretary of the Highway Department. The Court also finds as a fact that a deliberate distortion of a fine scientific achievement, Maryland Road Test—One, was used as one of the instruments in the campaign of the railroads to either severely limit or destroy the heavy trucking industry.

[Truckers' Organization]

Charnay's investigation of the Byoir activities (one public relations firm investigating another) convinced the truckers of something they had suspected from the outset—that the railroads and railroad money were behind the continuous attacks upon the trucking industry. Charnay also attempted in a limited degree to use the Byoir technique of phony organizations. He set about to form a completely fictitious organization to be known as the Pennsylvania Motor Safety League. While its purpose was ostensibly to help the trucking industry, its ultimate purpose was to attack the railroads. Fortunately in this case wiser heads within the organization of the PMTA and wiser counsel prevented the formation of such an organization and its utilization by the truckers in a campaign against the railroads.

[Use of Information]

It is also worthy of note at this point that although the truckers sought out and made a collection of all railroad accidents and were in a position to magnify them in a campaign against the railroads, they were never used, but were merely held in reserve for defensive use should the railroad again start their publicity barrage about truck accidents. Also in 1952 the truckers implemented the tax manual of the mid-forties and had printed an entirely new brochure indicating to municipalities that the railroads were not paying their fair share of taxes in the State of Pennsylvania, contrary to a decision of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, and pointing up the fact that notwithstanding such decision, no action had been taken by the public officials concerned to revoke charters. This was a frontal attack upon the railroads and over 10,000 copies of this manual were distributed urging the taxation of railroads. However, there was no attempt to conceal its origin and its purpose was to counteract the propaganda of the railroads that the truckers were receiving enormous subsidies at the expense of the taxpayers. The Court, sitting as a jury, finds as a fact that there was no purpose or intention in putting out this tax manual to destroy the railroads in the long-haul industry, but the action taken was purely defensive of the three year old campaign of the railroads against the truckers and comes within the rule of reason in free competitive enterprise. * * *

[Truckers' Objective]

It is also clear, as stated in a previous memorandum opinion, that these papers enabled the truckers to establish what they had long suspected—concert of action on the part of the railroads in a deliberate attempt to keep the truckers from a large segment of the long-haul industry or, if possible, to destroy their effectiveness in this particular field and eliminate them as competitors. It follows therefore, from what has been said above, that the truckers with the one exception above noted, in every instance acted only in support of their own industry, and without any intent to restrain commerce.

[Use of Consultant]

Among the complaints made by the defendants against the plaintiffs is that they engaged an emeritus professor of engineering of the University of Michigan, one Dr. John S. Worley, who, although a consultant engaged and paid for by PMTA, was held out to the public as an independent highway engineering expert. The purpose of his employment was to testify at the expense of PMTA and without attribution in favor of the Big Truck Bill. It will be noted that here again is emphasized the difference in approach to their respective problems by the two competing industries. Dr. Worley was not engaged to injure the railroads but to help the truckers. It is certainly within the rule of reason in competing industries that either one may engage outside help and seek allies to further their own respective aims, provided however, that such friends and allies are not used in a conspiracy to destroy the competitor. A concert of action which has for its purpose the crippling of competition in a particular field and if possible of effectively destroying that competition is prohibited by the Sherman and Clayton Antitrust statutes. The Court sees no violation of the statutes in the Worley episode.

[Publicity]

Another charge of the railroads against the truckers which should be disposed of at this point is that the present action, its pleadings, depositions, and even the testimony taken at the trial have been used by Charnay as a vehicle of publicity for the sole purpose of bringing the truckers' story to the public. As a corollary thereof, the railroads charged that this action constitutes virtually malicious abuse of legal process. The railroads also point out that this suit was financed wholly from a public relations program fund as indicative of the fact that the suit was purely for publicity purposes. This contention does not impress the Court. The result of the action clearly indicates that the plaintiffs herein had a valid cause of action which was brought in good faith and on sound factual and legal grounds. Naturally, in a case of great magnitude, it could be expected that the expenses of litigation would be rather large. How the plaintiffs individually and in concert raised the money to support the litigation is of no concern to the Court. That they chose to finance it out of the public relations fund is also unimportant. As to the charge that the pleadings and depositions, and even the testimony taken at the trial, were commented upon and in the public press by the plaintiffs or their agents is likewise of no concern to the Court. This Court has no intention of restraining the use of public documents or interfering with the right of the press or individuals to comment upon events which happen publicly in a court of law, provided such use is not part of an illegal conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce.

* * *

[Counterclaims Dismissed]

Defendants as part of their counterclaim attempted to introduce certain evidence with respect to the highway systems in the northeastern part of the United States; the effect of the use of heavy trucks thereon; the increasing cost of construction, including changes of geometric designs to meet the requirements of heavy traffic; and other evidence with respect to the economic phases of the trucking industry, all of which will be referred to briefly hereinafter. All of this testimony was excluded by the Trial Judge as being either cumulative or not relevant to the issues in the case. From what has been said before and after a review of the evidence, it is clear that the counterclaims filed are without merit and, therefore, will be dismissed.

SUMMARY

[Review of Findings]

* * *

Without in any wise limiting the findings of fact contained in the above narrative description of the facts adduced in this case and the Court's comment thereon, a useful purpose may be served at this point in reviewing in summary form the findings of the Court in this case as a preliminary to a discussion of the law of the case and the application of the law to the facts as found.

[Conspiracy]

The Court has found as a fact that the railroads and Byoir entered into a conspiracy in unreasonable restraint of trade, the nature and purpose of which was to injure the truckers in their competitive position in the long-haul freight industry in the northeastern section of the United States. This, of course, involves interstate commerce. The immediate purpose was to create public resentment to the truckers, not only in the minds of the general public but in the minds of those who utilized the services of the trucks and in such a manner as to interfere with business relations between shippers and truckers. There is no doubt that the railroads prior to the development of the long-haul truck industry had an actual monopoly of that field. A new industry in competition had appeared. That industry by reason of more flexibility and faster service had made great inroads in that particular competitive field and its business had increased a thousand fold. Both were regulated industries. The truckers could not operate without a certificate from the Interstate Commerce Commission showing the need for the service in a particular locality. While it is true that "contract carriers" as distinguished from "common carriers" might be utilized by an individual shipper (and these carriers form a large part of railroad competition), most of these carriers are likewise regulated by the Interstate Commerce Commission and only in the case of carriers of agricultural products is there any exemption from regulation. Common carriers, of course, are in the same status as railroads. Goods offered has to be transported at published rates. There is further no doubt that at this time there was "erosion" in great measure of previous railroad business to the truckers. That such erosion would "injure" the railroads in their revenues is likewise clear. That injury, however, is not a legal injury. It is merely a diminution of revenue because of a better competitive method of transportation evolved by the trucking industry. That the railroads recognized the problem and knew the underlying factors causing their loss of revenue is abundantly clear from this record. The railroads knew, despite the higher charges of the truckers, 6¢ per mile as against 1.4¢ per mile, that the truckers were rapidly gaining business because of extreme flexibility. They knew also that even without a show of necessity on their part before the Interstate Commerce Commission they (railroads) could be licensed to establish equally flexible truck routes. (See the opinion of Mr. Justice Reed in I. C. C. v. Parker, 326 U. S. 60 (1945), and dissenting opinion of Douglas, J. re the effect of majority decision.) Instead of meeting the competition in the field and giving the shippers what the shippers wanted, they determined upon another course of action —to injure and/or destroy the truckers and thereby force the shippers to their detriment to continue to use the railroads. This, of course, would be to the shippers' disadvantage in this great area of flexibility which was clearly so vital to the shipper but would eliminate the fundamental cause of the railroads' loss of revenue. It was with this very thought in mind that the combination of Byoir and the railroads occurred in August of 1949 and a definite program for accomplishing this desired result was instituted with the full knowledge and consent both of Byoir and every defendant railroad. Briefly restated, the plan was first to create hostility to the truckers. With that as a base the rest of the plan evolved. This plan generally had 10 fundamental objectives:

[Objectives]

(1) To seek out or create "independent" organizations favorable to the railroads' point of view and opposed to the truckers.

(2) Through Byoir and the ostensible independent organizations create a hostile public using the method detailed under the heading, "Campaign of Vilification."

(3) Through the organizations and at the instigation of Byoir create a demand for more tax revenues by government at all levels, particular the local level.

(4) Through Byoir and railroad contacts have one of these organizations hire a recognized and ostensibly impartial statistical group to make a study of revenue-producing methods most palatable to the public; the statistical group would be supplied by Byoir with the questions to be asked the public and the answers to these questions would form the basis for the conclusions in the study. These questions by Byoir would be so framed that only the desired answers would be forthcoming—that the truckers must be more heavily taxed. Another use of these so-called independent survey organizations was to focus attention upon the trucks as destroyers of the highways and emphasize by "statistics," based on the false premise that truckers are the prime users of roads, that the truckers were the recipients of enormous public subsidies.

(5) With these statistics on hand have the "independent" organizations through Byoir publicize them from one end of the United States to another, through speeches, magazines and news releases.

(6) Interest writers of important magazines in articles attacking the truckers and present the writers with all the statistics compiled by the "independent sources."

(7) With an outstanding magazine article have the organizations, through Byoir, intensify their campaign and then seek further articles with the evergrowing research material as a basis.

(8) While all of the above was being carried out to aid financially and in every other way legislators disposed to the railroads' point of view.

(9) Present the research packages and a hostile and aroused public to the Legislature and then propose the type of legislation determined by the associated railroads of that particular state as the type of legislation desired, and which to the associated railroads appeared feasible under the circumstances.

(10) Make absolutely certain that the general public attributed the entire campaign to public-spirited organizations only, keep the railroads in the background, and conceal particularly from objective-minded public officials interested in the problem the fact that the entire campaign was a creature of the railroads, the whole cost of the campaign being borne by the railroads, and for the purpose of hindering and destroying the trucking industry as a competitor to the railroads in the long-haul transportation industry.

[Injury to Truckers]

It is clear from the above, regardless of the success or failure of legislation proposed by the railroads unfavorable to the truckers, that a real private injury to the truckers was accomplished. There was definitely a loss of good will to the trucking industry and in some instances that loss of good will was extreme. In the use of the term "good will" in this opinion I refer not only to the definition of Lord Eldon, who defined good will as "the probability that the old customers will resort to the old place," but also to the more comprehensive definition of Judge Story, "that good will is the advantage or benefit which is acquired by an establishment beyond the mere value of the capital stock, funds, or property employed therein, in consequence of the general public patronage and encouragement which it receives from constant or habitual customers on account of its local position, or common celebrity, or reputation for skill, or affluence, or punctuality, or from other accidental circumstances or necessities, or even from ancient partialities or prejudices." 24 Am. Jur. § 3, p. 803, and cases there cited. Therefore, the use of the term "good will" in the instant case relates not only to the direct damage done to the truckers, i. e., the refusal of truck users, because of the campaign, to avail themselves of that form of transportation (loss of business), but refers also to the more subtle type of injury done the entire trucking industry by discrediting it in the eyes of the general public, the 99% users of the highways, and eliminating the likelihood of public appreciation of the trucking industry as such or sympathy with the truckers' position which would be fundamental in gaining general public support to avoid the imposition of crippling burdens and restrictions.

The defendants' actions destroyed to a large extent the public confidence which the truckers had earned by their own efforts and which they might have won additionally, especially in the light of the innumerable beneficial accomplishments of the truckers in the field of long-haul transportation. We must assume that most people are honest law-abiding citizens, and that includes those engaged in the trucking field. It certainly has not been proved in this case that all or even a substantial number of truckers are law breakers. To the contrary, the evidence in this case clearly shows that, except for a small segment, the truckers are decent law-abiding citizens who obey the law, but as a result of this campaign they were categorized as lawbreakers, road-hoggers, completely indifferent to the safety of others on the highway and moochers on the public through failure to pay their way.

[Conspiracy Summarized]

As a final note it can be remarked at this point that, although not outlined above, overt acts to accomplish the objectives of this conspiracy were committed among others in the states of Connecticut, Indiana and Illinois. This feature is mentioned at this point to show that this was not a series of individual conspiracies but was one large ever-growing conspiracy with the single objective of "improving the competitive position of the railroad in the field of transportation," but by the illegal means of limitation of or destruction of the trucking industry. Restated in extremely simple form I have found the following:

1. That the defendants combined in and about May 19, 1949 with the intent and object of substantially lessening competition in the long-haul carriage of freight in unreasonable restraint of trade.

2. That they were joined in this combination by the Byoir organization on or about August 15, 1949 for the same purpose and with the same intent and for a handsome remuneration.

3. The instrumentality or means by which this object was to be achieved was primarily by a campaign designed to destroy the good will of the truckers and, secondly, by fomenting governmental restrictions obtained by virtue of the methods outlined in the factual phase of this decision.

4. Hundreds of overt acts in furtherance of this plan were carried out throughout the country, and all in furtherance of the same object and design.

THE LAW OF THE CASE

[Questions Presented]

A discussion of the law of the case must involve a consideration of the following legal questions:

(1) Was there a conspiracy in violation of the antitrust statutes? This question, of course, involved legality of means; legality of object; illegality of means and illegality of object.

(2) The rule of reason in free competitive enterprise:

(3) Whether, if a conspiracy is shown to exist, the defendants' activities complained of caused injury both to the plaintiffs and to the public:

(4) Whether the defenses interposed by the defendants justify the activities complained of; this includes a determination of the question as to whether, as contended by the defendants, plaintiffs in instituting this action were motivated by a desire to bring the defendants into disrepute in furtherance of an objective on the part of the plaintiffs to acquire a monopoly of the long-haul freight business:

(5) Whether, if an illegal conspiracy existed, the evidence presented is insufficient to link certain of the defendants with the activities as co-conspiratory:

(6) Damages and relief.

[Legal Conclusions]

After full consideration of the above problems the Court has determined its legal conclusions as follows:

(1) The defendants in this case formed a conspiracy in violation of the Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts for an illegal objective (injury to the truckers' business and good will and, if possible, the elimination of the truckers as competitors); that in concert and as co-conspirators the defendants attempted to use both legal and illegal means to accomplish their illegal objective.

(2) As to the rule of reason, the activities of the railroads and Byoir constituted unreasonable competition in a free competitive economic system.

(3) The activities of the railroads and Byoir caused injury to the trucker-plaintiffs and injury to the public.

(4) The defenses interposed by the defendants in this case are not available to the defendants under the facts of the case nor were the plaintiffs in instituting this action motivated by a desire to bring the defendants into disrepute in furtherance of an objective to acquire a monopoly of the long-haul freight business.

(5) The Court, sitting as a jury, has found the evidence to be sufficient to link all of the defendants as co-conspirators in this case.

(6) As to damages and relief, the Court holds that all of the plaintiffs are entitled to injunctive relief against continuing illegal activities of the defendants. In addition, PMTA is entitled to compensatory damages, to be trebled as provided by statute, together with reasonable costs and attorney's fees; the remaining individual defendants are entitled only to nominal damages by virtue of a stipulation filed in this action and which will be later discussed. But before proceeding to a discussion of the several legal questions involved a few general observations are in order.

[Statutes]

The pertinent sections of the Sherman and Clayton Acts in this case are as follows:

Sherman Act § 1.

"Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal: * * *."

Sherman Act § 2.

"Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, * * *."

Clayton Act § 15.

"Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides * * * and shall recover three-fold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee."

[Construction of Sherman Act]

Fortunately antitrust law is living law. Being far from static, it, like the Constitution, is dynamic law to be adjusted to the times and to new situations. As Chief Justice Hughes aptly remarked in Appalachian Coals Inc. v. U. S. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,025], 288 U. S. 344, 359-60 (1933):

"As a charter of freedom the Act has a generality and adaptability comparable to that found to be desirable in constitutional provisions. . . . The restrictions the Act imposes are not mechanical or artificial. Its general phrases, interpreted to attain its fundamental objects, set up the essential standard of reasonableness."

The court further pointed out that the Act should be construed in a broad and practical conception of the common law of restraint of trade and monopoly. As such the Act constitutes a flexible public policy directed against all undue limitations on competition, both in the form of realized monopolization as well as partial but significant restraints of trade tending to the same end, or attempts to reach the prohibited end.

In a very comprehensive opinion in the case of American Tobacco Co. v. United States [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,468], 328 U. S. 781 (1946), at pages 809-810, 66 S. Ct. at page 1139, Mr. Justice Burton speaking for the court set forth the nature of the prohibitions of the Sherman Act in the following language:

"It is not the form of the combination or the particular means used but the result to be achieved that the statute condemns. It is not of importance whether the means used to accomplish the unlawful objective are in themselves lawful or unlawful. Acts done to give effect to the conspiracy may be in themselves wholly innocent acts. Yet, if they are part of the sum of the acts which are relied upon to effectuate the conspiracy which the statute forbids, they come within its prohibition. No formal agreement is necessary to constitute an unlawful conspiracy. Often crimes are a matter of inference deduced from the acts of the person accused and done in pursuance of a criminal purpose."

[Nature of Conspiracy]

As has been said, a conspiracy is not made out in so many words but must be gathered from the four corners of the evidence and the inferences to be drawn therefrom. Intelligent businessmen, aided by expert legal counsel, simply do not say, or put in writing, that they are going to drive a competitor out of business. And, of course, they did not in this case. However, courts today are aware of the subtle and tacit agreements now used to effectuate business conspiracies. That foregoing statement is made with the full realization that certain phases of the Byoir campaign were something less than subtle. The picture of conspiracy as a meeting by twilight of a trio of sinister persons, with parted hats and close together, belongs to a darker age. McConnell, The Treble Damage Action, U. of Ill. Law Forum 659, 661 (1950). The distinct impression of the Court, sitting as a jury, in drawing the inferences from the evidence presented, is that this was a carefully calculated plan under the guidance of competent legal counsel which sought to choose a means of injuring and, if possible, destroying interstate truck competition that would afford the greatest amount of constitutional protection and thereby seek to render it immune from the coverage of the antitrust laws. A further inference to be drawn is that the plan was to be cast in the guise of a gigantic legislative campaign in order to attempt to surround it with the protections of the right to assemble, the right to petition the legislature and freedom of speech. With that thought in mind a calculated risk was taken that the plan adopted was the safest means of carrying out the predetermined object of seeking to maintain a monopoly in restraint of trade. Unfortunately, the gamble proved unsuccessful. The campaign of vilification upon the long-haul trucking industry, which was the real instrumentality for carrying out this conspiracy, far exceeds the factual patterns presented in the Slick Airways case which will be discussed infra in detail. This was a deliberate attempt to injure a competitor for an illegal purpose by destroying public confidence in it. And that places this case into an area long denounced by the antitrust laws.

[Technique Used]

The factors bringing about the present action are new in the field of antitrust litigation and must be examined in the light of the climate of competition as it then existed. It is a battle between two great leaders of a highly competitive industry, both staffed with capable and expert legal counsel. Public relation techniques are closely interwoven with every facet of this case. The chief device used by the railroads, and to a lesser extent by the plaintiffs, which latter did not involve violation of the Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts, is one long known to political experts under the term, "The Big Lie." This technique, as it appears from the evidence in this case, has been virtually adopted in toto by certain public relations firms under the less insidious and more palatable name of "The third-party technique." Its sole means and its effectiveness is to take a dramatic fragment of truth and by emphasis and repetition distort it into falsehood. That was the technique employed almost without exception by Byoir and the railroads throughout the campaign.

We will now proceed to discuss the legal questions in the order set forth at the opening of this section of the opinion.

The Conspiracy—Means and Objectives

An unlawful conspiracy has been defined as a combination between two or more persons to do an unlawful or criminal act, or to do a lawful act by criminal or unlawful means: Duplex Printing Press Co. v. Deering, 254 U. S. 443 (1921). A lawful act may, when done by many in concert, become a conspiracy and public wrong and may be prohibited; Bedford Cut Stone Co. v. Journeyman Stone Cutters' Ass'n of North America, 274 U. S. 37 (1937). An unlawful conspiracy may be formed without simultaneous action or agreement on the part of the conspirators; Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. United States [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,205], 306 U. S. 208 (1939). The civil liability for acts of conspiracy flows from the damages caused by the acts committed pursuant to the formed conspiracy; accurately speaking, there is no such thing as civil liability for conspiracy as such; and unless something is actually done by one or more of the conspirators which results in damage, no civil action lies; 11 Am. Jur. § 45, p. 577, and cases there cited.

Let us look at the record in this case. The acts committed by the defendants in pursuance of their plan reveal that the defendants formed an illegal conspiracy for an illegal object—injury to the truckers' business and good will and, if possible, the elimination of the truckers as competitors. By illegal means (the destruction of the truckers' good will) they sought to obtain their illegal objective. By what they claimed were legal means—appeals to the legislature—they also sought to accomplish their illegal objective.

The defendants have strenuously contended that all of their activities were geared to a legislative program and that none of their activities come within the orbit of activities proscribed by the Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts. It has been noted and the Court here restates that the entire campaign and its objectives did not constitute a mere appeal to the legislature; nor was it a large-scale lobbying campaign. True, one phase of the activities was of a legislative nature—but a rather new approach to legislation, to say the least. The other phase, and the more important one of the campaign, was one of vilification designed to destroy the good will of the long-haul trucking industry. Hence, the Court has rejected the contention of the defendants that their combination was entirely legislative. I have further determined that the railroads were not acting as the guardian of the public welfare, as they have so earnestly asserted. Even counsel for the defendants at R. 2853 had to admit that the defendants were not motivated by "altruism."

It is a situation such as this that the power and force of group action comes into play and the remarks of Mr. Justice Burton, supra, become very pertinent. When such group action is reinforced, as it was in this case, by unlimited financial resources to accomplish its objectives, it may very well and does in this case present a picture of activities proscribed by the Antitrust statutes. On the facts as found, a common law conspiracy has been made out.

The defendants in their arguments in this case have confused means and objectives. This problem was presented to Chief Judge Forman in the case of Slick Airways v. American Airlines [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,889], 107 F. Supp. 199 (D. N. J. 1952), appeal dismissed [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,466], 204 F. 2d 230 (3rd Cir. 1953), cert. denied, 346 U. S. 806 (1953). At page 207 Chief Judge Forman made this pertinent comment:

> "The defendants misconceive the nature of the complaint by confusing the means allegedly used with the result to be achieved . . . It is in this that they fall into error for these alleged acts rather constituted the means and methods by which the defendants conspired to drive the plaintiff out of business in violation of the anti-trust law."

A similar argument to the defendants' contention that their activities with regard to legislation were the only activities for which they combined (which is untrue) was made before Judge Forman. The defendants there claimed that their appearance in that case before the Civil Aeronautics Board to block and delay the issuance of a certificate of convenience and necessity to the plaintiff to act as a common carrier was proper and legal. Judge Forman disposed of that contention in the following language at page 214:

"While it may be questioned whether any of this alleged activity by defendants of itself constituted illegal conduct, it is fundamental, as previously noted, that legal means may be utilized to accomplish the unlawful objective of conspiracy, American Tobacco Co. v. U. S., supra, 328 U. S. at page 809, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 90 L. Ed. 1575, and this court cannot deprive the plaintiff of its right to attempt to prove that these alleged acts were part of the total acts undertaken to effectuate the alleged conspiracy."

The most recent decision dealing with the problem of confusion of object and means is Parmelee Transportation Co. v. Keeshin, et al. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,484], 144 F. Supp. 480 (D. Ill. 1956). The plaintiff in that case was a transportation company which for over a quarter of a century was in the business of transporting (for the defendant railroads) from one to another of the eight railroad stations in Chicago, passengers and baggage in the process of interstate journeys. The plaintiff alleged that one Keeshin promised a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission a valuable consideration if he would persuade the individual railroad presidents to use their influence to cause their lines to eliminate plaintiff from the transfer business in Chicago and grant the contract instead to a corporation to be formed by Keeshin. This was to be accomplished by the ICC member representing to the railroad presidents that he would exercise influence on the ICC in their favor. The complaint avers that the new company was formed, that the plaintiffs were not allowed to compete for the contract and that a less favorable contract than the one under which they formerly operated was entered into by the railroads with the new corporation in pursuance to the agreement. The defendants argued that the fact that the contract with the new corporation was an exclusive one did not make it illegal as a monopoly—which is true. They further argued that the contract made by the railroads acting together did not indicate the existence of a monopoly because they were not competitors and were therefore in a position to deal with whom they pleased. In reply to these contentions Judge Sullivan noted, at page 484:

"The flaws in the proposition lie in the minor premise; the assumption that the railroads could lawfully act together to grant a transfer contract ignores completely the complaint's allegation that the purpose and effect of that joint action was and is to prevent competition in biddings for contracts for terminal service. Acts otherwise lawful are 'within the proscription of the anti-trust statutes, if done for the purposes prohibited by the anti-trust laws, i. e., to eliminate competition.'"

This Court is not condemning the field of public relations. It is only condemning it as it was used in this case, as an instrumentality of destruction rather than one of promotion. Neither does the Court determine it illegal for an industry to seek any and every proper legislative goal; nor to enlist the support of other persons in obtaining legislation. But it is illegal to use the practices and methods shown by the record of this case to destroy a competitor's good will and to use third parties as fronts to carry out a consipracy to destroy a competitor.

The proofs in this case have definitely established joint action on the part of all of the defendants to destroy the good will and injure the business of the plaintiffs. They have proved the formation of so-called "independent citizen groups" which were mere pawns in circulating information derogatory to the plaintiffs; dissemination of false information to customers of the plaintiffs for the same purpose; the organization of groups to protest the use of the highways by plaitniffs' "Big Trucks," and the duping and using of public officials and officials of independent organizations to accomplish the same purpose of driving the plaintiffs out of competition with the defendants. The actions of the defendants do not fall within legal bounds of either proper means or proper objectives and consequently such activities must be condemned.

Rule of Reason

With the distinction between objectives and means disposed of, we now apply the facts as found to the climate of competition as it existed at the time the defendants embarked upon their illegal plan. A restraint may be unreasonable either because a restraint otherwise reasonable is accompanied with a specific intent to accomplish a forbidden restraint or because it falls within the class of restraints that are illegal per se. The plaintiffs have strenuously argued that per se violations have been made out in this case. I do not so find. The activities of the defendants were not such as to bring them within the purview of price fixing, refusing to deal with nonmembers of an association, thereby excluding a competitor from a substantial market, and the other classes of cases covered by that rule of law. See United States v. Insurance Board of Cleveland [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,460], 144 F. Supp. 684, 697 (D. Ohio 1956).

The record discloses that both sides used, or wanted to use, fronts and/or the propaganda technique. However, there is one very important distinction in the use of the technique by the parties; the plaintiffs always used the technique for the affirmative purpose of seeking legislation which would be beneficial to themselves rather than to burden the railroads. As they so often stated, and as the Court has found, they were seeking to remove what they called "The Chinese Wall" of low weight limitations which isolated it from the surrounding states. The plaintiffs engaged in the negative approach (which seeks to injure your competitor) only as a defensive measure after they were severely hurt in the public mind and the legislative halls by Byoir and the railroads. On the other hand, the defendants did not go out and seek to meet the new mode of competition by adjusting their facilities to the public demand, but rather sought to destroy the good will built up by this new competitor through the campaign as outlined. This public relations battle of bogus organizations and distortion of facts and vilification was not a climate of competition into which the defendants were injected. They created it. They were faced with the budding seeds of competition growing in an area that was once a railroad monopoly in the long-haul freight business. Once the seeds started to flourish because of the flexible service given to shippers, the railroads resorted to the negative approach of injuring the competitor rather than adjusting their facilities to meet the growing seeds of competition. And they certainly could have met this competition on the field of service with their extensive facilities and ability to enter the trucking business in places where flexibility was desired and required by the shippers even at an increased cost. See I. C. C. v. Parker, 326 U. S. 60 (1945). Neither the railroads nor Byoir were new at this "propaganda" approach. As noted, the railroads had been harshly criticized for its use by the Wheeler Report, supra. Byoir received even harsher treatment for his use of the technique. He was found guilty of violating the antitrust laws in a suit growing out of its activities on behalf of the A & P, which was one of its major selling points in seeking and getting the ERPC account. Byoir's prior activities in the field are well pointed out by Judge Lindley in the case of United States v. New York Great A & P Tea Co. [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,491], 67 F. Supp. 626 (D. Ill. 1946), at pages 673 and 674, where he alludes to the false front activities. On appeal Judge Minton, later Mr. Justice Minton, also spoke harshly of Byoir's illegal activities in furtherance of a scheme to violate the antitrust laws at [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,375] 173 F. 2d 79, 89, 90 (7th Cir. 1949).

It was Carl Byoir's view of antitrust law that there was no stigma attached to a violation thereof, and that "if you got caught you just ran into the wrong judge." In commenting upon the A & P decision Carl Byoir stated to Mr. Dilworth, then attorney for plaintiffs, in his deposition:

> "Now, you know and I know, Mr. Dilworth, that antitrust is not a law like going through a stop light, that it is a law on which you can go into twenty federal courts and get twenty different opinions on different matters, and this was pursued. The antitrust people didn't like Carl Byoir and they pursued me through five courts until they found a judge who had their view of antitrust. And I am not critical of it; it was his view; but as far as I am concerned I thing every one of these organizations was a perfectly proper organization, and if there is criticism that it wasn't publicized, sometimes you can't always get printed what you want to get printed." R. 2451; also see R. 228, 229. (Emphasis supplied)

The above quotation, in the light of Byoir's previous conflicts with the statutes, shows a studied, consistent and contempetuous attitude toward the Antitrust Laws of the United States and his willingness to flout them at will, if the price was right.

In arriving at the conclusion that the defendants' conduct was unreasonable I have considered and alluded to: (1) The economic conditions peculiar to the industry, including the fact that both industries are heavily regulated; (2) The practices which have obtained; (3) The nature of the defendants' plan; (4) The reasons which led to its adoption; (5) The probable consequences of the carrying out of that plan in relation to market prices and other matters affecting the public interest in interstate commerce and transportation. It follows logically that the ultimate effect of this plan would have been to deprive the shipping public of the great advantages of the flexible services provided by the trucking industry and would have relegated shippers to the use of railroad transportation only which was rapidly being proved out-dated (unless it adjusted itself, which it was in a position to do) to the modern demands of that same shipping public. See Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. U. S. [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,025], 288 U. S. 344, 361 (1933); Board of Trade v. U. S., 246 U. S. 231 (1918), and Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., 221 U. S. 1, 57 (1911) for the factors to be considered in an application of the rule of reason. Applying these criteria the Court, sitting as a jury, finds that the defendants acted unreasonably in their campaign against the long-haul truckers.

Proximate Cause

Prior to any discussion of the public and private injury which is necessary to support the plaintiffs' cause of action it is necessary to examine a stipulation of counsel. This stipulation was entered into on 17 May 1956 and, after approval by the Court, was filed of record as docket paper 460.

The stipulation in its pertinent sections reads as follows:

"2. No plaintiff (except plaintiff Pennsylvania Motor Trust Association) has paid any counsel fees or expenses in connection with this suit, except as stated in paragraph 4." (Note: the importance of this section and section 4 will become apparent in the "Relief" phase of this decision.)

"3. The only damages claimed by the plaintiffs (except plaintiff Pennsylvania Motor Truck Association) are those that each of them may have suffered because of its inability to carry more than the weight limits fixed by the laws of Pennsylvania prior to the change in the law in 1955."

"4. Since 1949 plaintiffs (except plaintiff Pennsylvania Motor Truck Association) have supported the activities of the Pennsylvania Motor Truck Association by making contributions to the cost of such activities and none has objected to any such activities."

A reading of section 3 of this stipulation might at first give the impression that the plaintiffs have limited the proof of private and public injury to such that might flow from the veto of S. B. 615. This is far from the case. Proof of monetary (as contrasted with injury-type) damages and injunctive relief were the subjects of several pre-trial meetings of counsel with the Court. In the interest of limiting proof of monetary damage (as constrasted to injury to public and plaintiffs) and to shorten the trial of the case, counsel for the parties entered into the aforesaid stipulation. It is in that context and only that context that it is to be read. In that light it becomes apparent that its importance does not become a matter for legal discussion until we arrive at the "Relief" and monetary (actual amount) damage phase of the decision.

In an action of this nature the plaintiff must allege and prove a violation of the act and damage to his business or property proximately resulting from the acts and conduct of the defendants which constitute a violation of the act. Injury to the plaintiffs in and of itself is not sufficient to warrant a civil action for injunctive relief and or damages. There must be harm to the general public in the form of undue restriction of trade and commerce as a result of the wrongful contract, combination or concert of activity. However, the injury to the public need not be nationwide in geographical scope. If it involved monopolistic effect upon interstate commerce it may be narrow in geographic scope. It must, however, injuriously and appreciably affect the public interest. Shotkin v. General Electric Co. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,341], 171 F. 2d 236, 238, 239 (10th Cir. 1948).

However, the Supreme Court has permitted plaintiffs in treble damage suits to rely on inferential and comparative evidence on the ground that the wrongdoer should bear the risk of the uncertainty which his wrong has created. See Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc. [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,445], 327 U. S. 251 (1946); Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Co., 282 U. S. 555 (1931). The Court made it clear that there is a great public interest involved in civil antitrust litigation since it forms one of the greatest deterrents to the violation of the antitrust laws by virtue of the prospect of a large money recovery by a plaintiff. Accordingly, and as noted by the Court in the Bigelow case, difficulties of proof are no longer confused with the right of recovery.

A.

Public Injury

The Court finds that defendants' activities were a substantial factor, and the proximate cause of injury to the public. The plaintiffs have shown a resultant increase in the cost to shippers and consumers of all commodities necessary to life, including clothing and food, a high percentage of which reaches consumers only by carriage in motor trucks. If the effect of the conspiracy is to increase the cost of operation of the truckers, thereby increasing consumer's costs, an injury to the public is effected. The loss of business suffered by and expense entailed to each and every plaintiff and the industry as a whole in counteracting the undermining of public confidence was tremendous and quite obviously resulted in higher costs to the consumer. This in and of itself is a sufficient injury to support the cause of action. There is further public injury which flowed from the so-called legislative phase of the combination. Because of the legislative activities of the defendants, as set forth in the facts, the public was deprived of the flexible service and convenience supplied by this mode of transportation in certain of the states involved. Although a sufficient show of public injury has been made out on the basis of the prior discussion, this is an added proof that should be mentioned.

B.

Private Injury

The plaintiffs have satisfied the Court by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendants' activities as set forth constituted a substantial factor in injuring the plaintiffs in their business and property. The private injury was twofold, either part fully satisfying the requirement that defendants' actions constituted a proximate cause of private injury sufficient to support the plaintiffs' cause of action. The former has already been mentioned in the "Summary" section of the opinion. It was the tremendous loss of good will flowing from the defendants' efforts to undermine public confidence through its campaign of vilification. The damages flowing from the expenses entatiled by PMTA in counterbalancing the defendants' campaign fully satisfy the Court of ample private injury. The damage to the individual plaintiffs through the loss of good will is also certainly present and fully meets the requirements of showing private injury. Darden v. Besser [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,646] 147 F. Supp. 376, 382 (E. D. Mich. 1956).

The second phase of the injury pertains to the legislative end of the conspiracy. Defendants' counsel in his opening argument admitted that the passage of S. B. 615 would have enormously increased the gross revenues of trucks using the roads at a trifling increase in cost, (R. 42). A Byoir study distributed in the name of the Pennsylvania State Grange reported that fifteen typical motor carriers would have increased their gross annual earnings by more than 3½ million dollars for added license fee payments of only $26,352.00. (R. 704-710; P. 112). This information was buttressed by a study of I. C. C. records which showed that five of the present plaintiffs would have grossed approximately one million dollars more in one year had S. B. 615 been passed, (R. 1316; P-169). The Byoir study further indicated that the veto meant that some five million dollars of freight was retained by the Pennsylvania Railroad because the truck limit was not raised, (R. 411; P-53.) Mr. Mackie testified that in a typical area, defeat of the bill would result in a loss of revenue of $9,270.00 per truck per year (R. 1452), and one of the plaintiffs, Mr. Noerr, gave concrete illustrations of the injury to his own company's business, (R. 5473-5476). All of these losses stem from the legislation in question but they are not necessary to a decision in this case. The injury to the individual plaintiffs and the PMTA flowing from the campaign of vilification fully satisfies the requisites of a valid cause of action made out by a preponderance of the evidence. The Court realizes that some of the money and expense which was expended in self-defense in counteracting the defendants' campaign would have been spent for publicity purposes without the railroad-created climate of competition. That point will be discussed in detail later in the opinion. Another important question which will be discussed at that time is whether the individual plaintiffs, except for the PMTA, have precluded themselves from recovering anything but nominal damages because of the stipulation limiting their claim to compensatory (as contrasted with injury and proximate cause) damages to those flowing from an executive act—the veto of S. B. 615.

Defenses

[Summary of Defenses]

The defendants seek to sustain their theory of the case on the basis of certain legal contentions which fall into six general categories. While the present discussion will not comment upon all of defendants' case law, every contention and every case has been thoroughly examined, and it is the Court's opinion that a review in this opinion of the said contentions will be adequate for a proper disposition of the case. Each will be outlined and discussed individually in the order in which they appear, which is as follows:

1. A judicial tribunal may not invalidate a duly promulgated legislative or executive act.

2. The doctrine of separation of powers precludes a search for executive or legislative motives in carrying out their respective functions.

3. A monopoly created by virtue of duly enacted state legislation is without the ambit of the antitrust laws.

4. The defendants' activities merely constituted an appeal to the legislature; that to deprive them of the right to act in the manner set forth in the facts would be to deprive them of the constitutional rights of freedom of speech, freedom to assemble and freedom to petition the legislature.

5. The plaintiffs in instituting this action were motivated by a desire to bring the defendants into disrepute in furtherance of their own objective to acquire a monopoly of the long-haul freight business.

6. A certain group of the defendants assert that even if an illegal conspiracy is found to exist (which they deny) they cannot be included as co-conspirators in spite of their membership, contribution to and general acceptance of the ERPC plan of attack, since they had no part in planning the details of the campaign, attended only a few of the ERPC meetings, and hence the evidence is insufficient to link them as co-conspirators.

[Separation of Powers]

1. & 2. These defenses relating directly to separation of powers of government are best understood by a joint discussion of the problems presented. The defendants place great reliance on the cases of Arizona v. California, 283 U. S. 423, 455 n.7 (1931) and Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch 87 (1810) to sustain their theory of the case. They argue that no inquiry may be made concerning the motives or wisdom of a state legislature or state executive acting within its proper scope of powers. By analogy they seek to carry these principles over to the case under consideration. In the opinion of the Court the analogy is not a valid one. This Court is in complete accord with the principles set forth in those cases. The plaintiffs do not seek to invalidate any legislation nor do they seek to inquire into Governor Fine's motives in vetoing S. B. 615, at least at this state of the discussion. To the contrary, they seek to inquire into defendants' motives in seeking to have Governor Fine veto the measure. Further, the conduct in question preceded and was independent of the executive and legislative acts and was exerted against the entire public; it is for that reason that they are faced with the above suit. They attempted to effect a restraint forbidden by the Sherman Act and hence are not protected by legislation which helps to effectuate the conspiracy.

There may be some force and validity to defendants' argument concerning injury flowing from a legislative or executive act when we reach a discussion of the compensatory damage and relief stage of this opinion. But such argument has no valid place at this point of the discussion. The defendants' contention with respect to the two defenses under consideration is well answered by the Supreme Court in the case of Angle v. Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha Railway Co., 151 U. S. 1, 18, 19, 20 (1894). In that case there was legislative grant to the Portage Company to construct a railroad. The defendants bribed the officials of the grantee Portage Company to break their contract with the plaintiffs to construct the railroad for the Portage Company. Then by false representations the defendants induced the legislature to revoke the grant. Fletcher v. Peck was argued by the defendants as precluding any recovery by the plaintiffs. The Court first quoted from the Fletcher case in order to properly focus upon the law in question. It then applied those legal principles to the facts as found in the Angle case and stated:

"The rule upon which this decision (Fletcher) rests has been followed in many cases and has become a settled rule of our jurisprudence. The rule, briefly stated, is that whenever an act of the legislature is challenged in court the inquiry is limited to the question of power, and does not extend to the matter of expediency, the motives of the legislators, or the reasons which were spread before them to induce the passage of the act. This principle rests upon the independence of the legislature as one of the coordinate departments of the government. It would not be seemly for either of the three departments to be instituting an inquiry as to whether another acted wisely, intelligently, or corruptly."

It was the defendants' position in the above case that any wrong done by the Omaha Company to Portage was done by the Wisconsin legislature acting in pursuance to its undoubted power in taking away the land from the Portage Company and giving it to Omaha. Thus, no court could inquire into the influence, motives or information under which those acts were passed. In answering this contention the Court said:

"But it must be remembered that the wrongs of the Omaha Company were done before the legislature passed either the acts of 1882 or that of 1883, and it is to redress those wrongs that this suit was brought. Can it be that the legislature, by passing those acts, condoned the wrongs, and relieved the Omaha from any liability to the Portage Company? * * * An executive may pardon and thus relieve a wrongdoer from the punishment the public exacts for the wrong, but neither executive nor legislature can pardon a private wrong or relieve the wrongdoer from civil liability to the individual he has wronged. The wrong was not one done by the state or in the act of the legislature in taking away the land grant, but in such proceedings on the part of the Omaha Company as put the Portage Company in a position which apparently called for the action of the legislature. There is no more challenge of the validity of this legislation by suing the Omaha Company for the wrongs it did leading up to this legislation than there is in challenging the validity of a criminal proceeding by an action against the prosecutor for malicious prosecution. . . ." (Emphasis Supplied.)

A reading of this language makes it evident that it is applicable to the case at bar and the defendants' contentions in this respect must fall. Obviously, the doctrine of the Fletcher case has been extended to the personal protection of members of a legislative committee from a cause of action under the Civil Rights statutes when acting within the sphere of legitimate legislative activity. The Court is in complete agreement with that legal principle as set down in the case of Tenney v. Brandhove, 341 U. S. 367, 377, 378 (1951), and the principles applied in Daniel v. Family Security Life Ins. Co., 336 U. S. 220, 224 (1949). However, they simply are not applicable to the case under discussion.

A situation somewhat analogous in principle to the case at bar is found in Hazel Atlas Glass Co. v. Hartford Empire Co., 322 U. S. 238, 247 (1944). In that case Hartford was seeking a patent and realized it had no chance before the Patent Commissioner unless it could prove it had produced a novelty. In order to do so the defendant in support of its application filed an article ostensibly written by the president of the American Flint Glass Workers Union, which in fact was prepared by the Hartford Empire Co. and its agents and attorneys. The Supreme Court ordered the patent set aside despite the fact that the Court of Appeals, in upholding the patent, expressly stated that it had not been influenced by the questionable article. In setting aside the patent the Supreme Court stated:

". . . Doubtless it is wholly impossible accurately to appraise the influence that the article exerted on the judges. But we do not think the circumstances call for such an attempted appraisal. Hartford's officials and lawyers thought the article material. They conceived it in an effort to persuade a hostile Patent Office to grant their patent application, and went to considerable trouble and expense to get it published. Having lost their infringement suit based on the patent in the District Court wherein they did not specifically emphasize the article, they urged the article upon the Circuit Court and prevailed. They are in no position now to dispute its effectiveness. Neither should they now be permitted to escape the consequences of Hartford's deceptive attribution of authorship to Clarke on the ground that what the article stated was true. Truth needs no disguise. The article, even if true, should have stood or fallen under the only title it could honestly have been given—that of a brief in behalf of Hartford, prepared by Hartford's agents, attorneys, and collaborators."

It is worthy of note that in the Hazel Atlas case, as in the case under consideration, the activities of the defendants were done without attribution in order to practice a fraud. It is also worthy of note that the Court was not impressed with the fact that the statements contained in the Clarke article might very well have been true. Here we have a situation where the statements sent out by Byoir were distortions of truth rather than truths and always without attribution. It was not only a fraud upon the legislatures and executives for an illegal purpose (to gain a monopoly), but it was also a fraud upon the public to gain that same purpose through the instrumentality of destroying the truckers' good will. Also, it should be kept in mind that the activities under attack also preceded the executive and legislative acts which the defendants claim are the only activities under scrutiny in the case. To the contrary, it is the entire railroad campaign, the destruction of good will, the fomenting of legislation and the vilification that are under attack.

It should always be kept in mind that this Court has no desire to examine Governor Fine's motives in vetoing S. B. 615. This Court is, however, interested in defendants' efforts to create motives. A cursory reading of the facts as found would quickly indicate that the destruction of the defendants' good will was the primary goal of the defendants in their plan to monopolize the long-haul freight business; but even if their activities were found to be limited to attempts to obtain legislation or to seek the veto of S. B. 615, their conduct under the facts as found constituted illegal activity prohibited by the antitrust laws. See also Chief Judge Kirkpatrick's opinion in Singer Sewing Machine Co. v. American Safety Table Co., 88 F. Supp. 260 (E. D. Pa. 1949).

[Legislatively-Created Monopoly]

3. We find another group of cases which advance the proposition that a legislatively-created monopoly is without the ambit of the antitrust laws. United States v. Association of American Railroads [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,417], 4 F. R. D. 510 (D. Neb. 1945); Okefenokee Rural Electric Membership Corp. v. Florida Power & Light Co. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,809], 214 F. 2d 413 (5th Cir. 1954); Georgia v. Pennsylvania Railroad [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,344], 324 U. S. 439 (1945); Parker v. Brown [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,250], 317 U. S. 341 (1943); United States v. Rock Royal Co-operative, 307 U. S. 533 (1939); Mackay Radio & Telegraph Co. v. F. C. C., 97 F. 2d 641 (D. C. Cir. 1938); Keogh v. Chicago & N. W. Ry., 260 U. S. 156 (1922); Olsen v. Smith, 195 U. S. 332 (1904); and the Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36 (1873).

The defendants argue that since they were merely seeking to impose legislation upon the truckers any monopoly that they may have obtained by virtue of such legislation would be a legally protected one. In this argument they ignore the fact that their campaign was far more than a mere legislative scheme. They further ignore the principle that legal means may not be used to accomplish an illegal objective. This Court agrees that a legislature has the right and power to legally create a monopoly for the general welfare of the people, and that the recipient of such a monopoly is legally protected, if his conduct is otherwise legal, as are the responsible government officials carrying out the will of the legislature. Further, the beneficiaries of such a monopoly, within permissible limits, may enforce these rights in the courts. But it is not a mere legislatively-created monopoly that is under attack in this case. It is a conspiracy to destroy a competitor; a conspiracy to destroy his good will; the distortion of facts to further that end; the presentation of distorted and false information to the public and to public officials that are under attack, as well as the fomentation of government restrictions.

All of the cases cited by the defendants to advance the contentions set forth in this category explicitly recognize that the recipients of such a monopoly are not PER SE without the ambit of the antitrust laws, and certainly not when a legislative campaign forms a part of a conspiracy to gain an unlawful end. The language of the cited cases alluding to this problem is worthy of note:

In U. S. v. Association of American Railroads [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,417], 4

F. R. D. 510 (D. Neb. 1945), the Court at page 524 said:

> "It need hardly be observed, and is not questioned by the defendants, that, notwithstanding the important statutory function in the determination of interstate railroad charges, rates, fares, services, and practices of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Sherman Act applies to interstate common carriers by rail as well as by other means. . . ."

And in Georgia v. Pennsylvania Railroad [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,344], 324 U. S. 439 (1945) at page 456:

> "These carriers are subject to the antitrust laws." . . . Regulated industries are not per se exempt from the Sherman Act. . . ."

Finally, in Parker v. Brown [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,250], 317 U. S. 341 (1943) at page 351:

> "There is no suggestion of a purpose to restrain state action in the Act's legislative history. . . ."
>
> "True, a state does not give immunity to those who violate the Sherman Act by authorizing them to violate it, or declaring that their action is lawful."

The plaintiffs in this case are not seeking to invalidate the legislation itself on the ground that it violates the Sherman Act as in Parker v. Brown, supra, nor are they seeking to undo the action of a state in creating a monopoly. See Slick Airways, Inc. v. American Air Lines, supra; c. f. Forgett v. Scharf [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,610], 181 F. 2d 754, 756, 757 (3d Cir. 1950); U. S. v. I. B. C. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,649], 150 F. Supp. 397, 404 (S. D. N. Y. 1957).

The defendants place great reliance on the case of Okefenokee Rural Electric Membership Corp. v. Florida Power & Light Co., supra. That case involved an action against a competing power company, Florida Power and Light Company, the City of Jacksonville, which was also in the power business, and the Commissioner for Utilities for the City of Jacksonville. The plaintiffs alleged that in pursuance of a conspiracy between the defendants they induced the Florida Highway Department to refuse permission to the plaintiffs to construct proposed lines along a state highway (which because of the marshy condition of the land was the only feasible route) by virtue of false arguments and a smear campaign that there were already pre-existing lines over the same route. The District Court found that the transaction was not one of interstate commerce because the sale and delivery to the ultimate consumer was in Florida, in spite of the fact that the plaintiff's power source was in Georgia and the transmission lines carried it from that source continuously into Florida. In the alternative it found that even if interstate commerce were involved, the restraint was insubstantial and indirect. There is no doubt that interstate commerce is involved in the case at bar and further that the effects of the conspiracy upon that interstate commerce are both substantial and direct. The District Court in Okefenokee further found, and the Circuit Court agreed, that the orders complained of were the sole responsibility of the administrative boards, and the subject matter was exclusively within their jurisdiction; hence, the validity of those orders could be attacked only in an action of mandamus or other such remedy in the state court and could not be collaterally attacked in an antitrust proceeding.

The plaintiffs have not here limited themselves in their proofs to those injuries proximately resulting from the veto of S. B. 615 in seeking to sustain their cause of action. Their allegations and proofs go far beyond anything so narrow as that executive act. The effect of the campaign to destroy the truckers' good will had a very substantial and direct effect upon interstate commerce and hence this case is beyond the law of the Okefenokee case insofar as plaintiffs' ability to sustain their cause of action is concerned. Defendants have earnestly striven to convince the Court, sitting as a jury, that the plaintiffs' entire case (not simply their right to compensatory damages) is limited to complaints of the defendants' attempts to seek legislation and the loss flowing from such. Hence, they seek to bring themselves within the purview of the Okefenokee case. In that respect they have failed to convince the Court.

Further, the truckers do not contend that they have an unrestricted legal right to use the highways; nor are they attempting to alter any decision of any responsible public official. But they did have a legal right to be in the transportation business. Unlike Okefenokee, and like Angle, the defendants conspired to destroy the good will of their chief competitor in furtherance of their illegal objective, independent of any legislative or executive act. The limitation of the case to an executive act appears only when the stipulation of counsel comes into the fore upon a discussion of the compensatory or actual damages to be allowed the plaintiffs.

Any discussion of immunity from the antitrust laws because of the alleged presence of a legislative act as the instrumentality for furthering the object of monopolizing a segment of an industry requires an examination of Mr. Justice Holmes' opinion in the case of American Banana Co. v. United Fruit Co., 213 U. S. 347, 358 (1909). This is the last of three cases upon which the defendants place great reliance, the other two being Fletcher v. Peck and the Okefenokee cases. The Banana case has been reviewed on many occasions since it was decided in 1909, and a proper examination of the law as set down in that case requires a reading of that decision in the light of subsequent Supreme Court decisions. The two most enlightening expositions are found in United States v. Sisal Sales Corp., 274 U. S. 268, 275, 276 (1927) and Steele v. Bulova Watch Co., 344 U. S. 280, 288 (1952).

An examination of these cases makes it apparent that the rule of the Banana case is not controlling under the facts as found. The court in the Banana case simply held that it was not the Congressional intent in passing the Sherman Act to extend its coverage and prohibitions to an alleged monopoly grounded on a seizure of property in pursuance of a sovereign act of a foreign nation. They then found that the acts in question did not constitute a tort in the place where the activity occurred. In the case under consideration the railroads' activities were in no way limited to securing legislation or influencing executive acts. The principle that no legal damages can flow from the acts as such is important in this case only as to any limitation upon the monetary damages claimed by the plaintiffs. Finally, as opposed to the facts in the Banana case, all of the facts—the destruction of good will, the vilification, the distortion, as well as the attempts to foment legislation, occurred within the United States.

In the Sisal case the court granted an injunction against several individuals and corporations who by virtue of a conspiracy had obtained control of the importation and sale of sisal from Mexico and a complete monopoly of the internal and external trade and commerce in that product. Although sisal was a product of Mexico, a foreign country, and monopoly was effectuated by securing the passage of discriminating legislation in that country, the court held that the activities in question were in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act and the Wilson Tariff Act and that the case was not controlled by the Banana decision, pointing to the above-referred-to narrow application of the Banana doctrine.

In the Bulova Watch Co. case, Bulova sought an injunction and monetary damages against an American citizen and resident for acts of trade-mark infringement and unfair competition consummated in Mexico. Learning that the plaintiff, which produced a nationally advertised watch, had not registered its trade-mark under the laws of Mexico, the defendant produced a Mexican registration for himself for the trade-mark "Bulova." He then proceeded to conduct a watch business in Mexico City, where without Bulova's authorization and with the purpose of deceiving the buying public, he stamped the name "Bulova" on watches there assembled and sold same, many of them eventually turning up for repair, in the United States. The defendant argued that the Banana case was controlling and that the plaintiff's cause of action should be dismissed. In refuting this claim the court said at page 288:

> "American Banana Co. v. United Fruit Co., 213 U. S. 347 (1909), compels nothing to the contrary . . . . This Court agreed that a violation of American laws could not be grounded on a foreign nation's sovereign acts. Viewed in its context, the holding in that case was not meant to confer blanket immunity on trade practices which radiate unlawful consequences here, merely because they were initiated or consummated outside the territorial limits of the United States. Unlawful effects in this country, absent in the posture of the Banana case before us, are often decisive; this Court held as much in Thomsen v. Cayser, 243 U. S. 66 (1917), and United States v. Sisal Sales Corp., 274 U. S. 268 (1927). As in Sisal, the crux of the complaint here is 'not merely of something done by another government at the instigation of private parties;' petitioner by his 'own deliberate acts, here and elsewhere . . . . brought about forbidden results within the United States.' 274 U. S., at 276 . . ."

In the light of the above cases and discussion it is evident that the Banana case is not controlling of the outcome of this case, certainly insofar as the plaintiffs sustaining their cause of action.

[Constitutional Rights]

4. We now come to a contention by the defendants which has been previously mentioned with respect to the Court's finding concerning the birth of this conspiracy and the calculated risk pursued by the railroads in their campaign against the trucking industry. This Court is most sensitive to the fact that constitutional rights are not to be treated lightly. The desire to insure against any tyranny of law was the moving force behind the creation of our great constitutional safeguards. It is with that thought in mind that the Court approaches this contention, namely, that the defendants' activities or concert of action are protected by virtue of the constitutional rights of freedom of speech, freedom of assembly, and freedom to petition the legislature. The defendants point to the cases of U. S. v. CIO, 335 U. S. 106 (1948); Near v. Minn., 283 U. S. 697 (1931); U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542 (1875), among others, in support of their argument. The Court has thoroughly examined the legal principles set forth in those cases, as well as the more recent expositions on those subjects and allied subjects, and finds that they do not extend to the conduct in question. There is no question of a prior restraint involved in this case. The defendants are not being precluded from publishing anything within legal limitations; nor are they being, nor will they be, restrained from petitioning the legislature. Further, the Court is not precluding the defendants or anyone else from seeking out allies. As has already been stated, this is no attack upon public relations or the achievement of a legislative goal through publications, speeches, press releases, or the alignment of friends to seek to accomplish a valid legislative purpose. But when these resources are utilized for the purpose of applying the great power and wealth of group action against a competitor in order to accomplish an illegal objective—the monopolization of the long-haul freight business, they become something more than mere freedom of speech, freedom to assemble, or freedom to petition the legislature—they become an illegal conspiracy. When facts are distorted, allies are "created", public and private officials are "duped" and "used", attempts are made to secure decisions of public officials by virtue of "facts" and "research" which are distortions of truth, and which in the defendants' own language constituted the "planting" of their "poison", we go far beyond the scope of constitutional privilege. Kansas City Star Co. v. U. S. [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,601], 240 F. 2d 643, 665, 666 (1957). It is not now, and it never has been the law, that a common law conspiracy is within the confines of constitutional protections. The clear and present danger test has never been applied to a conspiracy which reaches the stage of hundreds of overt acts in pursuance of a plan to destroy. This situation has been presented to the Supreme Court before in the case of Giboney v. Empire Storage and Ice Company [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,391], 336 U. S. 490 (1949). The legal principles stated there are certainly applicable here. This is a new type of conspiracy carefully planned to circumvent prior decisions. The Giboney case is one of a series of cases involving the application of freedom of speech to peaceful picketing, but is not in any way limited to that state of facts. The case concerned the constitutional power of Missouri to apply its anti-trade-restraint law to the activities of labor unions, and to enjoin union members from peaceful picketing carried on as a course of conduct which was in violation of the Missouri law noted. The State law in question reads as follows:

> "Combinations in Restraint of Trade Declared a Conspiracy. Any person who shall create, enter into, become a member of or participate in any pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation or understanding with any person or persons in restraint of trade or competition in the importation, transportation, manufacture, purchase or sale of any product or commodity in this state, or any article or thing bought or sold whatsoever, shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy in restraint of trade, and shall be punished as provided in this article. Mo. Rev. Stat. Anno. ¶ 8301 (1939)." (Emphasis supplied).

The similarity to the antitrust laws is certainly of more than passing interest. In that case an ice peddlers' union was seeking to break down the resistance of nonmember peddlers who refused to join the union by inducing wholesale distributors to agree not to sell ice to nonunion peddlers. The union's objective was to secure higher wages and better working conditions for its members. When the plaintiff/distributor refused to go along with the union plan, the union resorted to peaceful picketing, the effect of which was to reduce the distributor's business 85%.

In upholding the grant of the state court injunction against a continuation of the defendant's activities in that case, Mr. Justice Black stated at pages 501 and 502:

> ". . . No opinions relied on by petitioners assert a constitutional right in picketers to take advantage of speech or press to violate valid laws designed to protect important interests of society."
>
> ". . . Nor can we say that the publication here should not have been restrained because of the possibility of separating the picketing conduct into illegal and legal parts. . . . For the placards were to effectuate the purposes of an unlawful combination, and their sole, unlawful immediate objective was to induce Empire to violate the Missouri law by acquiescing in unlawful demands to agree not to sell ice to nonunion peddlers. It is true that the agreements and course of conduct here were as in most instances brought about through speaking or writing. But it has never been deemed an abridgement of freedom of speech or press to make a course of conduct illegal merely because the conduct was in part initiated, evidenced, or carried out by means of language, either spoken, written, or printed.
>
> . . . Such an expansive interpretation of the constitutional guaranties of speech and press would make it practically impossible ever to enforce laws against agreements in restraint of trade as well as many other agreements and conspiracies deemed injurious to society." (Emphasis supplied)

There is no question but that the language above is applicable to federal as well as state laws which deem a course of conduct to be detrimental to the public good and illegal. The antitrust laws are valid laws. They indicate the public policy of the Congress of the United States in the field of competitive business. The defendants have engaged in a course of conduct which satisfies the requirements of a common law conspiracy as well as a violation of these laws. Caraway v. Ford Motor Company [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,705], 148 F. Supp. 776, 777 (D. Mo. 1957). In that posture it becomes apparent that the defendants' conduct is not within that broad expanse of conduct which is protected by the First and Fourteenth Amendments. What the defendants have combined to do is something more than free speech; something more than freedom to assemble; something more than a petition to the legislature. They have engaged in a course of conduct designed to destroy the good will of a competitor in order to secure a monopoly—all of this in violation of a valid public policy set down many years ago by the Congress of the United States. The Supreme Court has said explicitly that a course of conduct in violation of a strong public policy established either by law or ad hoc decisions may constitute a course of activity without the ambit of constitutional protections. Hughes v. Superior Court, 339 U. S. 460 (1950); International Brotherhood v. Hanke, 339 U. S. 470 (1950); International Brotherhood v. Vogt, Inc., 25 L. W. 4505.

Much stronger is the fact situation as found by the Court in this case than of those above cited. Further, the Court finds that the defendants also violated another Federal law in the course of their campaign of vilification. In pursuing this plan the railroads, through Byoir, staged a television program broadcast in the name of the Association of Pennsylvania Township Supervisors over Station WGAL in Lancaster, Pennsylvania, which failed to disclose the railroad sponsorship, in violation of the Federal Communications Act, 47 U. S. C. § 317,[1] which reads as follows:

[1] 47 U. S. C. A. § 153 "Definitions (b) 'Radio communication' or 'communication by radio' means the transmission by radio of writing, signs, signals, pictures, and sounds of all kinds, including all instrumentalities, facilities, apparatus, and services (among other things, the receipt, forwarding, and delivery of communications) incidental to such transmission." (Emphasis Supplied.)

(k) " 'Radio station' or 'station' means a station equipped to engage in radio communication or radio transmission of energy."

Subsection (b) of this section defining radio communication includes television as one form of radio transmission and this chapter applies to every phase of television. See Allen B. Dumont Laboratories v. Carroll, 184 F. 2d 153, 155 (3d Cir. 1950), cert. den., 340 U. S. 929 (1951).

At page 155 Chief Judge Biggs said:

"Section 3(b), 47 U. S. C. A. § 153(b), defines 'Radio communication' as 'The transmission by radio of writing, signs, signals, pictures, and sounds of all kinds . . .'. The television and radio industries have construed this definition to include television as 'one form of radio transmission'. There can be no doubt of the correctness of this construction."

"All matter broadcast by any radio station for which service, money, or any other valuable consideration is directly or indirectly paid, or promised to or charged or accepted by, the station so broadcasting, from any person, shall, at the time the same is so broadcast, be announced as paid for or furnished as the case may be, by such person."

Hardy, the Byoir agent in Pennsylvania, prepared the telecast, and the ERPC ultimately paid for it in full. In accordance with the standard procedure throughout their campaign there was no mention of the ERPC or Byoir. Further, there is ample evidence to warrant the finding that there was no intent to discontinue the above-noted practice. To the contrary, had it not been for this lawsuit there no doubt would have been an increased use of TV and radio by Byoir under the sponsorship of a "front" and, of course, without attribution to the defendants.

Circuit Judge Prettyman in commenting upon this provision of the Communications Act stated that Congress has frequently placed limitations upon the use of the mails and broadcasting. In referring to broadcasts he pointed out that such activity was permeated with a public interest and hence the public was entitled to know who was addressing it over the air. He pointed out that all political parties identify themselves over the air in order to make their appeal useful and that the only reason for anonymity of politcal broadcasting must be a purpose of deception. Communist Party of U. S. v. Subversive Activities Control Board, 223 F. 2d 531, 556 (D. C. Cir. 1954), reversed on other grounds in 351 U. S. 115 (1956); c. f. United States v. Harriss, 347 U. S. 612 (1954) and Securities & Exchange Commission v. Morgan, Lewis & Bockius, 113 F. Supp. 85 (E. D. Pa. 1953), aff'd. 209 F. 2d 44 (3d Cir. 1953).

It has been the position of both the railroads and Byoir that the success of their campaign was entirely dependent upon non-attribution to the railroads. In the light of the frequent distortion of facts by Byoir in its news releases, Judge Prettyman's comment concerning deception becomes extremely pertinent. In any event, this is a further example of how the defendants' conduct, although attempted to be shrouded with a legislative cloak, ultimately narrows down to an illegal conspiracy to utilize the group power of the ERPC and Byoir to destroy the good will of the trucking industry in order to secure a monopoly in restraint of trade and in violation of the antitrust laws.

Another case dealing with this subject is the Associated Press v. United States [1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,384], 326 U. S. 1, 7 (1945). The court there stated that it would degrade the clear and present danger doctrine "to fashion from it a shield for business publishers who engage in business practices condemned by the Sherman Act."

And in the case of Kobe v. Dempsey Pump Co. [1952 Trade Cases ¶ 67,312], 198 F. 2d 416, 424, 425 (10th Cir. 1952), cert. denied, 344 U. S. 837 (1952), we find a situation where the defendants had instituted admittedly valid patent infringement suits as part of a broader design to violate the antitrust laws. The court held that in the light of that improper objective the privilege of bringing a valid suit was no longer present and the conduct was found to be illegal. Also see Cape Cod Food Products, Inc. v. National Cranberry Association [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,769], 119 F. Supp. 900, 907 (D. Mass. 1954), and Forgett v. Scharf [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,610], 181 F. 2d 754, 756, 757 (3rd Cir. 1950).

In the light of the facts as found and the applicable cases, the defendants' argument that their conduct is constitutionally protected must fall of its own weight.

[Plaintiffs' Motives]

5. The Court will not go into great detail in examining the question of plaintiffs' motives in instituting this action because that question has been covered extensively under the heading of "The Counterclaims." It will simply be mentioned that neither a finding of improper motives on the plaintiffs' part in bringing suit nor a determination that the plaintiffs were also monopolists would constitute a defense, under the circumstances, to plaintiffs' cause of action. See Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Seagram & Sons [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,737], 340 U. S. 211, 214 (1951); Moore v. Mead Service Co., 340 U. S. 944 (1951); Foremost Promotions v. Pabst Brewing Co. [1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,617], 15 F. R. D. 128 (N. D. Ill. 1953); U. S. v. Cotton Valley Operators Committee [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,216], 75 F. Supp. 1 (D. La. 1948); Higgins v. Shenango Pottery, 99 F. Supp. 522, 525 (W. D. Pa. 1951); and 29 N. Y. L. Rev. 1463, 1470 (1954).

[Participation in Conspiracy]

6. We come now to the defendants' final contention. This defense is presented on behalf of the following defendants: Boston and Maine Railroad, Canadian National Railways, Canadian Pacific Railway Company, Lehigh & New England Railroad Company, Maine Central Railroad Company, Pittsburgh & West Virginia Railway Company and Charles J. Graham, Individually and as President, the Delaware and Hudson Railroad Corporation, The New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company, the Union Railroad Company and Fred W. Okie, Individually and as President of that Company. They argue that even if a conspiracy is found to exist, the mere fact of membership in ERPC does not establish concert of action on their part, and that there is not sufficient other evidence to include them as co-conspirators. The Court agrees with the first part of their argument. Mere membership in an unincorporated association, in and of itself, is not sufficient to establish liability for conspiracy. Phelps Dodge Refining Corp. v. FTC [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,297], 139 F. 2d 393, 396 (2d Cir. 1943). If the purposes of an association are lawful on their face its members should not be held for the acts of the association outside its purposes, unless knowledge of the illegal acts is brought home to the members. Phelps Dodge Refining Corp. v. FTC, supra.

In the light of the underscored reasoning the Court must differ with the latter part of defendants' argument, viz., that the evidence does not prove knowledge on the part of these defendants of the real ERPC objective and purpose. On the basis of all the evidence the Court finds that these defendants, although not involved in the carrying out of the details of the campaign, had full knowledge of its illegal object and general means for achieving that objective. First of all, the Byoir contract with the ER-TC provided in paragraph 7 that "The party of the second part (Byoir) agrees to consult with and be wholly guided by the party of the first part (ER-TC) on all questions of policy to the end that no material shall be released to the public, or to anyone, giving any impression contrary to the established policies of the party of the first part." (R. 101-102; P-4). The Transportation Committee (ER-TC) was appointed by and created by the ERPC and these defendants were regular contributing members of the ERPC. Further, the Court finds that the provisions of this section of the contract were followed and that the responsible committee heads of ER-TC were always kept abreast of Byoir's activites and that they in turn reported to all the participating members of ERPC.

All of the railroads were assessed under the Conference budget and it was on this basis that the individual contributions to the Conference were allotted. This same budget contained a specific item for the Competitive Transportation Committee (ER-TC), which was by far the largest item in the entire budget, and that budget was sent to all members of the ERPC including the above-mentioned defendants, (P-195).

In order to buttress this evidence we need merely to look at Canadian National Railway Company's answer to plaintiffs' interrogatory No. 3 in which they state that their payments to ERPC "* * * were made from time to time upon the understanding that the same, together with payments of other members of ERPC were to be used for the requirements of ERPC as from time to time described in its budgets and requests for such payments." The Canadian Pacific Railway Company in answering the same further admitted that "* * * such payments were made from time to time upon the understanding that the same, together with payments of other members of ERPC, were to be used for the requirements of ERPC." (P-264).

Further, the minutes of the Conference specifically showing appropriations for the Competitive Transportation Committee, including Byoir's activities and such other activities as the rural roads film, were sent to all members of the ERPC, (P-190). These same minutes specifically indicate the attendance of Messrs. Okie and Graham, two of the above defendants. An examination of the notes of testimony reveals that Mr. Girdler's (Byoir's ERPC account executive), memorandum setting forth the objectives of the program was sent to all of the railroad presidents (R. 267) and that the entire ERPC approved the Byoir plan (R. 845-846). While it is true that the memorandum obviously did not set forth the details of the conspiracy, it did sufficiently lay the groundwork from which any jury might infer, along with all the other evidence, the presence of knowledge.

The evidence further reveals that Byoir reported to the presidents themselves almost every month (R. 847), and that Mr. Deegan, the Public Relations Subcommittee head, approved the Byoir bills to the Conference. Of course, Mr. Deegan was appointed by and represented all of the Presidents as head of that Subcommittee. There is no question but that ERPC was familiar with the goals which Byoir sought to attain and that the President's Conference never disapproved anything which Byoir did in carrying out the terms of its agreement. (R. 224, 225; 1457-1458).

Finally, it must be remembered that competition by nonattribution was not something new to the railroads, as evidenced by the criticism of the Wheeler Report. In the light of that report it becomes more evident that all defendants knew what was meant by the "objectives" and the ERPC "policy."

The Court points to these specific evidences of knowledge not with the intent of having them constitute the sum total of such evidence. They are merely indicative of some of the more obvious considerations that led to the Court's finding that there was ample evidence of knowledge on the part of all defendants, and that as representatives acting in behalf of their respective companies, all defendants were co-conspirators in this illegal plan to ultimately destroy the trucking industry. It is hornbook law that the agreement need not be proved by direct evidence and that conduct pointing to concerted action is sufficient to make out membership in, and the presence of, a conspiracy. In order that one be found guilty as a conspirator it need only be shown that, with knowledge of the conspiracy, he knowingly performed acts designed to promote or aid in the attainment of the object of the known conspiracy. United States v. National City Lines [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,757], 186 F. 2d 562 (7th Cir. 1951), cert. denied, 341 U. S. 916 (1951).

There has been presented ample evidence to satisfy the Court as to a finding of knowledge, as well as a finding of agency on the part of the presidents to impute their conduct to the respective corporate defendants. As stated by the court in U. S. v. Morgan [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,586], 118 F. Supp. 621 (S. D. N. Y. 1953), in a suit under the antitrust laws, once a conspiracy is shown to have existed, only slight evidence is necessary to connect individual co-conspirators with the illegal undertaking. In the case at bar more than slight evidence has been presented to and believed by the Court.

[Summary—Observations]

In concluding this phase of the opinion, the Court will summarize and make a few general observations concerning the presence of the conspiracy. It is clear that the plaintiffs proved an intent to unreasonably restrain trade and hundreds of overt acts in furtherance of that illegal object. Without limiting anything that has already been stated there are three important factors of this case which demonstrate defendants' ultimate objective. First, the railroads realized that if truck rates were increased appreciably above their already higher price shippers would have to again use the railroads despite the flexibility and service of the truck. Every phase of the Byoir-railroad campaign was designed to do that very thing. Secondly, they further realize that any change in the amount the truckers paid in state and local taxes would greatly weaken them as a competitive factor and, of course, their "use" of the independent organizations and distortion of facts was constantly aimed in that direction. Finally, a very interesting situation arose during the Korean conflict which bore directly upon the question of intent to restrain commerce. A discussion arose among members of the ERPC Public Relations Subcommittee concerning the antitruck program being carried out by Byoir and the ERPC in the light of an impending freight car shortage brought on by the Korean War. The participants were fearful of discontinuing the campaign, and yet they wondered how they could justify their efforts to make long-haul trucking more expensive when with the car shortage they were not in a position to handle any greater volume of business. The problem was well illustrated in a letter from Mr. Selvage to Mr. Deegan dated August 9, 1950 (D-28). The pertinent section reads as follows:

> "The program to date has been largely negative aimed directly at the trucks and designed to curb their more nefarious activities. Now, with a war situation approaching, with the possibility that there would be a shortage of freight cars (and resultantly a demand for using any kind of a vehicle to move cargo), might it not become unpopular to urge curtailment of any form of transportation. It would be like duPont saying we can't make all of the nylon that is needed but protesting anyone else making it."

James G. Lyne, Editor of Railway Age, commented upon the same problem in a letter of September 26, 1950 to Mr. Littlefield (P-251) and noted that the position of the ERPC concerning trucks would certainly be challenged because they "are playing the dog in the manger in that they are trying to make things tough for the trucks, while they (Railroads) themselves cannot handle the traffic." However, in spite of these queries Mr. Deegan stated flatly that there was no alteration in the campaign, (R. 1850, 1851). It appears rather incongruous that the self-styled guardians of the public interest should have such an utter contempt for the same interest during a time of emergency. Mr. Lyne, in the abovementioned letter, after stating the problem gave his own answer which indicated to this Court a completely self-serving attitude. While cast in language indicative of a railroad concern for public interest, its true import was to the effect that "we know what OUR standard answer to the public is whenever we are approached with such a situation."

RELIEF

The subject of relief will be discussed under three separate headings for the purpose of clarity, namely, Injunctive Relief, Counsel Fees and Costs, and Compensatory (actual) Damages.

A.

Injunctive Relief

On the basis of the facts as found it is apparent to the Court that the plaintiffs, both the individual ones and the PMTA, have been irreparably harmed and that there is a strong possibility that the defendants are ready, willing and able to continue with their campaign to destroy the good will of the long-haul trucking industry unless they are restrained. While it is true that the intensity of the campaign has diminished with the institution of this suit, it is also clear that it will be renewed with equal vigor upon a termination of this litigation unless the Court grants injunctive relief to the plaintiffs. The defendants were ready to extend the campaign to other states and to intensify activities in the states initially chosen as starting points in the campaign to monopolize the industry. In the light of those facts and the defendants' propensity towards the use of the technique set forth in extenso in this opinion, a restraining order will be issued in favor of all plaintiffs and against the ERPC and all the corporate defendants, including Byoir. Georgia v. Pennsylvania Railroad [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,344], 324 U. S. 439, 462 (1945). All individual defendants will be excluded since they are either officers or employees of the corporate defendants and as such will be bound by the terms of the injunction to be issued.

In government antitrust cases it is customary to allow the parties to submit a form of proposed restraining order to guide the court in the exercise of this equity power. Since there is no difference in principle between a government suit and a private suit under the antitrust laws, the Court will utilize that same procedure in this case. The plaintiffs are to submit a proposed injunction, not inconsistent with the findings as set forth, within thirty (30) days from the filing date of this opinion. The defendants, on the other hand, may file exceptions thereto within fifteen (15) days, and after hearing thereon the final order will issue.

B.

Attorney's Fees and Costs

In the light of paragraph two of the stipulation of counsel set forth in this opinion, supra, stating that the costs including the attorney's fees were borne by the PMTA only, such fees will not be awarded in favor of the individual plaintiffs. At an appropriate future date the Court, in accordance with the pre-trial discussions concerning injunctive relief and proofs of the plaintiffs' actual damages and costs, will take testimony as to the extent of PMTA's costs and a reasonable attorney's fee. Thereafter, an award of costs and a reasonable attorney's fee will be made in favor of the PMTA and against all the corporate defendants including Byoir; the expense to each railroad defendant (ERPC and the individual defendants will be excluded) will be apportioned according to their 1951 percentage contribution to ERPC. Byoir's contribution will be stated under "Summary of Relief."

C.

Compensatory Damages

On the basis of the Court's conclusions of law all the plaintiffs are entitled to threefold the damages suffered by them due to injury to their business and property flowing from the defendants' conduct. In accordance with the pre-trial agreement that evidence of actual damage would be heard at a later date in the event that plaintiffs sustained their cause of action, plaintiffs limited their proofs to evidence of general injury flowing from defendants' conduct without attempting to introduce evidence of the actual damage to each individual plaintiff. If it were not for the stipulation of counsel referred to, supra, the Court would be prepared to grant damages to each individual plaintiff as well as the PMTA upon a hearing of evidence pointing to the actual damage suffered by them.

The damages to the individual plaintiffs would fall into two main classes—those flowing from the direct loss of good will, prestige and business, as a result of the campaign of vilification and other Byoir activities, and those flowing from the loss of potential revenue and consequent loss of profits as a proximate cause of the defendants' campaign to foment legislation. However, there have been drastic limitations placed on the scope of recoverable damages in this case by virtue of the aforesaid stipulation of counsel which limits recovery insofar as the individual plaintiffs are concerned to those damages flowing from the loss of potential revenue occasioned by Governor Fine's veto of S. B. 615. The stipulation specifically excluded the PMTA from any such limitation. Because of these considerations any attempt to ascertain damages will require a distinction between those flowing to the individual plaintiffs and those flowing to the PMTA.

1.

PMTA Damages

As already stated, the defendants' tactics ultimately forced the PMTA, as the representative of the trucking industry in Pennsylvania, to resort to a campaign of self-defense or face increasing difficulties with the ultimate possibility of extinction. The expenditures directly occasioned by that defensive campaign will be returned to PMTA in the form of a money recovery. Evidence of such expenditures proximately resulting from the defendants' illegal activities will be heard at a later date along with the evidence of attorney's fees and costs. In determining the extent of recovery to PMTA the Court will take into consideration the fact that PMTA would have expended considerable sums for publicity purposes independent of the railroad activities; it will also consider the fact that the PMTA budgetary trend in the field of publicity was an upward one, again independent of railroad activities. Since the stipulation of counsel, which will be again referred to in detail, does not apply to PMTA they shall recover any damages that they may prove at the appointed time. These damages shall be assessed against all the corporate defendants, including Byoir, but shall not extend to ERPC and the individual defendants. All the damages plus reasonable attorney's fees and costs shall be assessed in the following manner: twenty percent to be borne by Byoir, said amount not to be reimbursed by the ERPC; the remaining eighty percent to be assessed against the remaining railroad-corporate defendants on the basis of their percentage contributions to ERPC for the year 1951.

2.

Plaintiffs Other Than PMTA

These plaintiffs were injured as a proximate result of the defendants' activities in two ways: (1) All of Byoir's and the railroads' activities other than the fomentation of governmental restrictions resulted in a substantial loss of good will (business losses) to these plaintiffs; (2) the fomenting of governmental restriction when done in the manner set forth in the findings and as part of an unlawful object of maintaining a monopoly caused injury to these parties by increasing the cost of operation and/or preventing the carrying of greater loads. Either or both of these injuries are legal injuries insofar as the fact (proximate cause), as contrasted with the amount of injury is concerned. However, the second type of injury, in the light of the stipulation of counsel, cannot be regarded by the Court as a legal injury insofar as the calculation of amount of damages is concerned.

While it is true that the damage flowing from the loss of good will is difficult of ascertainment, such difficulty has never been associated with impossibility of ascertainment. The Court in view of its conclusions would (absent the stipulation) grant actual damages to each of these plaintiffs upon the presentation of evidence of their individual losses. Darden v. Besser [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,646], 147 F. Supp. 376, 382 (E. D. Mich. 1956). However, the presence of the stipulation completely alters the case at this point and severely limits the amount of recovery on the part of these plaintiffs.

The standard to be applied in ascertaining the amount of damages in treble damage actions was set down in the case of Story Parchment Co. v. Paterson Co., supra, at page 563:

> "'The general rule is, that all damages resulting necessarily and immediately and directly from the breach are recoverable, and not those that are contingent and uncertain. The latter description embraces, as I think, such only as are not the certain result of the breach, and does not embrace such as are the certain result, but uncertain in amount.'"

Subsequent decisions have clarified the standard and indicated that a liberal interpretation is to be applied to that rule. In effect, these subsequent cases, such as the Bigelow case, supra, establish the rule that the measure of proof for the fact of damage is identical with the measure of proof of the amount. Either may be sustained upon a showing of any substantial evidence in the record to support such a finding. See McConnell, The Treble Damage Action at 667, 668, supra. As a practical matter the courts have come close to applying the damage rule applicable to the tortious confusion of goods (let the wrongdoer's liability for damages be measured by the value of the entire mass unless he can introduce evidence of the separate values of the tortiously acquired property and the finished product). This rule was applied in a case where the defendant motion picture operator mixed the receipts from the monopolized shows with the nonmonopolized ones and the plaintiff relied on the defendant's mixed gross profits as his measure of damages. The court allowed the mixed amount as the measure, less the leasing rental cost, relying on the equitable doctrine that the defendant's wrong caused this difficulty of proof, and therefore he should not be heard to complain of the liberality of proof. See Milwaukee Towne Corp. v. Loew's Inc. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,891], 190 F. 2d 561 (7th Cir. 1951), cert. denied, 342 U. S. 909 (1952); also McConnell, The Treble Damage Action, supra, at page 668.

However, throughout this thread of liberality in the ascertainment of actual damages (with which the Court is in agreement) there is an absence of cases dealing with a fact situation as presented here because of the stipulation limiting recovery in favor of these plaintiffs to damages proximately flowing from the executive act in vetoing in S. B. 615. And it is that factor, and that factor alone, which necessitates a different result in this case. It is undoubtedly true that this Court must apply the same standard to the ascertainment of the fact of damage as it does to the ascertainment of the amount of actual damage. However, superimposed upon that rule is the rule that legal injury cannot flow as a proximate result of a duly constituted legislative or executive act. A governor acting pursuant to his authority in vetoing a bill cannot be the proximate cause of monetary injury to a party who would have benefited by the legislation in question. And yet that is what this Court would be required to do in order to grant full compensatory damages to these plaintiffs. As has been noted, this stipulation was entered into by all counsel in the interest of a speedy determination of the issues presented at the trial as to liability only without any coercion by either the Court or opposing parties. Hence, it must be read and interpreted in that posture and in the light of the plain meaning of the words chosen by respective counsel with due regard to the knowledge of the same counsel as to their respective theories of the case.

It is plaintiffs' theory of the case, with which the Court is in agreement, that they may sustain their cause of action on two basic grounds—first on the basis of the defendants' wrongs done before and independent of Governor Fine's veto of S. B. 615, and that it is to redress those wrongs that this suit is brought; within that group counsel includes increased expense of operation, the loss of business and the like; secondly, that they have been injured by the fomentation of restrictive legislation, and the attempts at such, in all of the states referred to in the findings of fact. Plaintiffs, then properly conclude that their case with reference to ground one is without the protection of the Fletcher v. Peck type of case because such activities constitute something far and beyond mere legislation enacted in pursuance of a plan to monopolize. They then further conclude that they may also sustain their claim on the basis of the above-referred-to fomentation of legislation in that it is the attempt to influence such and the overt acts carried out in pursuance of that illegal purpose that constitute the wrong; and the fact that some segment of the material used might not have been distorted or that it may not have actually succeeded in influencing either legislative or executive acts is immaterial. Hence, plaintiffs contend there is no need to inquire into either the legislative or executive motives to sustain their claim—first, because the activities other than legislative ones sufficiently make out their case, and secondly, because the attempts to secure such legislation and the overt acts in pursuance of a plan to monopolize are sufficient to again sustain the cause of action independent of the real reasons for the legislative or executive acts. Again, the Court is in agreement and has sustained the cause of action on those grounds and also has found that such activity individually and/or jointly resulted in injury (fact of injury) to the plaintiffs. However, the plaintiffs seek to carry over this theory of the case into an ascertainment of actual damages caused to the individual plaintiffs other than PMTA by the so-called legislative program. This the Court cannot do because the presence of the stipulation in question prevents a continuation of the application of plaintiffs' theory to a finding of actual damages flowing to the plaintiffs other than PMTA. Restated, the stipulation is as follows:

> "3. The only damages claimed by the plaintiffs (except plaintiff Pennsylvania Motor Truck Association) are those that each of them may have suffered because of its inability to carry more than the weight limits fixed by the laws of Pennsylvania prior to the change in the law of 1955." (Italics supplied)

There is but one logical interpretation of the words contained therein in the light of the circumstances, and that is that the damages claimed are those resulting as a proximate cause of Governor Fine's veto of S. B. 615. Further, it is clear, and has been already stated, that the stipulation in question is limited in its application to the determination of the amount of actual damages and has no application with respect to the fact of damages and injunctive relief. For that reason it has no bearing on the plaintiff's ability to sustain their cause of action. However, the only valid interpretation of the language insofar as the amount of actual damage is concerned is that plaintiffs have excluded any consideration of damages flowing from the loss of good will to these plaintiffs which resulted directly from the defendants' campaign. Accordingly, they have specifically limited themselves to those damages proximately flowing from the veto of S. B. 615. The Court under the decided cases cannot award money damages for injuries proximately resulting from a duly promulgated executive act. The basis of recovery in antitrust suits is set forth by Judge Maris in the case of Gordon v. Loew's, et al. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,783], — F. 2d —, (3rd Cir. 1957), as follows:

> ". . . the person injured by reason of action forbidden by the antitrust laws recovers the measure of the injury to his business or property and by statutory direction is the recipient of the punitive award. The total recovery is arbitrarily computed; it takes cognizance of the actual loss only as a base. According to the statutory direction the defendant must pay an amount three times that base."

Unfortunately, these plaintiffs are without a base. Darden v. Besser, supra. The damages flowing from the loss of good will other than nominal ones have been excluded, and the damages proximately flowing from an executive act are unobtainable. Hence, the Court will grant nominal damages in the sum of six cents (6¢) to each of these plaintiffs and, of course, as stated, include them within the protected group being accorded injunctive relief.

D.

Summary of Relief

1. Injunctive relief is granted to all plaintiffs and is to run against the ERPC and all corporate defendants, including Byoir, but will exclude the individual defendants. Proposed decree will be submitted by plaintiffs as previously stated.

2. Reasonable attorney's fee and costs shall be awarded to the PMTA, and such fee and costs shall run against all corporate defendants, including Byoir, according to the ratio as set out in the succeeding paragraph. ERPC and the individual defendants shall be excluded.

3. Damages shall be awarded to the PMTA for the loss occasioned by the expenditures required because of the defendants' campaign of destruction of good will, and as determined, trebled. Eighty percent (80%) of such damages shall be assessed against the corporate defendants other than Byoir in the manner noted, and twenty percent (20%) against Byoir, which 20% shall not be reimbursed by ERPC nor by any defendant railroad or railroads. No damages shall be assessed against the individual defendants and ERPC.

4. Nominal damages in the amount of six cents (6¢), to be trebled as provided by statute, shall be granted to each and every plaintiff other than PMTA and shall be assessed in the same manner as the damages flowing to the PMTA.

5. Testimony and evidence with respect to the attorney's fees, costs, and the damages flowing to the PMTA shall be heard at a future date to be determined by the Court.

EVIDENTIARY RULINGS

[Introduction of Evidence]

Because of the magnitude and importance of the case the Court permitted great latitude in the introduction of evidence. The trial court in any antitrust case has wide discretion in the admission or exclusion of cumulative and collateral evidence; U. S. v. General Motors [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,120], 121 F. 2d 376 (7th Cir. 1941), cert. denied, 314 U. S. 618 (1941); Kansas City Star Company v. U. S. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,601], 240 F. 2d 643 (1957). The evidentiary problems arising at trial may be placed in six distinct categories. The first relates to the admission into evidence, over the strenuous objection of the defendants, of proof of activities in the railroad-Byoir campaign which occurred outside of Pennsylvania. Since the conspiracy was not originated in Pennsylvania, the proof of outside activities was important, not only to show its formation but to show its method of operation, all of which had a great bearing on the fundamental question of intent and injunctive relief, if an illegal conspiracy actually existed. The complaint charged an overall conspiracy in the whole of the northeastern part of the United States. Because the plaintiffs limited themselves to proof of damages only within the State of Pennsylvania, the defendants contend that plaintiffs should be likewise limited in proof of the conspiracy. Such result, of course, does not follow. As stated by Judge Vogel in the case of Kansas City Star Company v. U. S., supra, at pages 650 and 651: parties have always been allowed "to introduce evidence of other acts and doings of the party, of a kindred character, in order to illustrate or establish his intent or motive in the particular act directly in judgment." * * *

The objection taken to the introduction of this evidence is therefore without merit. * * *

[Evidence as to Conspiracy]

The third question arose from the admission of testimony of the acts of the conspirators occurring after the veto by Governor Fine of S. B. 615. Again the defendants attempted to limit the proofs of conspiracy to the time within which plaintiffs alleged the activities of defendants had been the cause of actual monetary damages occasioned by the veto. The evidence received as to post-veto activities was relevant evidence and admissible, if not for any other purpose, at least to establish the need for injunctive relief against the continuing activities of the defendants against the plaintiffs, which activities the Court has now declared to have been illegal. It was also relevant to show the extent of the activities of the defendants in their campaign or, in other words, to round out a true picture of the full scope of the details of the conspiracy. * * *

[Venue—Service of Process]

Another question which was present throughout this case was that of venue and service of process upon the Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference as an unincorporated association. From all of the evidence the Court has concluded that the activities of the association within the State of Pennsylvania were such as to justify the finding which the Court now makes that ERPC was doing business within the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and in the Eastern District thereof sufficient to establish venue in the Court. Service upon Mr. Franklin, the then president of the Pennsylvania Railroad and a ranking member of the Conference, constituted service upon the Conference. Compare these conclusions with Noerr Motor Freight, Inc. v. ERPC [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,544], 113 F. Supp. 737, 745, 746 (E. D. Pa. 1953). Over and above that, and with the Conference fully aware that the question of venue and jurisdiction was to be determined at trial, the Conference itself joined in the filing of the counterclaim against the plaintiffs. By such action the Conference thereby waived any objections which it might have to venue or jurisdiction over the person of the association. Freeman v. Bee Machine Company, [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,278], 319 U. S. 448, 453, 454 (1943); Merchants Heat and L. Company v. Clow & Sons, 204 U. S. 286 (1907).

[Statistics]

The final group of offers of evidence related to statistics covering the basic construction of roads in the northeastern section of the United States; the use given such roads by the trucks using the highways in interstate commerce; the amount of destruction caused by such trucks, including certain specific instances in different sections of the country; the increasing cost of maintenance; the increasing cost of construction of roads and with particular reference to the changing geometric designs of the roads, all said to be caused by the increasing size of trucks and the greater weight of trucks. The defendants offered to prove by the use of experts in the highway and traffic fields that in the opinion of the experts the trucks did not pay their fair share of the cost of the foregoing and that thereby the trucking industry was receiving enormous subsidies at the hands of the taxpaying public. In the offer of proof it was averred that these experts would testify that should the trucking industry pay, what in the opinion of the experts were, fair "user charges," the cost of operation of the trucking industry would immediately rise some 4% to 6%. This entire line of testimony was excluded by the Trial Judge for many reasons among which are: (1) There was ample proof in the record that heavy trucks, along with other factors, do constitute one of the main causes in the breaking up and deterioration of the already constructed highways; (2) that such proofs would not justify or be a defense to the railroad-Byoir combination to destroy the trucking industry as such. Again, it may be remarked that this is not a suit between either the United States or any State against the trucking industry itself. In such a suit the question of public welfare would undoubtedly play a large part. The railroads throughout this case have attempted to label themselves as the guardians of the public welfare. They attempted to convince the Court that it should so consider the railroads in their activities against the truckers. The answer to that proposition is self-evident. The railroads assisted by Byoir inaugurated and carried out their campaign to effectively limit and if possible destroy the trucking industry as a competitive factor in the long-haul transportation industry to preserve and increase their dollar volume of business; (3) there was ample evidence heard by the Court, sitting as a jury, with respect to these factors in connection with the highly scientific evidence surrounding the Maryland Road Test, in addition to the extensive evidence heard on these and analogous subjects when the defendants presented their proofs concerning the Pennsylvania situation. In that posture, and in the light of the entire record, the probative value of the evidence would not have warranted the time that would have been expended in further burdening an already lengthy record.

The Court, therefore, is of the opinion on a review of the entire case that the rulings made are consistent with the rules of evidence applicable in the Courts of the United States.

* * *

[¶ 68,828] Nationwide Trailer Rental System, Inc., George A. Croft, Sr., and A. E. Simon v. United States.

In the Supreme Court of the United States. October Term, 1957. No. 114. Dated October 14, 1957.

On Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Kansas. DELMAS C. HILL, District Judge.

Case No. 1174 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Trade Associations—Allocation of Exclusive Territories—Uniform Rates for Overtime Use of Trailers—Boycott.—The United States Supreme Court affirmed a trial court's findings that a by-law of an association of one-way trailer rental operators which established exclusive territories for each of the association's members violated the Sherman Act, that officers of the association and members of the association engaged in an illegal price fixing scheme by adopting a uniform lease agreement which fixed charges for the overtime use of trailers, and that a by-law of the association which provided for the expulsion of members constituted an illegal boycott.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2017, 2017.208, 2017.253, 2017.300; Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8221.650.

For the appellants: Thurman Arnold and Reed Miller (Arnold, Fortas & Porter), Washington, D. C.; and William T. Stephens, Washington, D. C. (Clyde M. Simon, Wichita, Kan., of counsel).

For the appellee: J. Lee Rankin, Solicitor General; Victor R. Hansen, Assistant Attorney General; and Charles H. Weston, Attorney, Department of Justice, Washington, D. C.

Affirming a decision of the U. S. District Court, District of Kansas, 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,101.

[Affirmance]

PER CURIAM [In full text]: The motions to affirm are granted and the judgments are affirmed.[1]

[¶ 68,829] Samuel Krasnov and Seymour Krasnov v. United States; and Fannie Krasnov, Emanuel O. Munzer, and L. Arthur Greenstein, Executors of the Will of Joseph A. Krasnov, Deceased v. United States. The Comfy Manufacturing Company and Fred E. Katzner v. United States. Arthur Oppenheimer, Jr. v. United States.

In the Supreme Court of the United States. October Term, 1957. Nos. 238, 254, and 255, respectively. Dated October 14, 1957.

On Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. CLARY, District Judge.

Case No. 1038 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Patents—Cross Licensing of Patents—Price Fixing—Restriction on Licensing—Joint Institution of Infringement Suits.—The United States Supreme Court affirmed a trial court's ruling that a corporation and a partnership engaged in the manufacture of ready-made furniture slip covers, and a patentee who assigned his slip cover patent to the corporation, violated Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act when they entered into an agreement under which (1) the corporation licensed the partnership to manufacture and sell slip covers under the patent assigned to it, and the partnership cross licensed the corporation to manufacture and sell slip covers under its patent, (2) the corporation agreed not to grant licenses to others under the patent assigned to it without the partnership's consent, (3) the corporation set the prices to be maintained for slip covers manufactured under the patent assigned to it, and (4) the parties to the agreement jointly determined whether infringement suits should be instituted and shared in the expenses resulting from litigation involving the patent assigned to the corporation.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2013.225, 2013.430, 2013.600, 2013.750; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.525, 2610.550, 2610.575; Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8225.600, 8229.225.

For the appellants: C. Brewster Rhoads (Joseph W. Swain, Jr., of Montgomery, McCracken, Walker & Rhoads, of counsel), Philadelphia, Pa., for Samuel Krasnov,

[1 The Supreme Court's opinion refers to "motions" and "judgments" because it was applicable to the instant case as well as an unrelated case. CCH.]

Seymour Krasnov, and Fannie Krasnov, Emanuel O. Munzer, and L. Arthur Greenstein, Executors of the Will of Joseph A. Krasnov, Deceased. Robert L. Wright and Milton M. Gottesman (Blades and Rosenfeld, Baltimore, Md., of counsel), Washington, D. C., for The Comfy Manufacturing Co. and Fred E Katzner. Joseph F. Padlon, New York, N. Y., for Arthur Oppenheimer, Jr.

For the appellee: J. Lee Rankin, Solicitor General; Robert A. Bicks, Acting Assistant Attorney General; and Daniel M. Friedman, Joseph F. Tubridy, and Ernest L. Folk, III, Attorneys, Department of Justice.

Affirming a decision of the U. S. District Court, Eastern District of Pennsylvania, 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,421; for a prior decision of the Court, see 1952 Trade Cases ¶ 67,395.

[Affirmance]

PER CURIAM [In full text]: The motion to affirm is granted and the judgment is affirmed. Mr. Justice Harlan and Mr. Justice Whittaker are of the opinion that probable jurisdiction should be noted.

[¶ 68,830] Federal Trade Commission v. James F. Crafts.

In the Supreme Court of the United States. October Term, 1957. No. 229. Dated October 14, 1957.

On Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—FTC Subpoena—Production of Documentary Evidence—Enforcement of Subpoena by U. S. District Court—Scope of Subpoena.—A United States Court of Appeals judgment reversing a United States District Court order, enforcing a subpoena duces tecum issued by the Federal Trade Commission in a false advertising proceeding against an insurance company, on the ground that the order was too broad in view of the provisions of the McCarran-Ferguson Act was reversed by the United States Supreme Court on the authority of Endicott Johnson Corp., et al. v. Perkins, 317 U. S. 501, and Oklahoma Press Publishing Co. v. Walling, Wage and Hour Administrator, 327 U. S. 186.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5081.362, 5201, 5301; FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8741.55.

For the petitioner: J. Lee Rankin, Solicitor General; Victor R. Hansen, Assistant Attorney General; Charles H. Weston, Attorney, Department of Justice; Earl W. Kintner, General Counsel, FTC; and Robert B. Dawkins, Assistant General Counsel, FTC.

For the respondent: Christopher M. Jenks, of Orrick, Dahlquist, Herrington & Sutcliffe, San Francisco, Cal.

Reversing a decision of the U. S. Court of Appeals, Ninth Circuit, 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,641, reversing an order of the U. S. District Court, Northern District of California, Southern Division, enforcing a Federal Trade Commission subpoena in Dkt. 6310.

[Reversal]

PER CURIAM [In full text]: The petition for writ of certiorari is granted. The judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit is reversed. Endicott Johnson Corp. et al. v. Perkins, 317 U. S. 501; Oklahoma Press Publishing Co. v. Walling, Wage and Hour Administrator, 327 U. S. 186.

[¶ 68,831] United States v. Toy Guidance Council, Inc.; Masback, Inc.; The Bostwick-Braun Co. (Inc.); Central Indiana Distributing Corporation; Garrison Toy & Novelty Co., Inc.; General Mercantile & Hardware Company (Inc.); The Harold Hahn Company, Incorporated; M. W. Kasch Company (Inc.); Kaufman Bros. Inc.; Pensick & Gordon, Inc.; Edward K. Tryon Co. (Inc.); Williams & Shelton Co. Inc.; Seymour Krause; Melvin S. Lachman; Bennett M. Seigel; Edwin Mazo; and Willard S. Stull.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil No. 119-6. Filed October 7, 1957.

Case No. 1329 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Price Fixing—Refusal to Deal—Toys.—Toy wholesalers and a publisher-distributor of toy catalogues were prohibited by a consent decree from entering into any understanding to fix prices of toys, to fix any retail price submitted by any toy manufacturer for use in any toy catalogue, to maintain or require adherence by retail toy dealers to any suggested retail price published in any toy catalogue, to boycott or refuse to deal with any toy retailer who does not maintain any retail price for toys, or not to advertise toys at prices lower than or at a discount from the manufacturer's suggested prices.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2011.181, 2011.262.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Restricting Use of Competitive Products.—Toy wholesalers and a publisher-distributor of toy catalogues were prohibited by a consent decree from entering into any understanding not to purchase, distribute, or publish any toy catalogue other than that sold, distributed, or published by the defendant publisher-distributor. The publisher-distributor also was prohibited from selling or distributing any toy catalogue upon the condition or understanding that the purchaser not purchase or use any such material from any other source.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.690, 2005.825.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Discrimination—Availability of Prices, Services, or Facilities.—Toy wholesalers and a publisher-distributor of toy catalogues were prohibited by a consent decree from entering into any understanding to (1) grant or receive any price for the purchase of any toy for resale, or any discount or rebate from such price, unless such price, discount, or rebate is made available to all other purchasers of such toy, or (2) grant to or receive from any person services, facilities, or payment of anything of value as compensation or in consideration for advertising or other services or facilities, in connection with the processing, handling, or offering for sale of any toy purchased for resale, upon terms not accorded to all purchasers of such toy on proportionally equal terms. Price differentials could be cost justified in a proceeding charging a violation of the first prohibition.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.630, 2005.768.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Specific Relief—Notice of Decree.—A publisher-distributor of toy catalogues was required to send a copy of a consent decree entered against it to each manufacturer, wholesaler, and retailer who had participated in its toy program during a specified period of time.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8301.60, 8421.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Permissive Provisions—Selection of Customers and Products—Fair Trade.—A consent decree entered against toy wholesalers and a publisher-distributor of toy catalogues provided that (1) any defendant could exercise its individual right to choose and select its customers and select toys submitted to any publisher of any toy catalogue for advertising and promotion therein, and that (2) the decree should not be deemed to prevent any toy wholesaler from entering into or adhering to any fair trade contract with any manufacturer where so required by such manufacturer.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8321.39, 8321.48.

For the plaintiff: Victor R. Hansen, Assistant Attorney General, and George D. Reycraft, Charles F. B. McAleer, and Leo A. Roth, Attorneys, Department of Justice.

For the defendants: James W. Cassedy and Leonard E. Nelson, Washington, D. C., for Garrison Toy & Novelty Co., Inc.; The Harold Hahn Co., Inc.; Williams & Shelton Co., Inc.; Willard S. Stull, on behalf of partnership of S. Stull and Howard A. Stull, d.b.a. Stull Brothers; Kaufman Bros. Inc.; General Mercantile & Hardware Co.; Seymour Krause, on behalf of partnership of Seymour Krause and Nathaniel Edelberg, d.b.a. Flint Toy and Athletic Supply Co.; Bennett M. Seigel, on behalf of partnership of Bennett M. Seigel and Louis Singer, d.b.a. Pittsburgh Wholesale Distributors; M. W. Kasch Co. (Inc.); Edwin Mazo, d.b.a. Southern Toy & Hobby; and Toy Guidance Council, Inc. Edmund B. Spaeth, Jr., of MacCoy, Evans & Lewis, Philadelphia, Pa., for Edward K. Tryon Co. (Inc.).

Final Judgment

SYLVESTER J. RYAN, District Judge [In full text]: The plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on March 27, 1957; the consenting defendants, having filed their respective answers in which they deny the offenses charged in such complaint; and the plaintiff and said defendants by their respective attorneys having consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and without any admission by any of the parties hereto with respect to any such issue;

Now, Therefore, before the taking of any testimony and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein and upon the consent of the parties signatory hereto, it is hereby

Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed as follows:

I

[Sherman Act]

This Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this action and of the parties signatory hereto. The complaint states claims for relief against the consenting defendants under Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to protect trade and commerce from unlawful restraints and monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Act, as amended.

II

[Definitions]

As used in this Final Judgment:

(A) "Consenting defendants" shall mean the following defendants and each of them: Garrison Toy & Novelty Co., Inc.; The Harold Hahn Company, Incorporated, Williams & Shelton Co., Inc.; Willard S. Stull, on behalf of partnership of S. Stull and Howard A. Stull, d/b/a Stull Brothers; Kaufman Bros. Inc.; General Mercantile & Hardware Company; Seymour Krause, on behalf of partnership of Seymour Krause and Nathaniel Edelberg, d/b/a Flint Toy and Athletic Supply Co.; Bennett M. Seigel, on behalf of partnership of Bennett M. Seigel and Louis Singer, d/b/a Pittsburgh Wholesale Distributors; M. W. Kasch Company (Inc.); Edwin Mazo, d/b/a Southern Toy & Hobby; and Toy Guidance Council, Inc.

(B) "Council" shall mean the defendant, Toy Guidance Council, Inc., which with its subsidiaries The Toy Yearbook, Inc. and Consumer Toy Catalogues, Inc. shall be considered to be one person;

(C) "Person" shall mean any individual, partnership, firm, corporation, association, or other business or legal entity;

(D) "Toy Program" means any plan, program or activity for the advertisement and promotion of the sale of toys;

(E) "Toy literature" shall mean any literature, catalogue or booklet advertising or promoting the sale of toys.

III

[Applicability of Judgment]

The provisions of this Final Judgment applicable to any consenting defendant shall apply to such defendant and to each of its subsidiaries, successors, assigns, officers, directors, servants, employees and agents, and to all persons in active concert or participation with said defendant who receive actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise.

IV

[Pricing Practices]

The consenting defendants are jointly and severally enjoined and restrained from entering into, adhering to, maintaining or furthering, directly or indirectly, any contract, agreement, understanding, plan, toy program or other program among themselves or with any other person:

(A) To fix, change, maintain or adhere to prices for the sale of toys to any third person;

(B) To fix, change, maintain or adhere to any retail price submitted by any toy manufacturer for use in any toy literature which lists toys available for sale to the public;

(C) To maintain or require or to attempt to maintain or require adherence by retail toy dealers to any suggested retail price published in any toy literature;

(D) To boycott or refuse to deal with any toy retailer who does not maintain or adhere to any retail price for toys;

(E) Not to purchase, distribute or publish any toy literature other than that sold, distributed or published by defendant Council;

(F) Not to advertise toys at prices lower than or at a discount from the manufacturer's published or suggested prices.

V

[Discrimination]

The consenting defendants are jointly and severally enjoined and restrained from entering into, adhering to, maintaining or furthering, directly or indirectly, any contract, agreement, understanding, plan, toy program, or other program, or any other concert of action among themselves, or with any other person, to:

(A) Grant or receive any price for the purchase of any toy for resale, or any discount or rebate from such price, unless such price, discount or rebate is made available to all other purchasers of said toy;

Upon proof being made in any suit or proceeding by the plaintiff under this Section V, that a defendant has granted, or received a price, as aforesaid, nothing herein contained shall prevent such defendant from rebutting the prima facie case thus made by showing that the price differential granted or received made only due allowance for differences in the cost of manufacture, sale or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which the toy was sold or delivered.

(B) Grant to or receive from any person services, facilities, or payment of anything of value as compensation or in consideration for advertising or other services or facilities, in connection with the processing, handling, or offering for sale of any toy purchased for resale, upon terms not accorded to all purchasers of said toy on proportionally equal terms.

VI

[Use of Competitive Material]

Defendant Council is enjoined and restrained from selling or distributing any toy literature upon the condition or understanding that the purchaser not purchase or use any such material from any other source.

VII

[Notice to Trade]

Defendant Council is ordered and directed:

(A) Within thirty (30) days from the date of entry of this Final Judgment, to send by mail a true copy of this Final Judgment to each manufacturer, wholesaler and retailer who has participated in its toy program from January 1, 1954 to date;

(B) Within forty-five (45) days from the date of entry of this Final Judgment to file with the Clerk of this Court an affidavit certifying compliance with subsection (A) of this Section VII.

VIII

[Permissive Provision]

(A) Subject to each and all of the provisions of Sections IV and V of this Final Judgment, any defendant may:

(1) Exercise its individual right to choose and select its customers; and

(2) Select toys submitted to any publisher of any toy literature for advertising and promotion therein.

(B) Nothing in this Final Judgment shall be deemed to prevent any wholesaler defendant from entering into or adhering to any fair trade contract, otherwise permitted by the acts of Congress commonly known as the Miller-Tydings and McGuire Acts, with any manufacturer where so required by such manufacturer.

IX

[Inspection and Compliance]

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment and for no other purpose, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on written request of the Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to any consenting defendant made to its principal office, be permitted, subject to any legally recognized privilege:

(A) Access, during the office hours of said defendant, to those books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda, and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of said defendant which relate to any matter contained in this Final Judgment;

(B) Subject to the reasonable convenience of said defendant and without restraint or interference from it, to interview officers or employees of the defendant, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters.

Upon written request of the Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, said defendant shall submit such reports in writing with respect to the matters contained in this Final Judgment as may from time to time be necessary to the enforcement of this Final Judgment.

No information obtained by the means permitted in this Section IX shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department of Justice except in the course of legal proceedings in which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment or as otherwise required by law.

X

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction is retained by this Court for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to this Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this Final Judgment, for the amendment or modification of any of the provisions thereof, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof.

XI

[Effective Date]

This Final Judgment shall become effective thirty (30) days after entry herein.

Final Judgment

[Judgment as to Edward K. Tryon Co. (Inc.)]

SYLVESTER J. RYAN, District Judge [In full text]: The plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on March 27, 1957, defendant Edward K. Tryon Co. (Inc.), having filed its answer in which it denies the offenses charged in such complaint; and the plaintiff and said defendant by their respective attorneys having consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and without any admission by any of the parties hereto with respect to any such issue;

Now, Therefore, before the taking of any testimony and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein and upon the consent of the parties signatory hereto, it is hereby

Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed as follows:

I

[Sherman Act]

This Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this action and of the parties signatory hereto. The complaint states claims for relief against Tryon under Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce from unlawful restraints and monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Act, as amended.

II

[Definitions]

As used in this Final Judgment:

(A) "Tryon" shall mean the defendant Edward K. Tryon Co. (Inc.);

(B) "Council" shall mean the defendant, Toy Guidance Council, Inc., which with its subsidiaries The Toy Yearbook, Inc. and Consumer Toy Catalogues, Inc. shall be considered to be one person;

(C) "Person" shall mean any individual, partnership, firm, corporation, association, or other business or legal entity;

(D) "Toy Program" shall mean any plan, program or activity for the advertisement and promotion of the sale of toys;

(E) "Toy literature" shall mean any literature, catalogue or booklet advertising or promoting the sale of toys.

III

[Applicability of Judgment]

The provisions of this Final Judgment applicable to Tryon shall apply to such defendant and to each of its subsidiaries, successors, assigns, officers, directors, servants, employees and agents, and to all persons in active concert or participation with said defendant who receive actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise.

IV

[Pricing Practices]

Tryon is enjoined and restrained from entering into, adhering to, maintaining or furthering, directly or indirectly, any contract, agreement, understanding, plan, toy program or other program with any of the other defendants or with any other person:

(A) To fix, change, maintain or adhere to prices for the sale of toys to any third person;

(B) To fix, change, maintain or adhere to any retail price submitted by any toy manuturer for use in any toy literature which lists toys available for sale to the public;

(C) To maintain or require or to attempt to maintain or require adherence by retail toy dealers to any suggested retail price published in any toy literature;

(D) To boycott or refuse to deal with any toy retailer who does not maintain or adhere to any retail price for toys;

(E) Not to purchase, distribute or publish any toy literature other than that sold, distributed or published by defendant Council;

(F) Not to advertise toys at prices lower than or at a discount from the manufacturer's published or suggested prices.

V

[Permissive Provision]

(A) Subject to each and all of the provisions of Section IV of this Final Judgment, Tryon may:

(1) Exercise its individual right to choose and select its customers; and

(2) Select toys submitted to any publisher of any toy literature for advertising and promotion therein.

(B) Nothing in this Final Judgment shall be deemed to prevent Tryon from entering into or adhering to any fair trade contract, otherwise permitted by the acts of Congress commonly known as the Miller-Tydings and McGuire Acts, with any manufacturer where so required by such manufacturer.

VI

[Inspection and Compliance]

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment and for no other purpose, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on written request of the Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to Tryon made to its principal office, be permitted, subject to any legally recognized privilege:

(A) Access, during the office hours of said defendant, to those books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda, and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of said defendant which relate to any matter contained in this Final Judgment;

(B) Subject to the reasonable convenience of said defendant and without restraint or interference from it, to interview officers or employees of the defendant, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters.

Upon written request of the Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, said defendant shall submit such reports in writing with respect to the matters contained in this Final Judgment as may from time to time be necessary to the enforcement of this Final Judgment.

No information obtained by the means permitted in this Section VI shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department of Justice except in the course of legal proceedings in which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment or as otherwise required by law.

VII

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction is retained by this Court for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to this Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying of this Final Judgment, for the amendment or modification of any of the provisions thereof, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof.

VIII

[Effective Date]

This Final Judgment shall become effective thirty (30) days after entry herein.

[¶ 68,832] Federal Trade Commission v. Fred J. Bowman, President, Wilson Athletic Goods Manufacturing Company.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. September Term, 1957; September Session, 1957. No. 12068. Dated October 14, 1957.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. HOFFMAN, District Judge.

Clayton and Federal Trade Commission Acts

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Clayton Act Proceeding—Production of Documentary Evidence—Power of Commission To Serve Subpoena on Witness Not Being Investigated or Proceeded Against.—In a Clayton Act antimerger proceeding against a manufacturer of sporting goods, the Federal Trade Commission was held to have the power, under Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, to issue a subpoena duces tecum demanding the president of another sporting goods company to produce certain records of his company, although the company was not a party to the anti-merger proceeding and was not being investigated or proceeded against by the Commission. Section 9 grants to the Commission subpoena power for the production of all documentary evidence relating to any matter under investigation. In view of the provisions of the entire act and its object and policy, the word "such", in the second half of the first sentence of Section 9, has to be construed as referring to the phrase "relating to any matter under investigation." The court assumed that unless the documents produced were relevant to the matter under investigation their use in the hearing would not be permitted.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8701, 8701.55, 8701.74, 8701.92, 8741, 8741.55, 8741.70, 8801.870.

For the petitioner-appellee: James E. Corkey and Carleton A. Harkrader.

For the respondent-appellant: Thomas Freeman, Louis R. Simpson, and Howard C. Parson.

Affirming a decision of the U. S. District Court, Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division, 1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,647, modifying and enforcing a Federal Trade Commission subpoena relating to Dkt. 6478.

Before LINDLEY, HASTINGS and PARKINSON, Circuit Judges.

[Appeal]

PARKINSON, Circuit Judge [In full text]: This is an appeal from an order of the District Court granting the application of the Federal Trade Commission for enforcement of a subpoena duces tecum against the defendant pursuant to Section 9 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U. S. C. A. § 49.

[FTC Subpoena]

The subpoena was issued by the Hearing Examiner in a proceeding entitled "In the Matter of A. G. Spalding & Bros., Inc., a corporation," wherein the complaint charged A. G. Spalding & Bros., Inc. with a violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. A. § 18, and required the defendant to produce before the Commission certain books, records and documents of Wilson Athletic Goods Manufacturing Company and its subsidiaries. As we understand from counsel in argument before this court, there is no question that the documents covered by the subpoena relate in some manner to the matter under investigation.

[Noncompliance]

The defendant appeared before the Hearing Examiner but refused, upon advice of counsel, to produce the requested documents on the ground that the Commission was without authority in law to compel production because Wilson Athletic Goods Manufacturing Company was not a party to the proceedings and was not being investigated or proceeded against by the Commission.

[Court Enforcement]

The Federal Trade Commission then made application to the District Court for enforcement of the subpoena. The District Court issued a show cause order and, after answer and hearing, entered an order for enforcement, and this appeal followed.

[Issue]

The question presented by this appeal, as we see it, requires construction of the first sentence of Section 9 which reads as follows:

> "That for the purposes of this Act the commission, or its duly authorized agent or agents, shall at all reasonable times have access to, for the purpose of examination, and the right to copy any documentary evidence of any corporation being investigated or proceeded against; and the commission shall have power to require by subpoena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all such investigation."

to determine whether the Federal Trade Commission is thereby given the power to require the production of documents of a corporation not being investigated or proceeded against by subpoena duces tecum.

[Tuttle Case]

This identical question was before the Second Circuit in the case of Federal Trade Commission v. Tuttle, 2 Cir. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,669], 1957, 244 F. 2d 605, certiorari denied 354 U. S. 925, and the majority held that Section 9 grants subpoena power for the production of documentary evidence relating to any matter under investigation.

The court there held that there is sufficient ambiguity in Section 9 to permit consideration of the relevant legislative history, citing Mastro Plastics Corp. v. National Labor Relations Board, 350 U. S. 270, 287, and, after a full and complete resumé of the legislative history, concludes that, in applying the common rule of statutory construction that we must not be guided by a single sentence or part thereof, but we must rather look to the provisions of the whole act in light of the object sought to be accomplished, the second half of the first sentence of Section 9 must be construed to mean the production of all documentary evidence relating to any matter under investigation.

[Case Distinguished]

The defendant cites and relies upon the case of Federal Trade Commission v. Baltimore Grain Co., D. C. Maryland, 1922, 284 Fed. 886, affirmed 267 U. S. 586. In that case the Commission sought mandamus to compel the respondent corporations to permit the agents of the Commission to examine, inspect and copy their records and documents. That is not the situation here. Section 9 expressly limits such right in case of a corporation being investigated or proceeded against. The Baltimore Grain case, therefore, has no application here because the Commission has not asked permission for its agents to examine, inspect and copy the documents of Wilson Athletic Goods Manufacturing Company but rather that they be produced under a subpoena duces tecum for use in a hearing relating to the matter under investigation. We must assume that unless the documents produced are relevant to the matter under investigation their use in the hearing will not be permitted.

[Construction of Section 9]

The defendant does not contend that he can not be compelled to attend and testify as a witness, for there can be no question that Section 9 empowers the Commission to compel any witness to attend and testify relating to any matter under investigation. To construe the last half of the first sentence of Section 9 so as to give the Commission power to compel the defendant to attend and testify as a witness concerning the records of his corporation but not of requiring him to produce those records is so incongruous that the mere assertion exposes its fallacy, therefore, when we look to the provisions of the entire Act and its object and policy the word "such" has to be construed as referring to the phrase "relating to any matter under investigation."

[Affirmed]

The order of the District Court enforcing the subpoena duces tecum is affirmed.

[¶ 68,833] United States v. National Audio-Visual Association, Inc., and Don White.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, Alexandria Division. Civil Action No. 1589. Filed October 10, 1957.

Case No. 1361 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Price Fixing—Dissemination of Trade-in Value Lists—Audio-Visual Equipment.—An association of audio-visual equipment dealers and one of its officers were prohibited by a consent decree from (1) fixing trade-in allowances, prices, or rentals for audio-visual equipment or (2) preparing or disseminating any book or list containing monetary trade-in values or average trade-in values for such equipment.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2017, 2017.273.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Allocation of Territories.—An association of audio-visual equipment dealers and one of its officers were prohibited by a consent decree from inducing any manufacturer or dealer to (1) limit the territory within which any dealer may sell or rent audio-visual equipment or (2) allocate or divide, on an exclusive basis, territories for the sale or rental of such equipment.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2017.188.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Dissemination of Bid Specifications.—An association of audio-visual equipment dealers and one of its officers were prohibited by a consent decree from (1) preparing or disseminating any form or type of bid specification, to be used by any consumer, for the sale, rental, or servicing of audio-visual equipment or (2) inducing any person or organization to use any form or type of bid specification for the sale, rental, or servicing of such equipment. They also were prohibited from inducing any publication to reproduce or publicize any form or type of bid specification.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2017.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Distribution Control.—An association of audio-visual equipment dealers and one of its officers were prohibited by a consent decree from inducing any manufacturer to refrain from (1) selling any audio-visual equipment to any particular person or group or class of persons or (2) selling any such equipment to any person except on conditions and terms agreeable to the association.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2017.180.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Participation in Trade Association Activities.—An association of audio-visual equipment dealers and one of its officers were prohibited by a consent decree from permitting any manufacturer of audio-visual equipment to participate in the management, direction, or control of the association by advisory committees or individual manufacturer or other committees of manufacturers.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2017.121.

Combinations and Conspiracies — Consent Decree — Practices Enjoined — Inducing Manufacturer Not to Grant Discounts.—An association of audio-visual equipment dealers and one of its officers were prohibited by a consent decree from inducing any manufacturer to refrain from giving schools or any group or class of persons discounts or other favorable terms or conditions of sale or rental for audio-visual equipment.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2017.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Refusal to List Names of Manufacturers in Directory—Inducing Publication Not to Accept Advertising.—An association of audio-visual equipment dealers and one of its officers were prohibited by a consent decree from (1) refusing to list, in any directory of manufacturers, the name of any manufacturer of audio-visual equipment if such manufacturer sells such equipment to dealers with a trade discount or (2) inducing any publication not to accept advertising for audio-visual equipment from any person or group or class of persons.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2017.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Specific Relief—Notice of Decree.—An association of audio-visual equipment dealers was required to publicize the terms of the consent decree entered against it by (1) public announcements of the decree mailed to each magazine and periodical which had disseminated the association's bid specifications, (2) announcements of the decree in a letter sent to each person known to have received the association's bid specification forms, and (3) announcements of the injunctions placed upon it and one of its officers by the decree in two different issues of the association's news publication.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8301.60, 8421.

For the plaintiff: Victor R. Hansen, Assistant Attorney General; W. D. Kilgore, Jr., Barbara J. Svedberg, George D. Reycraft, Earl A. Jinkinson, Harry H. Faris, and Robert J. Oliver, Attorneys, Department of Justice; and A. Andrew Giangreco, Assistant United States Attorney.

For the defendants: Waller and Waller, by Herman S. Waller, Chicago, Ill., and E. C. Van Dyck, Fairfax, Va.

Final Judgment

ALBERT V. BRYAN, District Judge [In full text]: The plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on October 10, 1957; the defendants having filed their answer to such complaint denying the substantive allegations thereof; and the parties hereto by their respective attorneys, having consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and without any admission by any party hereto with respect to any such issue;

Now, Therefore, before the taking of any testimony and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein and upon the consent of the parties hereto, it is hereby

Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed, as follows:

I

[Sherman Act]

This court has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this section and of the parties hereto. The complaint states a claim for relief against the defendants under Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce from unlawful restraints and monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Act, as amended.

II

[Definitions]

As used in this Final Judgment:

(A) "NAVA" means National Audio-Visual Association, Inc., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of Illinois with offices in Fairfax County, Virginia;

(B) "Audio-visual equipment" means new and used 16 millimeter motion picture projectors, filmstrip, slide, and other still projectors, projection screens, tape recorders, and record and transcription players;

(C) "Person" means any individual, partnership, firm, association, or corporation or other business or legal entity.

III

[Applicability of Judgment]

The provisions of this Final Judgment applicable to the defendants shall apply to such defendants and to their successors, assigns, officers, directors, servants, employees and agents, and to all persons in active concert or participation with a defendant who receive actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise.

IV

[Practices Enjoined]

Defendants Don White and NAVA are jointly and severally enjoined and restrained from:

(A) Fixing, establishing or stabilizing, or attempting to fix, establish or stabilize, trade-in allowances, prices or rentals to be charged for the purchase, sale or rental of any audio-visual equipment; provided, that this subsection shall not be deemed to prohibit defendant Don White from entering into any fair trade agreement valid and enforceable in the State where it is effective;

(B) Inducing any manufacturer or dealer to

(1) limit the territory within which any dealer may sell or rent any audio-visual equipment;

(2) allocate or divide, on an exclusive basis or otherwise, territories for the sale or rental of any audio-visual equipment;

(C) Inducing any manufacturer to refrain from

(1) selling any audio-visual equipment to any particular person or group or class of persons;

(2) selling any audio-visual equipment to any person except on conditions and terms agreeable to NAVA;

(3) giving schools or any group or class of persons discounts or other favorable terms or conditions of sale or rental for audio-visual equipment;

(D) Inducing any publication

(1) not to accept advertising for audio-visual equipment from any person or group or class of persons;

(2) to reproduce or publicize any form or type of bid specification for the sale, rental or servicing of any audio-visual equipment;

(E) Preparing, disseminating or approving any form or type of bid specification, to be used by any consumer, for the sale, rental or servicing of any audio-visual equipment;

(F) Inducing or persuading any person, group or organization to use any form or type of bid specification for the sale, rental or servicing of any audio-visual equipment;

(G) Preparing, disseminating or assisting in the preparation or dissemination of any book, list or literature, containing monetary trade-in values, or average trade-in values for any audio-visual equipment;

(H) Permitting any manufacturer of audio-visual equipment to participate in the management, direction or control of NAVA by advisory committees or individual manufacturer or other committees of manufacturers;

(I) Refusing to list, in any directory of manufacturers, the name of any manufacturer of audio-visual equipment if such manufacturer sells such equipment to dealers with a trade discount.

V

[Publication of Judgment]

Defendant NAVA is ordered and directed to publicize, within 90 days from the date of entry hereof, the terms of this Final Judgment in the following manner:

(A) Public announcements thereof mailed to each magazine and periodical heretofore disseminating NAVA bid specifications;

(B) Announcements thereof in a letter sent by first class mail to each person known to have received NAVA bid specification forms from:

(1) NAVA;

(2) an affiliate or member of NAVA; or

(3) any person, group or organization supplied with such forms by NAVA;

(C) Announcements of the injunctions placed upon each of the defendants by the Final Judgment in two different issues of NAVA NEWS distributed to its members and affiliates.

VI

[Inspection and Compliance]

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on written request of the Attorney

General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to defendants made to its principal office, be permitted, subject to any legally recognized privilege:

(A) Access, during office hours of defendants, to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda, and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of defendants relating to any matters contained in this Final Judgment;

(B) Subject to the reasonable convenience of defendants and without restraint or interference from defendants, to interview officers or employees of defendants, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters.

Upon such written request, defendants shall submit such reports in writing with respect to the matters contained in this Final Judgment as may from time to time be necessary to the enforcement of this Final Judgment.

No information obtained by the means permitted in this Section VI shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department of Justice except in the course of legal proceedings in which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment or as otherwise required by law.

VII

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction is retained by this Court for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to this Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this Final Judgment, for the amendment or modification of any of the provisions thereof, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof.

VIII

[Costs]

That the plaintiff recover the costs of this suit.

[¶ 68,834] General Electric Co. v. Better Living Distributors, Inc.

In the New York Supreme Court, Special Term. Part I. 138 N. Y. L. J., No. 78, page 5. Dated October 17, 1957.

New York Fair Trade (Feld-Crawford) Act

Fair Trade—Enforcement of Fair Trade Prices—Violation of Injunction—Contempt—Defense—Solicitation of Violative Sales.—A retailer was fined the sum of $500, plus $150 for costs and expenses, for violating an injunction prohibiting it from selling a fair trader's appliances at less than fair trade prices. The fact that the sales violative of the injunction were solicited by a salesman of a subsidiary of the fair trader did not give the retailer the right to assume that it could sell the appliances in violation of the injunction.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3380.34.

[Contempt]

BENVENGA, Justice [In full text]: This is a motion to punish defendant for contempt of court for violating an injunction of this court restraining defendant from selling plaintiff's appliances at less than fair trade prices. That the sales were made is not seriously disputed. Indeed, one such sale is admitted. The fact that the sales were solicited by a salesman of a subsidiary of the plaintiff did not give the defendant the right to assume that it could sell the articles in violation of the injunction. Nor did the salesman have any right or authority to make any such representations—assuming they were made. The defendant, in making the sales, acted at its peril. Indeed in view of the background of this litigation and defendant's undoubted familiarity with the Fair Trade Law and the fact that the defendant has always been represented by counsel, I doubt whether the defendant's claims are made in good faith. I fail to see any necessity for a reference (see General Electric Co. v. Golden Rule Co. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,698], 3 App. Div., 436). The motion is therefore granted and the defendant is fined the sum of $500, plus $150 costs and expenses. Settle order.

[¶ 68,835] Minniola O. Miller v. The Town of Suffield, et al.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. No. 30—October Term, 1957. Docket No. 24461. Argued October 11, 1957. Decided October 18, 1957.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Connecticut, J. JOSEPH SMITH, Judge.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Dismissal for Failure to File Bond—Necessary Averments To State Cause of Action—Interstate Commerce—Injury to Public Interest.—A treble damage action complaint charging that a town, a bank, and a "pool" of lawyers, brokers, and others conspired to deprive the plaintiff of her patrimony in farms located in the defendant-town was properly dismissed on the grounds that the complaint failed to state a claim for relief, and that the plaintiff did not comply with an order requiring her to file a bond for costs. The order for a moderate bond for costs was justified in view of the background of prior litigation, and the ambiguous allegations of the complaint showed no legal wrong or impairment of interstate commerce or injury to the public interest.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.475, 9009.600, 9013.

For the plaintiff-appellant: Minniola O. Miller, Suffield, Conn., pro se.

For the defendants-appellees: Joseph P. Cooney, Hartford, Conn., for Town of Suffield; Howard J. Maxwell, of Steele, Collins & Maxwell, Hartford, Conn., for The Suffield Savings Bank; John S. Murtha, of Shepherd, Murtha & Merritt, Hartford, Conn., for Alcorn, Bakewell & Smith; Francis J. Fahey, Thompsonville, Conn., pro se; John D. LaBelle, Manchester, Conn., for Sebastian Gambolati; and Bernard Francis, West Hartford, Conn., for Russell L. Gillette and Rose M. Gillette.

Before: CLARK, Chief Judge, and LUMBARD and MOORE, Circuit Judges.

Minniola O. Miller appeals from the dismissal of her complaint in an antitrust action seeking treble damages of $4,950,000.00 against the Town of Suffield and eleven other defendants. Affirmed.

[Dismissal of Complaint]

PER CURIAM [In full text]: In the guise of a treble-damage antitrust suit, plaintiff is trying to revive the fantastic claims of fraud and conspiracy discussed and rejected in In re Miller, D. C. Conn., 106 F. Supp. 40, affirmed 2 Cir., 198 F. 2d 267, certiorari denied Miller v. Guthrie, 345 U. S. 918, rehearing denied 345 U. S. 971. For many years and in a variety of ways she has asserted that the Town of Suffield, The Suffield Savings Bank, and a "pool" of lawyers, brokers, and others have conspired to deprive her of her patrimony in the Miller's Beach farms in Suffield; but her vague charges, however vigorously asserted, have always lacked substance and substantiation. Judge Smith has dismissed her present complaint because she did not comply with his earlier order that she file a bond for costs and because the complaint fails to state a claim for relief. We agree with the dismissal and the grounds on which it was placed. The order for a moderate bond for costs was surely justified in view of the background of the prior litigation. And the ambiguous allegations here show no legal wrong or impairment of interstate commerce or injury to the public interest.

Judgment affirmed.

[¶ 68,836] United States v. American Smelting and Refining Company and St. Joseph Lead Company.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil No. 88-249. Filed October 11, 1957.

Case No. 1177 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Price Fixing—Exchange of Price Information—Lead.—A producer of lead was prohibited by a consent decree from entering into any understanding with any person engaged in the mining, smelting, refining, or sale of primary lead to fix prices, price differentials, price discounts, or other condition for the sale in the United States of primary lead; and from entering into any understanding, whether in the nature of a cartel or other non-competitive arrangement, with any person (except a foreign government) engaged in the mining, smelting, refining, or sale of primary lead to fix prices for the sale of lead ore, lead concentrates, lead bullion, or primary lead in the domestic or foreign commerce of the United States. Also, the producer was prohibited from exchanging information or consulting with a specified competitor (the co-defendant) with respect to any specific future change in the prices of primary lead to be made by either producer.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.055, 2011.181, 2011.218.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Restrictions on Imports and Exports.—A producer of lead was prohibited by a consent decree from entering into any understanding, whether in the nature of a cartel or other non-competitive arrangement, with any person (except a foreign government) engaged in the mining, smelting, refining, or sale of primary lead to restrict the import into, or export from, the United States of lead ore, lead concentrates, lead bullion, or primary lead.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.718.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Acquisitions.—A producer of lead was prohibited by a consent decree from acquiring any domestic primary lead smelter or any domestic primary lead refinery existing on the date of the entry of the decree. The producer could, however, after a period of ten years, apply for permission to acquire a smelter or refiner.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.460.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Restrictions on Production and Sales.—A producer of lead was prohibited by a consent decree from entering into any understanding with any person engaged in the mining, smelting, refining, or sale of primary lead to reduce, restrict, limit, or prevent the mining, smelting, refining, or sale of primary lead produced in the United States.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.760.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Restrictions on Production.—A producer of lead was prohibited by a consent decree from entering into any understanding with a specified competitor (the co-defendant) which (1) fixes the maximum tonnage of ores or concentrates which the competitor may process, (2) requires the competitor to give the producer any forecast of the rate of production at its mines or requires the competitor to inform the producer of its own production of concentrates, or (3) requires the competitor to have processed, at a specified plant of the producer, lead ores or concentrates in excess of a specified number of tons. The consent decree provided that unless within seven years, the producer either ceases to process at the plant ores or concentrates mined by the competitor or obtains the consent of the Department of Justice to continue such processing, the Government may apply for an order directing that such processing shall cease. Processing contracts between the producer and the competitor at the plant could not bind the competitor for a period in excess of two years.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.760.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Exclusion from Trade—Toll Contracts.—A producer of lead was prohibited by a consent decree from entering into toll contracts for (1) smelting lead ores or concentrates from sources whose lead ores or concentrates were then being smelted at any domestic primary lead smelter not owned by the producer, or (2) refining lead bullion from sources whose lead bullion was then being refined at any domestic primary lead refinery not owned by the producer, which tend substantially to result in the permanent cessation of operations by the domestic primary lead smelter or domestic primary lead refinery.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.660.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Permissive Provisions—Actions Authorized by Government—Contracts with Foreign Government.—A consent decree entered against a producer of lead provided that the decree should not prevent the producer from taking action, or refraining from taking action, officially authorized or directed by the United States Government or prevent the producer from taking action to induce the United States Government to take action or to refrain from taking action. Also, the producer was not prohibited from entering into certain contracts with a foreign government, and a provision prohibiting certain activities did not apply to any act in a foreign country which was officially required by the government of such country.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8321.33, 8321.48, 8421.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Permissive Provisions—Notice of Proposed Rates.—A specified provision of a consent decree entered against a producer of lead did not prevent a competitor of the producer from giving reasonable notice to the producer of proposed rates of shipment from the competitor to one of the producer's plants.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8321.48.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Modification—Future Relief—Government.—A consent decree entered against a producer of lead provided that nothing should prevent the Government from applying for further relief against the producer under Section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, and that the court should rule on any such application in the light of the then prevailing circumstances. Also, the decree provided that the Government could apply for an order directing the producer to cease a specified practice if, within seven years, the producer had not ceased such practice or had obtained the consent of the Department of Justice to continue such practice.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8361.15.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Modification—Relief from Provision of Decree—Defendant.—A consent decree entered against a producer of lead provided that the producer could apply, after a period of ten years or at any time (depending upon the relief sought), for permission to take action otherwise prohibited by a provision of the decree and that such permission could be granted upon a showing that the effect of such action will not be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce in any section of the United States.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8361.37.

For the plaintiff: Victor R. Hansen, Assistant Attorney General, and Worth Rowley, W. D. Kilgore, Jr., Harry N. Burgess, Allen A. Dobey, Joseph W. Stanley, and John Fricano.

For the defendant: Cleary, Gottlieb, Friendly & Hamilton, by Fowler Hamilton, for American Smelting and Refining Co.

Final Judgment

SYLVESTER J. RYAN, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on the 9th day of October, 1953, and defendant, American Smelting and Refining Company, by its attorneys, having filed its answer to the complaint denying the material allegations thereof; and plaintiff and said defendant, by their attorneys, having consented to the entry of this Final Judgment, without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein and without this Final Judgment constituting evidence, or an admission by either plaintiff or said defendant, in respect to any such issue;

Now, therefore, before any testimony has been taken herein, and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and upon consent, as aforesaid, of each said party hereto, it is hereby

Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed as follows:

I.

[Sherman Act]

This Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter hereof and of the parties signatory hereto. The complaint states a claim for relief against defendant American Smelting and Refining Company under Sections 1 and 2 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Act, as amended.

II.

[Definitions]

As used in this Final Judgment:

(A) "ASR" shall mean American Smelting and Refining Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New Jersey;

(B) "St. Joe" shall mean St. Joseph Lead Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York;

(C) "Person" shall mean any individual, partnership, firm, corporation, association, trust or other legal entity;

(D) "United States" shall mean the continental United States, its territories and possessions;

(E) "Primary lead smelter" shall mean a lead processing plant, the principal lead-bearing raw material for which is lead ores and/or lead concentrates; and "domestic primary lead smelter" shall mean a primary lead smelter located within the United States;

(F) "Lead bullion" shall mean the unrefined metallic lead product of a primary lead smelter produced from ores and concentrates;

(G) "Primary lead refinery" shall mean a lead processing plant, the principal lead-bearing raw material for which is lead bullion and the principal product of which is refined lead; and "domestic primary lead refinery" shall mean a primary lead refinery located within the United States;

(H) "Primary lead" shall mean refined lead produced from lead bullion at primary lead refineries; and "domestic primary lead" shall mean primary lead produced at domestic primary lead refineries excluding lead processed under United States custom bond and exported;

(I) "Acquisition of any domestic primary lead smelter or of any domestic primary lead refinery" shall mean the obtaining of control of any such smelter or refinery, whether such control is obtained directly or indirectly, and whether such control is obtained through purchase of assets, stock or other securities, lease, management contract, statutory consolidation or statutory merger, or through any other similar means;

(J) "Subsidiary" shall mean a corporation (1) more than 50 percent of whose stock entitled to vote upon election of directors (other than stock whose right to vote is dependent solely on the non-payment of dividends or other default) is, directly or indirectly, owned by ASR, or (2) more than half of whose directors are officers, directors, or nominees of ASR.

III.

[Applicability of Judgment]

The provisions of this Final Judgment applicable to ASR shall apply to ASR, its directors, officers, agents, servants, employees, subsidiaries, successors and assigns, and to those persons in active concert or active participation with it who shall have received actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise, but shall not apply to transactions between ASR and its directors, officers, agents, servants, employees, subsidiaries, successors and assigns, or any of them. No provision of this Final Judgment shall prevent ASR from taking action, or refraining from taking action, officially authorized or directed by the United States Government; nor shall any provision of this Final Judgment prevent ASR from taking action to induce the United States Government to take action or to refrain from taking action.

IV.

[Price Fixing]

Defendant ASR is enjoined and restrained from, directly or indirectly, entering into, adhering to, maintaining or furthering any contract, agreement, understanding, plan or program with any person engaged in the United States in the mining, smelting, refining or sale of primary lead to fix, determine, maintain or adhere to any price or prices, price differential, price discount or other term or condition for the sale in the United States of primary lead or any grade thereof to third persons. Without limiting in any manner the generality of the foregoing defendant ASR is specifically enjoined and restrained from exchanging information or consulting with St. Joe with respect to any specific future change or changes in the price or prices of primary lead to be made by either company.

V.

[Production Restrictions]

Defendant ASR is enjoined and restrained from directly or indirectly, entering into, adhering to, maintaining or furthering any contract, agreement, understanding, plan or program with any other person engaged in the mining, smelting, refining or sale of primary lead, to reduce, restrict, limit or prevent the mining, smelting, refining or sale of primary lead produced in the United States.

VI.

[Import and Export Restrictions]

Defendant ASR is enjoined and restrained from directly or indirectly, entering into, adhering to, maintaining or furthering any contract, agreement, understanding, plan or program, whether in the nature of a cartel or other non-competitive arrangement, with any other person (except a foreign government) engaged in the mining, smelting, refining or sale of primary lead (a) to restrict the import into, or export from, the United States of lead ore, lead concentrates, lead bullion, or primary lead or (b) to fix, establish or maintain any price or prices for the sale of lead ore, lead concentrates, lead bullion, or primary lead in the domestic or foreign commerce of the United States; provided, that this Section VI shall not apply to any act in a foreign country which defendant ASR can show was officially required of defendant ASR by the government thereof.

VII.

[Agreements with Co-Defendant]

(A) Defendant ASR is ordered and directed to cancel and terminate forthwith the contract between ASR and St. Joe dated November 26, 1951.

(B) Defendant ASR is enjoined and restrained from entering into, adhering to, maintaining or furthering, directly or indirectly, any contract, agreement or understanding with St. Joe which (1) fixes the maximum tonnage of ores or concentrates which St. Joe may process at its plant at Herculaneum, Missouri, or at any other plant; or (2) requires St. Joe to give ASR any forecast of the rate of production at its mines or of its receipts of ores, concentrates or other lead-bearing materials from other sources, or requires St. Joe to inform ASR of its own production of concentrates, or the lead content thereof, or its receipts of ores, concentrates or lead-bearing materials from other sources, or the lead content thereof, except that nothing in this clause (2) of Section VII (B) shall prevent St. Joe from giving reasonable notice to ASR of proposed rates of shipment from St. Joe to ASR's plant at Alton, Illinois; or (3) requires St. Joe to have processed at ASR's plant at Alton, Illinois, in excess of 3,750 tons per month, averaged over a six-month period, of lead contained in ores or concentrates. Under any contract between ASR and St. Joe for the processing of lead ores and concentrates at ASR's plant at Alton, Illinois, St. Joe shall not be bound for a period in excess of two years.

(C) Unless within seven years from the date of entry of this Final Judgment defendant ASR either ceases to process at its plant at Alton, Illinois, lead ores or concentrates mined by St. Joe or obtains the consent of the Department of Justice to continue such processing, the plaintiff may apply to this Court for an order directing that such processing shall cease, and upon such application the issue shall be whether, under the circumstances then prevailing, such processing, pursuant to a contract not inconsistent with Subdivision B of this Section VII, may substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce in any section of the United States; and upon such issue the defendant ASR shall have the burden of proof. Any order directing that such processing shall cease shall provide such time, not to exceed three years, as reasonably may be required by St. Joe to make other arrangements for such processing.

VIII.

[Acquisitions—Toll Contracts]

(A) Defendant ASR is enjoined and restrained from the acquisition of any domestic primary lead smelter or any domestic primary lead refinery existing on the date of the entry of this Final Judgment.

(B) Defendant ASR is enjoined and restrained from entering into:

(1) Any toll contract for smelting lead ores or concentrates from sources whose lead ores or concentrates are now being smelted at any domestic primary lead smelter owned by a person other than ASR, which tends substantially to result in the permanent cessation of operations by said domestic primary lead smelter; or

(2) Any toll contract for refining lead bullion from sources whose lead bullion is now being refined at any domestic primary lead refinery owned by a person other than ASR, which tends substantially to result in the permanent cessation of operations by said domestic primary lead refinery.

(C) Nothing in this Section VIII shall prevent ASR from making application to this Court, upon notice to the plaintiff, at any time under Subdivision (B) above, or after the expiration of ten (10) years after the date of this Final Judgment under Subdivision (A) above, for permission of this Court to take action otherwise forbidden by this Section VIII and such permission may be granted by this Court upon a satisfactory showing to this Court by ASR that the effect of such action will not be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce in any section of the United States.

IX.

[Relief—Sherman Act, Sec. 2]

Nothing in this Final Judgment shall prevent plaintiff from applying to this Court for further relief against defendant ASR under Section 2 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, as amended.

The Court shall rule on any such application in the light of the then prevailing circumstances.

X.

[Inspection and Compliance]

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment and for no other purpose, and subject to any legally recognized privilege, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, upon written request of the Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to ASR given to its principal office, be permitted (1) reasonable access during the office hours of ASR to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of ASR relating to any of the subject matters contained in this Final Judgment; and (2) subject to the reasonable convenience of ASR but without restraint or interference from it, to interview officers or employees of ASR, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters; and upon such request ASR shall prepare and submit such reports in writing to the Department of Justice with respect to matters contained in this Final Judgment as may from time to time be reasonably necessary to the enforcement of this Final Judgment. No information obtained by the means provided in this Section X shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States of America is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment or as otherwise required by law.

XI.

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction is retained by this Court for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to this Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this Final Judgment, or for the amendment or modification or termination of any of the provisions thereof, or for the enforcement of compliance therewith or for the punishment of violations thereof.

[¶ 68,837] United States v. Hamilton Glass Company and Glaziers' Local No. 27 of the Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers of America.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. No. 57C432. Filed September 30, 1957.

Case No. 1326 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Labor Unions—Conspiracy Between Union and Employer—Scope of Union Antitrust Immunity—Jurisdiction of Court—Clayton Act and

Norris-LaGuardia Act.—A Federal District Court had jurisdiction to entertain a Government action charging that a glaziers' union and a glazing contractor conspired to restrain trade in pre-glazed products by compelling users of pre-glazed products to pay union members for the glazing that would have been required had the pre-glazed products not been used or to have pre-glazed products reglazed on the job site. The Clayton Act and the Norris-LaGuardia Act both provide that federal courts shall not issue injunctions in any case growing out of a labor dispute, and they enumerate specific labor union activities which are not to be regarded as violating any law of the United States. However, labor union activities can violate the Sherman Act under certain circumstances, even though the activities are among those enumerated in the acts. In the Allen Bradley Co. case, 1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,386, 325 U. S. 797, it was held that union activities are not immunized by the acts when they are performed pursuant to a conspiracy of both labor and nonlabor groups to create business monopolies and to control the marketing of goods and services. The Allen Bradley doctrine was applicable to the instant case, although the alleged violation of the Sherman Act consisted of a restraint upon business competition rather than market domination or price control. The union cannot claim immunity merely because the restrictions as to pre-glazed products were contained in their collective bargaining agreement with the contractor. Also, the complaint alleged a conspiracy beneficial to the contractor, and it sufficiently alleged that the union aided and abetted the glazing contractor to violate the Sherman Act.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2101.063, 2101.135, 2101.265.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Sufficiency of Complaint—Allegations of Restraint upon Commercial Competition and Intent.—A motion to dismiss a complaint, charging that a glaziers' union and a glazing contractor conspired to restrain trade in pre-glazed products by compelling users of pre-glazed products to pay union members for the glazing that would have been required had the pre-glazed products not been used, on the ground that it failed to allege any restraint upon commercial competition in the marketing of pre-glazed products and an intent on the part of the defendants to restrain competition was denied. The complaint alleged both a restraint upon commercial competition in the marketing of goods and services and an effect, produced by the restraint, upon market prices and upon other advantages which the consumer derives from free competition. The offenses charged allegedly resulted in a substantial reduction in the use of pre-glazed products and an increase in the business of the contractor. Furthermore, the complaint alleged an effect upon the market prices of pre-glazed products which was not incidental or remote.

It was not necessary for the Government to allege that the claimed restraint was the purpose or aim of the alleged conspiracy because practices which had the effect of restraining competition were alleged. An allegation of intent was not necessary in the instant case.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8221, 8221.870.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Motion to Dismiss Complaint—Lack of Jurisdiction to Grant Relief.—A motion to dismiss a complaint against a union and a contractor on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction to grant the relief prayed for in the complaint in view of the Clayton and Norris-LaGuardia acts was denied as premature. For the purposes of such a motion, the prayer for relief may be disregarded. The question is not whether the relief sought can be granted but whether any relief can be granted.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8229.175.

For the plaintiff: Earl A. Jinkinson, Bertram M. Long, Harry H. Faris, and Dorothy M. Hunt, Chicago, Ill.

For the defendants: Holmes Baldridge, Chicago, Ill., for Hamilton Glass Co.; and Leo Segall, Chicago, Ill., for Glaziers' Local No. 27 of the Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers of America.

Memorandum on Defendants' Motions to Dismiss the Complaint

[Complaint]

JULIUS J. HOFFMAN, District Judge [In full text]: This is a proceeding for an injunction under Section 4 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 4. It was brought by the United States of America against two defendants, Hamilton Glass Company and Glaziers' Local No. 27 of the Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers of America. By its action, the plaintiff seeks to restrain alleged continuing violations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 1. In its complaint the plaintiff alleges that the defendant Local No. 27, along with the defendant Hamilton Glass and all other glazing contractors having union contracts with Local No. 27, have conspired in an unreasonable restraint of interstate trade and commerce in pre-glazed sash and other pre-glazed products. The alleged offense is asserted to consist of various acts by which the defendants have restrained the flow of such products into the Chicago area, thereby denying to potential purchasers the cost-savings which would result from the use of such products.

[Motion to Dismiss]

The defendants have moved to dismiss the complaint on the grounds (1) that the complaint fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted and (2) that this court lacks jurisdiction to entertain the suit.

1.

[Sufficiency of Complaint]

In considering the defendants' contention that the complaint fails to state a claim upon which relief may be granted, the court is guided by the test whether the plaintiff would be entitled to recover upon any state of facts which might be proved in support of the allegations. As this court has stated in a previous consideration of the nature of a motion to dismiss which challenges the legal sufficiency of the complaint, "If a liberal reading discloses that, at least by general statement, the plaintiff has charged every element to a recovery, summary dismissal is not justified." United States v. American Linen Supply Co. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,337], 141 F. Supp. 105 (N. D. Ill. 1956).

[Contentions]

The defendants' theory with respect to their contention that the complaint fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted is that the complaint does not state a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, inasmuch as it not only fails to allege any restraint upon commercial competition in the marketing of pre-glazed sash and other pre-glazed products, but also fails to allege intent on the part of the defendants to restrain such competition. The government's theory, on the other hand, is that the complaint does in fact allege that the offenses charged have restrained commercial competition in the marketing of the products in question. It is also the government's position that the complaint contains no allegation of intent to restrain such competition because no such allegation is required.

[Restraint of Trade]

The complaint charges that the defendants and co-conspirators have combined in "unreasonable restraint of . . . interstate trade and commerce in pre-glazed sash and pre-glazed products." The conspiracy is alleged to consist of an agreement whereby Local No. 27, aided by the defendant Hamilton Glass Company and co-conspirators, (1) has compelled builders, general contractors, manufacturers of the products in question and others in Chicago area to pay additional sums to the union members whenever pre-glazed products are used by these persons, or to have the products reglazed on the job site, and (2) has induced such persons, by strikes, work stoppages, or threats thereof, not to make use of such products. (However, according to the complaint, whenever pre-glazed products are manufactured or supplied by the defendant Hamilton Glass Company or other co-conspirators, the agreement provides that strikes are not to be called or threatened.) The alleged practices, according to the complaint, have increased the volume of business of the defendant Hamilton Glass Company and the other co-conspirators. The general effects of the conspiracy are alleged to be the following:

(a) The use of pre-glazed sash and other pre-glazed products in the Chicago area has been greatly reduced and the volume of trade in these products in interstate commerce has been substantially decreased;

(b) The public has been denied the cost savings which result from the use of pre-glazed sash or pre-glazed products in the Chicago area.

A complaint charging violation of the Sherman Act is insufficient unless it alleges a restraint upon commercial competition in the marketing of goods and services. In a thorough analysis of the purposes underlying enactment of the Sherman Act, the United States Supreme Court, in Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,039], 310 U. S. 469 (1940), stated that the Act does not condemn every combination in restraint of interstate commerce, but rather that it was directed against "restraints to free competition in business and commercial transactions which tended to restrict production, raise prices or otherwise control the market to the detriment of purchasers or consumers of goods and services, all of which had come to be regarded as a special form of public injury." 310 U. S. at 493. The Court pointed out that it had never applied the Sherman Act in any case "unless the Court was of opinion that there was some form of restraint upon commercial competition in the marketing of goods or services." 310 U. S. at 495. Further, the Court noted that, "Restraints on competition or on the course of trade in the merchandising of articles moving in interstate commerce is not enough, unless the restraint is shown to have or is intended to have an effect upon prices in the market or otherwise to deprive purchasers or consumers of the advantages which they derive from free competition." 310 U. S. at 500-501.

The complaint of the government in this case meets the requirements of the Sherman Act as set forth in the Apex case. The complaint alleges both a restraint upon commercial competition in the marketing of goods and services and an effect, produced by the restraint, upon market prices and upon other advantages which the consumer derived from free competition.

A restraint upon commercial competition in the marketing of goods and services can be found in the allegations of the complaint which relate to the purported practices of the defendants and co-conspirators which are said to prevent products from being used in the Chicago area that would compete with the services performed by the defendants, thereby reducing the demands in a free market for the defendants' services. The complaint does not expressly allege that the products in question would compete with the defendants' services; however, it is clear that this is the theory of the complaint. In judging its sufficiency we are to look to the four corners of the complaint, reading all its paragraphs together to determine whether the required elements of a Sherman Act offense are stated therein. United States v. Armour & Co. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,288], 137 F. 2d 269 (10th Cir. 1943). In the complaint's definitions of terms* and in the allegations that the offenses charged have resulted in a substantial reduction of the use of pre-glazed products in the Chicago area, and in an increase in the business of the co-conspirators, it is evident that the theory of the complaint is that of a restraint upon the competition of pre-glazed products with the business of the union glazing contractors.

[Effect upon Market Prices]

An effect upon market prices is charged first in the allegation that where pre-glazed products are used by builders, general contractors and others in the Chicago area, the defendants have compelled the users thereof either to pay union members for the glazing that would have been required had the products not been employed, or to have the products reglazed on the job site, and second in the allegations that the public has been denied the cost savings which result from the use of such products in the Chicago area. (See United States v. New York Electrical Contractors Ass'n, 42 F. Supp. 789 (S. D. N. Y. 1941), where an indictment charging a union local and certain contractors' associations with refusing to install electrical equipment manufactured outside the state, and with causing such equipment to be rewired before installation, was held to satisfy the requirements of the Apex decision, where the indictment specifically alleged that the aforesaid practices added to the cost of such equipment.)

* "Glazing" is defined as the installation of "flat glass or mirrors in or on wood, metal sash, frames or walls"; "glazing contractor" is defined as the business of contracting for the furnishing of "flat glass and other materials and the installation thereof in buildings"; and "pre-glazed sash" and "pre-glazed products" are defined as windows, doors and other products which "are glazed at the factories where they are made or at any place other than the job site."

It should be noted that while the defendants recognize that the complaint alleges an effect upon market prices of pre-glazed products resulting from the practices of requiring stand-by pay or reglazing when such products are used by persons in the Chicago area, the defendants maintain that such an effect upon market prices is not the type of effect prohibited by the Sherman Act. The defendants contend that whenever a wage agreement is consummated between a union and an employer, there is some effect on the price of articles involved; such effect, however, is regarded as "incidental" or "remote" with respect to any actionable restraint of trade. However, the price effect alleged in the present complaint is not the type of effect normally regarded as incidental or remote under the Sherman Act. The activities here alleged are performed by a combination of the union and employers and insulate both employer and employee from the competition of products which would replace their services or curtail the demand therefor.

[Case Distinguished]

The defendants further contend that United States v. Carrozzo, 37 F. Supp. 191 (N. D. Ill. 1941), aff'd per curiam sub. nom. United States v. International Hod Carriers & Common Laborers' Dist. Council, 313 U. S. 539 (1941), shows that the conduct here charged does not violate the Sherman Act. That case, however, held that no acts had been alleged on the part of the defendant union which would constitute a restraint of commercial competition in the marketing of the goods in question, since the only acts charged were strikes, or threats thereof, against employers of the defendant union by which the union had compelled the employer-contractors either to discontinue the use of truck cement mixers, or employ the same number of men as would be required on the type of mixer formerly used. Thus, the Hod Carriers' case concerned union activity which increased labor costs to the employer. No effect on the market price of truck mixers was alleged; rather, the only effect alleged was an increase in the cost of cement to the ultimate purchaser. Such an effect is, in the terms of the Apex case, merely an indirect restraint upon interstate commerce, resulting from higher labor costs created by successful union activity. There was no charge in the Hod Carriers' case of combined union-employer activity to restrain the use of products in competition with the employer, with a resultant increase in the cost of the products in question to users other than the employer.

Inasmuch as the present complaint alleges a combination by the defendant union and the employer contractors to coerce third persons not to purchase products which compete with the services of the defendants, and to increase the cost of such products to purchasers when they are used, the complaint alleges a restraint upon commercial competition in the marketing of goods or services, thus satisfying the requirements of the Apex case.

[Intent]

With respect to the defendants' argument that the complaint is insufficient because it fails to allege that the purpose of the alleged conspiracy was to restrain commercial competition in the marketing of the goods in question, it has been held that where practices are alleged which have the effect of restraining such competition, it is not necessary to allege that such restraint was the purpose or aim of the combination. United States v. Griffith [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,246], 334 U. S. 100 (1948); United States v. Masonite Corp. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,209], 316 U. S. 265, 275 (1942); United States v. Patten, 226 U. S. 525 (1913). Although an allegation of intent may be necessary in a complaint charging that union activities against an employer are in restraint of interstate commerce, see Apex case at 511; Coronado Coal Co. v. United Mine Workers, 268 U. S. 295 (1925), it has already been shown that this is not such a case.

2.

[Jurisdiction of Court]

The second major contention of the defendants is that this court lacks jurisdiction to entertain the present suit. They argue that under the provisions of the Clayton and Norris-LaGuardia acts, (1) combinations of labor and business groups are only subject to the provisions of the Sherman Act when the alleged combination has conspired to monopolize a market or control prices, (2) a combination of labor and business groups in violation of the Sherman Act is not present where the alleged conspiracy consists only of contracts which the union has succeeded in obtaining with its employers, and

(3) under those Acts this court has no jurisdiction to grant the relief prayed for in the present complaint.

[Federal Laws]

The Clayton and Norris-LaGuardia acts both provide that federal courts shall not issue injunctions in any case growing out of a labor dispute, and they enumerate specific labor union activities which are not to be regarded as violating any law of the United States. (Section 20 of the Clayton Act, 29 U. S. C. § 52; Sections 1 and 4 of the Norris-LaGuardia Act, 29 U. S. C. §§ 101, 104.) These Acts have been interpreted to mean that labor union activities enumerated therein can not be considered violations of the Sherman Act. United States v. Hutcheson [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,091], 312 U. S. 219 (1941). In this respect it was held in United States v. International Hod Carriers & Common Laborers' Dist. Council, supra, and United States v. American Federation of Musicians, 47 F. Supp. 304 (N. D. Ill. 1942), aff'd per curiam, 318 U. S. 741 (1943), that activities on the part of labor unions directed against the use by employers of labor-saving devices were within the coverage of the Acts and thus could not be held to violate the Sherman Act.

Despite the provisions of the Clayton and Norris-LaGuardia acts, however, labor union activities have been held to violate the Sherman Act under certain circumstances, even though the activities in question were among those enumerated in the Clayton and Norris-LaGuardia acts. Specifically, it has been held that union activities are not immunized by those acts when they are performed pursuant to a conspiracy of both labor and non-labor groups "to create business monopolies and to control the marketing of goods and services." Allen Bradley Co. v. Local Union No. 3 [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,386], 325 U. S. 797, 808 (1945); followed in United States v. Employing Plasterers Ass'n [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,692], 347 U. S. 186 (1954); United Brotherhood of Carpenters v. United States [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,545], 330 U. S. 395 (1947); Local 175 of the Internat'l Brotherhood of Electrical Workers v. United States [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,978], 219 F. 2d 431 (6th Cir. 1955); Las Vegas Merchant Plumbers Ass'n v. United States [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,673], 210 F. 2d 732 (9th Cir. 1954); Philadelphia Record Co. v. Manufacturing Photo-Engravers Ass'n [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,466], 155 F. 2d 799 (3rd Cir. 1946). The theory of these cases, as enunciated in the Allen Bradley case, is that the special exceptions granted to labor unions from antitrust legislation should not be construed in such a way that business groups, by combining with labor unions, can frustrate the fundamental aims of that legislation.

[Allen Bradley Case]

The defendants contend that the Allen Bradley decision and the line of cases based thereon have no application to the present issues, while the plaintiff argues that they are controlling. The defendants maintain that the Supreme Court in the Allen Bradley case balanced the policies of the antitrust legislation, on the one hand, and those of the labor legislation, on the other hand, and determined that only where the activities in question are such that the business groups involved are able to secure complete domination of market and prices are the immunities conferred by the labor legislation inapplicable.

Cases following the Allen Bradley decision have uniformly involved violations by combinations of business and union groups in which market domination or price control has been achieved. The question is therefore presented whether those cases preclude application of the Allen Bradley doctrine to a Sherman Act violation by a like combination where the violation consists not of market domination or price control, but of restraints upon commercial competition in the marketing of goods or services, resulting in higher prices for the goods, and curtailing trade therein.

The Allen Bradley case and decisions following it do not preclude application of the Allen Bradley doctrine to a Sherman Act violation of the type alleged here. While the Court in that case stated that it could, with assurance, draw the line against the immunity derived from the Clayton and Norris-LaGuardia acts at the point of market and price domination by combined union and business groups, nevertheless, this court does not regard that statement as meaning that only Sherman Act violations resulting in total market domination can be brought within the reach of that act. The Supreme Court in Allen Bradley was faced only with the decision whether the immunity conferred by labor legislation reached the type of Sherman Act violation presented by the conspiracy there in question. The underlying theory of that case, however, appears to be as applicable to the type of violation charged in the present complaint as to that charged in Allen Bradley. That theory was stated in the following language of the Court:

> "The primary objective of all the Anti-trust legislation has been to preserve business competition and to proscribe business monopoly. It would be a surprising thing if Congress, in order to prevent a misapplication of that legislation to labor unions, had bestowed upon such unions complete and unreviewable authority to aid business groups to frustrate its primary objective." 325 U. S. at 809-10.

The allegations of the present complaint charge a restraint upon business competition, although not a monopoly. Such a restraint, however, if permitted when caused by a combination of business and labor groups, could cause a frustration of the objectives of anti-trust legislation equally as fundamental as that which would result from allowing combinations of such groups to monopolize the market. Therefore, this court does not consider that only where combined business and labor groups have gone so far as to monopolize the market or fix prices can the Sherman Act be regarded as proscribing the combination.

[Union Interests and Benefits]

The defendants next contend that the charges of the present complaint show merely that Local No. 27, pursuing its own self-interest in eliminating the use of products which would reduce the demand for the services of its members, has succeeded in obtaining collective bargaining agreements with its employers, and that contracts so obtained are protected by the Clayton and Norris-LaGuardia acts. In this connection they assert that the complaint charges no more than that the glazing contractors have contracted with the union to provide that all glazing performed by these contractors shall be done on the construction job site, and that the employer group has aided the union to achieve the conditions specified in the contracts. They further assert that the complaint does not allege any benefit to the contractors resulting from the alleged conspiracy, nor does it charge that the defendant local was "used" by the employer group to further the latter's aims.

That a union's contracts with employers possess the immunity claimed by the defendants is clear. See United States v. Bay Area Painters and Decorators Joint Committee, Inc., 49 F. Supp. 733 (N. D. Cal. 1943). The Supreme Court, in Allen Bradley, however, discussed the type of situation in which immunity is conferred upon the contracts, pointing out that where such agreements "stand alone" they are not in violation of the Sherman Act. The union there involved had argued that its bargaining agreements with the employers immunized the union from a charge under the Sherman Act. The agreements provided that the employers would not purchase electrical equipment from any manufacturer which did not employ members of the union. The Court stated:

> "We may assume that such an agreement standing alone would not have violated the Sherman Act. But it did not stand alone. It was but one element in a far larger program in which contractors and manufacturers united with one another to monopolize all the business in New York City, to bar all other business men from that area, and to charge the public prices above a competitive level. It is true that victory of the union in its disputes, even had the union acted alone, might have added to the cost of goods, or might have resulted in individual refusals of all of their employers to buy electrical equipment not made by Local No. 3. So far as the union might have achieved this result acting alone, it would have been the natural consequence of labor union activities exempted by the Clayton Act from the coverage of the Sherman Act. Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, supra, 503. But when the unions participated with a combination of business men who had complete power to eliminate all competition among themselves and to prevent all competition from others, a situation was created not included within the exemptions of the Clayton and Norris-La-Guardia acts." 325 U. S. at 809.

The present complaint charges considerably more than the "natural consequences of labor union activities exempted by the Clayton Act from the coverage of the Sherman Act." While the defendants contend that the complaint merely alleges that the union has contracted with the alleged co-conspirators for job site glazing, and that the contractors have aided the union in enforcing the terms of those contracts, the complaint itself reveals more. It alleges that the contractors have conspired among themselves as well as with the union to engage in the various activities charged. Thus, the complaint states that "the defendant Hamilton and co-conspirators have entered into contracts with the defendant Local 27, and the defendants and co-conspirators have engaged in a combination and conspiracy . . . in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act." It further states that "the combination and conspiracy herein charged has consisted of a continuing agreement, understanding and concert of action among the defendants and co-conspirators" to carry out the terms of the conspiracy. These allegations thus do not show merely that the union has contracts with the contractors, individually, which contracts were obtained by activity of the union "acting alone." They charge that the contractors and union have acted concertedly in restraint of trade, the union participating with a combination of contractors to suppress the competition of pre-glazed products. The Allen Bradley case shows that such concert of action, even when beneficial to the union and its members, removes the protection which the union would otherwise possess under the Clayton and Norris-LaGuardia acts. See, to the same effect, United States v. Milk Drivers and Dairy Employees Union [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,813], Civil No. 4361, D. Minn., Aug. 30, 1957.

With respect to the defendants' contention that the complaint does not charge a conspiracy to the benefit of the employer group as well as to the union, the complaint specifically alleges that the offenses charged "have increased the volume of business done by the defendant Hamilton and the co-conspirators," and that the conspiracy is "to the benefit of the said union glazing contractors."

[Use of Union]

The court cannot agree with the defendants' contention that a union is immune from a Sherman Act charge of a conspiracy between labor and business unless it is alleged that the union has been "used" by the employer group to violate the Act. The Allen Bradley case held that where a union aids and abets an employer group to violate the Sherman Act, it has lost its immunity. The present complaint, in charging that Local 27 has engaged in several activities in furtherance of the conspiracy, in charging that the activities have resulted in an increase in the business of the contractors, and in charging that the two groups have conspired together in restraint of trade, does allege that Local 27 has aided and abetted the group of glazing contractors to violate the Sherman Act.

[Relief]

The defendants also contend that this court has no jurisdiction to grant the relief prayed for in the complaint. The court, however, agrees with the plaintiff on this point that this contention is premature. As stated in Dederick v. North American Co., 48 F. Supp. 410, 412 (S. D. N. Y. 1943), "For purposes of a motion to dismiss a complaint the prayer for relief may be disregarded. The question is not whether the relief sought can be granted but whether any relief can be granted."

[Motions Denied]

The motions of the defendants to dismiss the plaintiff's complaint will be denied.

[Answers]

The defendants are ordered to file their respective answers to the complaint on or before October 31, 1957.

[¶ 68,838] United States v. Joseph A. Krasnov, Samuel Krasnov, Seymour Krasnov, The Comfy Manufacturing Company, Fred E. Katzner, and Arthur Oppenheimer, Jr.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. Civil Action No. 11024. Filed May 3, 1957.

Case No. 1038 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Injunctive Decrees—Death of Defendant Prior to Entry of Final Judgment—Survival of Action.—Under Federal and Pennsylvania law, an action by the Government for injunctive relief under the Sherman Act is a continuing one which does not abate by reason of the death of a defendant before the entry of a final judgment. Therefore, a motion to delete from a final judgment the name of a defendant who died prior to the entry of the final judgment, but after a decision was rendered against the defendants, on the ground that the action did not survive against him was denied.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8221, 8233.

For the plaintiff: Joseph F. Tubridy, Department of Justice, Washington, D. C.

For the defendants: C. Brewster Rhoads and Joseph W. Swain, Jr., Philadelphia, Pa., for Samuel Krasnov and Seymour Krasnov.

For prior decisions of the U. S. District Court, Eastern District of Pennsylvania, see 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,421 and 1952 Trade Cases ¶ 67,395. For a subsequent decision of the U. S. Supreme Court, see 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,829.

Order

[Abatement of Action]

THOMAS J. CLARY, District Judge [In full text]: And now, to wit, this 3rd day of May, 1957 upon consideration of the motion for relief from judgment under Rule 60 filed by defendants, Samuel Krasnov and Seymour Krasnov, to correct the Final Judgment entered in this matter on March 14, 1957, so as to delete therefrom, defendant Joseph A. Krasnov, who died on February 16, 1957, on the ground that the action did not survive against him, the final decree having been entered subsequent to his death; briefs submitted and oral argument had thereon, and it appearing to the Court that while it has the right to enter its Final Judgment nunc pro tunc as of a date prior to said death of party defendant, since its decision filed July 30th, 1956 found generally in favor of the plaintiff and against all of the defendants, such action is unnecessary in view of the determination by the Court that under Federal law (Common and Statute) and Pennsylvania law (Common and Statute) the action is a continuing one which did not abate by reason of the death of defendant Joseph A. Krasnov before the entry of Final Judgment, it is Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed that the motion to delete from the Final Judgment entered the name of the defendant Joseph A. Krasnov and it is hereby Denied.

[¶ 68,839] Julius Nagler et al. v. Admiral Corporation et al.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. No. 364—October Term, 1956. Docket No. 24249. Argued June 11, 1957. Decided October 2, 1957.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, EDMUND L. PALMIERI, Judge.

Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act and Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages and Injunctive Relief—Necessary Averments to State Cause of Action—Sufficiency of Complaint—Conspiracy—Price Discrimination.—The dismissal of an antitrust suit brought by thirteen retail appliance dealers against twenty-four suppliers and two retail chain stores on the ground that the complaint failed to adequately state causes of action under the Sherman and Robinson-Patman Acts was reversed. The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure contain no special rule of pleading in antitrust cases. The intent and effect of the rules is to permit a claim to be stated in general terms. Pleading of evidence is not required and is undesirable. It is a matter for the discovery process, not for allegations of detail in a complaint. Looking "beyond the mere mountain of words to the meaning sought to be conveyed," the reviewing court found that the complaint contained a sufficient statement of claims upon which to base a lawsuit. The trial court had held that the defendants were deprived of notice of the precise nature of the claims that each would be required to meet because the claims of all of the plaintiffs against all of the defendants were stated collectively.

It was not necessary that the complaint contain a direct allegation that the defendants conspired together since the trier of facts could draw an inference of agreement or concerted action from the "conscious parallelism" of the defendants' acts. The Robinson-Patman Act makes price discrimination illegal, unless it is within one of the statutory exceptions, but the burden of bringing the case within one of the exceptions is upon the defendants. The plaintiffs set forth a prima facie case which, if proved, would force the defendants to their proof in rebuttal.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.170, 9009.750.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages and Injunctive Relief—Pretrial Procedures—Misjoinder of Defendants.—The dismissal of an antitrust suit brought by thirteen retail appliance dealers against twenty-four suppliers and two retail chain stores on the ground that there was no common question of law or fact supporting the joinder of the defendants under Rule 20(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure was reversed. The "suggestion of concerted activity because of the 'conscious parallelism' of the defendants' acts affords a clear ground of joinder without need of more." If joinder is permissible on the facts alleged, it should not be restricted to certain theories of relief only, when the facts alleged support both theories. Therefore, there was no proper basis for distinguishing between Sherman Act and Robinson-Patman Act claims, although the plaintiffs might have indulged in unnecessary and repetitious separate statements of causes of action. Modern procedure favors the trial and disposition of similar cases together as a matter of court efficiency. The reviewing court also noted that the plaintiffs stated their intention to ask for consolidation of their case with another case pending before the trial court.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9013.275.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages and Injunctive Relief—Parties Plaintiff—Class Action.—In an antitrust action brought by thirteen retail appliance dealers against twenty-four suppliers and two retail chain stores, the trial court erroneously held that allegations that the plaintiffs represented a class under Rule 23(a)(3) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure should be stricken. The instant suit was a "spurious" class action. It was, in actual effect, little more than an invitation to non-parties closely interested to intervene. It was difficult to see what harm the allegations did, since they would serve no function if the invitation was accepted by no one. On the other hand, they might serve a helpful function in leading to the consideration of substantially similar problems all at once.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9005.20.

For the plaintiffs-appellants: Arnold Malkan (Paul Lewin on the brief), New York, N. Y.

For the defendants-appellees: George A. Raftery, of O'Brien, Driscoll & Raftery, New York, N. Y. (O'Brien, Driscoll & Raftery, New York, N. Y., for Admiral Corp. and Admiral Corp. New York Distributing Division, Inc.; Donovan, Leisure, Newton & Irvine, New York, N. Y., for Philco Corp. and Philco Distributors, Inc.; Weil, Gotshal & Manges, New York, N. Y., for Davega Stores Corp.; Cravath, Swaine & Moore, New York, N. Y., for Times Appliance Co., Inc.; Adelman & Shapiro, New York, N. Y., for Warren-Connelly, Inc.; Moses Block, New York, N. Y., for Maytag-Atlantic Co., Inc.; Samuel Spiegel, New York, N. Y., for Roto Broil Corp. of America and Jay Kay Metal Specialties Corp.; and William D. Friedmann, of O'Brien, Driscoll & Raftery, New York, N. Y., and Melville C. Williams, of Pope & Ballard, Chicago, Ill., on the brief).

Reversing a decision of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,449. For a prior decision of the Court, see 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,448.

Before: CLARK, Chief Judge, and CHASE and HINCKS, Circuit Judges.

Julius Nagler and Oscar Resnick, doing business as Brooks Radio & Television, and twelve other retailers of radio, television, and electrical appliances in the Greater New York area, appeal from the dismissal, D. C. S. D. N. Y. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,449], 144 F. Supp. 772, for improper pleading and joinder, of their action for damages and injunction for restraint of trade and price discrimination brought against twenty-four supplier defendants, distributors and wholesalers of such appliances, and two retail appliance dealers operating chain stores in the same area. Reversed and remanded.

[Causes of Action—Motions]

CLARK, Chief Judge [In full text]: This is an antitrust and price-discrimination action for injunction and damages by thirteen retailers in the Greater New York area of radio, television, and electrical appliances. It is brought against twenty-six defendants, of whom twenty-four are "suppliers," i. e., manufacturers, wholesalers, and distributors, and two are retailers operating chain stores in this area. The case is founded upon the allegation that these two defendant-retailers, Davega Stores Corporation and Vim Television and Appliance Stores, Inc., received special price concessions from the supplier defendants. The complaint is in twenty-nine paragraphs and three counts, or "causes of action" as they are labeled. The first cause is for "Defendants' Discrimination Against Plaintiffs in Violation of the Robinson-Patman Act," 15 U. S. C. § 13; while the other causes, reincorporating the allegations of the first, are for violations of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 2. Ten of the defendants joined in a motion to dismiss for improper pleading under F. R. C. P., rule 8(a) and (e), and for misjoinder of parties; alternatively they asked for relief under F. R. 10(b), 12(e) and (f), i. e., for separate statements as to each defendant, for a more definite statement, and for striking parts of the complaint. Other defendants have moved for more definite statements; but such motions are not before us, nor have these defendants appeared as appellees. The court, in a substantial opinion, D. C. S. D. N. Y. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,449], 144 F. Supp. 772, granted dismissal on the grounds urged and dismissed the complaint as to all the defendants. This appeal followed.

[Dismissal on Pleadings]

The drastic remedy here granted for pleading errors is unusual, since outright dismissal for reasons not going to the merits is viewed with disfavor in the federal courts. See for recent expressions of the fundamental policy: Atwood v. Humble Oil & Refining Co., 5 Cir., 243 F. 2d 885; Rennie & Laughlin, Inc. v. Chrysler Corp., 9 Cir., 242 F. 2d 208, 213; Cooper v. R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 1 Cir., 234 F. 2d 170, and other cases cited below. And this has been true generally in both English and American law and legal history, for cases are not finally disposed of on mere points of pleading alone.[1] Courts naturally shrink from the injustice of denying legal rights to a litigant for the mistakes in technical form of his attorney. Moreover there are, or would be, serious questions of res judicata; and since this doctrine is two-edged, its application may well present problems for defendants as well as plaintiffs. Quite possibly those defendants who have not sought the relief they have given (and who are not here to support the grant) may have been motivated by doubts as to what they have won. For are the plaintiffs merely relegated to initiating a new action or are they permanently barred? Compare Griffin v. Griffin, 183 Va. 443, 32 S. E. 2d 700, with Gould v. Evansville & C. R. Co., 91 U. S. 526; and see Lawlor v. National Screen Service Corp. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,061], 349 U. S. 322, and Von Moschzisker, Res Judicata, 38 Yale L. J. 299, 318-420. We are clear, therefore, that the case must go back for some less final disposition at least permitting the plaintiffs to amend. But because of their practical importance in routine litigation, we think some elaboration of both the pleading and the joinder issues is desirable.

[1] This history has been often recounted; see, e.g., Clark, Code Pleading 17-21, 56-58, 225-245 (2d Ed. 1947), and the address cited in note 3 infra. A vivid and classic critique of special pleading, occasioned by Baron Parke's technical rulings under the ill-fated Hilary Rules of 1834, is found in Serjeant Hayes' "Crogate's Case: A Dialogue in ye Shades on Special Pleading Reform"—a dialogue supposedly between Crogate of the famous case of that name and Baron Surrebutter (Baron Parke)—now reprinted in 9 Holdsworth, History of English Law 417 (2d Ed. 1938). So Justice Frankfurter, dissenting in Johnson v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 344 U. S. 48, 62, thus summarizes:

"It has been said of the great Baron Parke: 'His fault was an almost superstitious reverence for the dark technicalities of special pleading, and the reforms introduced by the Common Law Procedure Acts of 1854 and 1855 occasioned his resignation.' (Sir James Parke, 15 D. N. B. 226.)"

[Pleading—Federal Rules]

It is true that antitrust litigation may be of wide scope and without a central point of attack, so that defense must be diffuse, prolonged, and costly. So many defense lawyers have strongly advocated more particularized pleading in this area of litigation;[2] and recently the judges in the court below have treated it as accepted law that some special pleading—the extent is left unclear—is required in antitrust cases.[3] But it is quite clear that the federal rules contain no special exceptions for antitrust cases. When the rules were adopted there was considerable pressure for separate provisions in patent, copyright, and other allegedly special types of litigation. Such arguments did not prevail; instead there was adopted a uniform system for all cases[4]—one which nevertheless allows some discretion to the trial judge to require fuller disclosure in a partcular case by more definite statement, F. R. 12(e), discovery and summary judgment, F. R. 26-35, 56, and pre-trial conference, F. R. 16. Perhaps the leading case making this clear is the oft-cited decision in Package Closure Corp. v. Sealright Co., 2 Cir. [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,227], 141 F. 2d 972, 978, where the late Judge Frank, speaking for the court, said:

> "It is urged by defendants that a stricter requirement as to a plaintiff's pleading in treble damage actions is necessary because of the expense often involved in such litigation. But in that respect such actions are not unique, for huge expense is involved, too, in many a patent infringement suit and in many a suit where jurisdiction rests on diversity of citizenship. To impose peculiarly stiff requirements in treble damage suits will be to frustrate the Congressional intent. * * * We see no reason whatever to believe that the Supreme Court intended its liberal rules governing pleadings to be inapplicable to a suit for treble damages."

And he goes on to point out that if

> "the defendants, before trial, desire more detailed information from plaintiff, they can seek it by interrogatories, deposition or discovery." [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,227] 141 F. 2d 972, 979.

To the same general effect is United States v. Employing Plasterers Ass'n of Chicago [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,692], 347 U. S. 186, where the Supreme Court reversed the dismissal of a complaint, Howard v. Local 74 of the Wood, Wire & Metal Lathers, International Union of Chicago, D. C. N. D. Ill. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,548], 118 F. Supp. 387, for failure to state a cause of action for relief under the Sherman Act. As the opinions above and below show, the complaint was most broad and general. Speaking for the Court, Mr. Justice Black said [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,692], 347 U. S. 186, 189:

> "The Government's complaint may be too long and too detailed in view of the modern practice looking to simplicity and reasonable brevity in pleading. It does not

---

[2] For a recent able presentation of this point of view, see Armstrong, The Use of Pretrial and Discovery Rules: Expedition and Economy in Federal Civil Cases, 43 A. B. A. J. 693, 696 (1957), also criticizing current uses of discovery and pre-trial.

[3] See Clark, Special Pleading in the "Big Case"? a Paper presented at the Seminar on Long Cases in New York, Aug. 26-30, 1957, citing some dozen reported cases from the Southern District of New York. The most significant examples, besides the present case, are Baim & Blank, Inc. v. Warren-Connelly Co., D. C. S. D. N. Y. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,285], 19 F. R. D. 108, 109, specifically relied on by the judge below, and United Grocers' Co. v. Sau-Sea Foods, Inc., D. C. S. D. N. Y. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,661], 150 F. Supp. 267, 269. In the Baim & Blank case the judge granted a motion to dismiss, but with leave to amend, which led promptly to a new complaint, doubled in size, and some attempt at formal separation of the claims of different plaintiffs, with no appreciable gain in information. Decision on a motion to strike this complaint has been stayed by stipulation pending determination of the present appeal. Hence no real progress has been made in the 2⅓ years the case has pended. In the United Grocers' Co. case, the motion to dismiss was granted; but the judgment was soon reopened on plaintiffs' motion to permit them to move for leave to file an amended complaint. Later another judge granted such leave, D. C. S. D. N. Y. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,731], 151 F. Supp. 760. An amended complaint was filed, again of doubled size, but of doubtful informative value; this was met by a most lengthy motion to strike, which was denied by still another judge. Eventually an answer was filed, after the greater part of a year had been wasted by five motions before four different judges, but without progress toward adjudication. All the cases noted in the article, except the one here on appeal, provided for amendment of the complaint; but no gain in information has yet been seen on any repleading.

[4] See, e.g., F. R. 81(a); Copyright Rule of Practice 1, 307 U. S. 652, 17 U. S. C. fol. § 101; and the Federal Forms, such as Form 17—Complaint for Infringement of Copyright and Unfair Competition. So the recently adopted Rule 71A, for the Condemnation of Property, in subdivision (c) has some special requirements for describing the property, but otherwise follows the general practice, see subdivision (a).

charge too little. It includes every essential to show a violation of the Sherman Act. And where a bona fide complaint is filed that charges every element necessary to recover, summary dismissal of a civil case for failure to set out evidential facts can seldom be justified. If a party needs more facts, it has a right to call for them under Rule 12(e) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. And any time a claim is frivolous an expensive full dress trial can be avoided by invoking the summary judgment procedure under Rule 56."

A like ruling is made in the companion case of United States v. Employing Lathers Ass'n of Chicago [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,693], 347 U. S. 198, 200. And in Radovich v. National Football League [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,628], 352 U. S. 445, 453, 454, the Court, in upholding a broad general complaint, stressed that it should not add pleading requirements to burden the private antitrust litigant favored by Congress beyond what is specifically set forth in the antitrust laws. Other cases of like tenor are cited in the footnote.[5]

In asserting a special rule of pleading for antitrust cases, our brothers below have in terms rejected the "modern 'notice' theory of pleading" as here insufficient[6] and said that an antitrust complaint must "state a cause of action instead of merely stating a claim."[7] But while these essentially nebulous concepts often creep into pleading discussions, they are no part of the rules themselves, but were in fact rejected for more precise formulations. It is well to go back to the rules themselves and their intended purpose. To this end we accept as definitive the precise statement formulated by the Advisory Committee in the light of both purpose and experience to answer criticisms based on some dispute in the interpretation of the rules. This appears in the Report of Proposed Amendments, October 1955, pp. 18, 19, and Preliminary Draft, May 1954, pp. 8, 9, as a note explanatory of F. R. 8(a)(2) and the Committee's decision to recommend the retention of that rule in its present form. The following extracts therefrom are directly pertinent to our present discussion:

"The intent and effect of the rules is to permit the claim to be stated in general terms; the rules are designed to discourage battles over mere form of statement and to sweep away the needless controversies which the codes permitted that served either to delay trial on the merits or to prevent a party from having a trial because of mistakes in statement. * * * It is accordingly the opinion of the Advisory Committee that, as it stands, the rule adequately sets forth the characteristics of good pleading; does away with the confusion resulting from the use of 'facts' and 'cause of action'; and requires the pleader to disclose adequate information as the basis of his claim for relief as distinguished from a bare averment that he wants relief and is entitled to it."

[Complaint]

Turning to the complaint before us, we remark that in outward form at least it is an imposing document consisting of twelve or more printed pages. Both sides purport to rely on the pleading admonitions in some of the district court cases we have referred to:[8] the defendants to show, as the district court indeed held, that the plaintiffs have not heeded these warnings, and the plaintiffs to claim that they have and have expanded their allegations accordingly. At any rate, we have one result, which seems to be invariable when detailed pleading is stressed, namely, a vast increase in verbiage. The complaint is filled with the pleading of con-

[5] Darnell v. Markwood, D. C. Cir. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,910], 220 F. 2d 374; Louisiana Farmers' Protective Union v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. of America, 8 Cir. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,239], 131 F. 2d 419; Cooper v. R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 1 Cir., 234 F. 2d 170; Byrd v. Bates, 5 Cir., 220 F. 2d 480; Atwood v. Humble Oil & Refining Co., 5 Cir., 243 F. 2d 885; Sidebotham v. Robinson, 9 Cir., 216 F. 2d 816. This principle has not been questioned even in cases (perhaps now somewhat doubtful in view of the precedents cited in the text) requiring the pleading of injury to the public interest, interstate commerce, etc., such as Feddersen Motors v. Ward, 10 Cir. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,579], 180 F. 2d 519, 522; Kinnear-Weed Corp. v. Humble Oil & Refining Co., 5 Cir. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,822], 214 F. 2d 891, certiorari denied 348 U. S. 912; Beegle v. Thomson, 7 Cir. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,291], 138 F. 2d 875, 881, certiorari denied Beegle v. Thomson, 322 U. S. 743; Black & Yates v. Mahogany Ass'n, 3 Cir., 129 F. 2d 227, 148 A. L. R. 841, certiorari denied Mahogany Ass'n v. Black & Yates, 317 U. S. 672. See also Resolutions Adopted at Seminar on Long Cases in New York, Aug. 26-30, 1957, #7.

[6] Baim & Blank, Inc. v. Warren-Connelly Co., D. C. S. D. N. Y. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,285], 19 F. R. D. 108, 109.

[7] United Grocers' Co. v. Sau-Sea Foods, Inc., D. C. S. D. N. Y. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,661], 150 F. Supp. 267, 269.

[8] See cases referred to in notes 3, 6, and 7 supra.

clusions of both fact and law; it is far from that lean and terse allegation in sequence of events as they have happened which we have stressed.[9] But we are not conducting exercises in pleading; we must look beyond the mere mountain of words to the meaning sought to be conveyed. So looking we can have no doubt that plaintiffs say the supplier defendants have given their favored customers Vim and Davega price discounts and other special favors (listed in some detail) which have lost sales to the plaintiffs, destroyed their capacity to compete, and forced some of them out of business.

[Statement of Claim]

In testing whether this is a sufficient statement of claim upon which to base a lawsuit, we ought practically to consider the alternatives, both what can be expected and asked of antitrust plaintiffs and what can be accomplished by compulsive orders. Here seems to be the rock upon which attempts below to achieve more particularized pleading has definitely foundered; for the judges' directions double the bulk without increasing enlightenment, while they delay the cause and exhaust the time of several judges.[10] So in this case the district judge has stated several requirements which would seem either not feasible or not such as to advance the case toward adjudication. Most of them relate to details either not pertinent to the legal point or covered generally, such as addresses and location of defendants, the territory involved (the "Greater New York area"), the time (necessarily the period permitted by the applicable statutes of limitation to the date of filing of the complaint), and so on. Perhaps the nub of all of this is the conclusion that by "stating the claims of all the plaintiffs against all the defendants collectively, they have deprived the defendants of notice of the precise nature of the claims that each will be required to meet." But we note that a similar order in a companion case has resulted only in a complaint doubled in length, with separate paragraphs of iteration in general form of action by individual plaintiffs against individual defendants — a formal compliance, with no gain in useful information that we can perceive.[11]

[Prima Facie Case]

It is to be noted that this complaint meets certain difficulties sometimes adverted to in other cases, such as allegations as to interstate commerce or public injury occasionally found wanting.[12] It does lack a direct allegation that the defendants conspired together, although it assumes the defendants' "combinations and conspiracies" and the resulting damage to plaintiffs. But as to this the trier of facts may draw an inference of agreement or concerted action from the "conscious parallelism" of the defendants' acts of price cutting and the like, as the Supreme Court recognizes. Theatre Enterprises v. Paramount Film Distributing Corp. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,640], 346 U. S. 537, 541. So in dealing with an antitrust complaint of somewhat similar nature, Judge Smith in an informed decision refused a dismissal because of lack of a clear-cut assertion of concerted activity, since the plaintiff could rest on this conscious parallelism among the defendants. Hathaway Motors v. General Motors Corp., D. C. Conn. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,996], 18 F. R. D. 283. On the other branch of the case, the Robinson-Patman Act makes price discrimination illegal unless it is within one of the exceptions stated in the statute, 15 U. S. C. § 13. But the burden of bringing the case within one of these exceptions is definitely upon the defendants. F. T. C. v. Morton Salt Co. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,247], 334 U. S. 37, 45, 1 A. L. R. 2d 260; Ruberoid Co. v. F. T. C., 2 Cir. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,847], 189 F. 2d 893, 895, s. c. 191 F. 2d 294, affirmed F. T. C. v. Ruberoid Co.

[9] "A simple statement in sequence of the events which have transpired, coupled with a direct claim by way of demand for judgment of what the plaintiff expects and hopes to recover, is a measure of clarity and safety; and even the demand for judgment loses its restrictive nature when the parties are at issue, for particular legal theories of counsel yield to the court's duty to grant the relief to which the prevailing party is entitled, whether demanded or not." Gins v. Mauser Plumbing Supply Co., 2 Cir., 148 F. 2d 974, 976, citing F. R. 54(c) and cases. See also Siegelman v. Cunard White Star Limited, 2 Cir., 221 F. 2d 189, 196.

[10] See examples in note 3 supra. The early assignment of a potentially protracted case to a single judge—as recommended by the authorities noted later in the text—would avoid this waste.

[11] Baim & Blank, Inc. v. Warren-Connelly Co., D. C. S. D. N. Y. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,285], 19 F. R. D. 108; and see also United Grocers' Co. v. Sau-Sea Foods, Inc., D. C. S. D. N. Y. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,661], 150 F. Supp. 267.

[12] See cases cited in note 5 supra.

[1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,279], 343 U. S. 470. It would seem therefore that the plaintiffs have set forth a prima facie case which, if proved, will force the defendants to their proof in rebuttal.

[Pleading Evidence]

In criticizing these complaints the trial judges have tended to see willful violations of precise instructions. We doubt if this is a profitable approach in any event; however willful seeming, lawyers must represent their clients in what they conceive the most effective way in the light of their knowledge, which must include that neither English nor American experience lends support to mere pleadings as a substitute for trial. But as we try to visualize practical substitutes we question the adverse implication. For actually this demand seems to come to a call for specific instances, as that Admiral made such and such a discount sale of specified goods to Davega on a particular day at a particular place. Anything short of this, as the practice below is demonstrating, will permit of the vagueness the judges are finding troublesome. And yet such pleading of the evidence is surely not required and is on the whole undesirable. It is a matter for the discovery process, not for allegations of detail in the complaint. The complaint should not be burdened with possibly hundreds of specific instances; and if it were, it would be comparatively meaningless at trial where the parties could adduce further pertinent evidence if discovered. They can hardly know all their evidence, down to the last detail, long in advance of trial.

[More Definite Statement]

The sad truth is that these cases are likely to prove laborious in any event and that there is no real substitute for trial, although pre-trial conferences and orders may greatly speed the result.[13] But a considerable part of federal litigation is of a lengthy and burdensome nature and we are not justified in frowning on a Congressional policy so definitely cherished as is this, a policy which is, after all, the cause of our troubles. And while as appellate judges we would help our brethern at the crucial trial stage where we could, the experience, as generally noted,[14] shows that attempts at special pleading are definitely not the remedy. This has a bearing on the alternative relief here asked, that of a more definite statement under F. R. 12(e). Trial judges should of course have some discretion to attempt improvements in particular pleadings before them where they have the available time and energy to do so. Yet it seems clear that "motions for particulars will not serve that purpose" of particularizing antitrust issues, Procedure in Anti-Trust and Other Protracted Cases, A Report Adopted by the Judicial Conference of the United States, September 26, 1951, page 10, and "Orders for more definite statements ordinarily do not result in furtherance of the solution of the big case." Resolutions Adopted at Seminar on Long Cases in New York, August 26-30, 1957, #8. The real solution—so far as there is one short of trial—would appear to be that recommended in these important and informed authorities, viz., continuing pretrial conferences under the direction of a single judge who may thus avoid the duplicating efforts of various judges we have noted above.

[Class Suit]

The remaining issue involving joinder has two aspects, the striking of the allegations that the plaintiffs represent a class under F. R. 23(a)(3) and the holding that there is no common question of either law or fact supporting joinder of the defendants under F. R. 20(a). We are constrained to hold the court in error on both aspects. As to the first, we think the court has ascribed both too much and too little weight to this class-suit provision—too much in holding it so troublesome as to require striking at this stage and too little as destroying whatever efficacy it may have in a particular case. This is the form of class suit which at times is given the opprobrious epithet of "spurious" to distinguish it from the truly representative actions, for it is in actual effect really little more than an invitation to non-parties closely interested to intervene. As we have said of this provision:

[13] Inter alia, they might provide for the limitation of proof by plaintiff to establish only the prima facie case noted above in the text; this in turn would somewhat control the extent of the answering evidence.

[14] See the particular references in note 3 supra, and the more general ones in note 1 supra.

"It stands as an invitation to others affected to join in the battle and an admonition to the court to proceed with proper circumspection in creating a precedent which may actually affect nonparties, even if not legally res judicata as to them. Beyond this, as we in common with other courts have pointed out, it cannot make the case of the claimed representatives stronger, or give them rights they would not have of their own strength, or affect legally the rights or obligations of those who do not intervene."

All American Airways v. Elderd, 2 Cir., 209 F. 2d 247, 248, 249. This was said in holding an order partially dismissing counterclaims to the extent that they were based on this rule as "only an order for prettifying the pleadings in the eyes of the trial judge" and hence not appealable. See also Oppenheimer v. F. J. Young & Co., 2 Cir., 144 F. 2d 387; Bascom Launder Corp. v. Telecoin Corp., 2 Cir. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,472], 204 F. 2d 331, 336, certiorari denied 345 U. S. 994; Kainz v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc., 7 Cir. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,221], 194 F. 2d 737, certiorari denied Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v. Kainz, 344 U. S. 820. It is difficult to see what harm the allegations do, since they will serve no function if the invitation is accepted by no one. On the other hand, they may serve a helpful function in leading in the consideration of substantially similar problems all at once. This is the function, too, of the joinder provisions to which we now turn.

[Federal Rules]

F. R. 20(a) provides:

"All persons may be joined in one action as defendants if there is asserted against them jointly, severally, or in the alternative, any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences and if any question of law or fact common to all of them will arise in the action."

This is a correlative provision to the similar one for the joinder of plaintiffs. The rule also provides that neither a plaintiff nor a defendant need be interested in obtaining or defending against all the relief demanded, that judgment may be given for or against individual parties according to their respective rights and duties, and—in subdivision (b)—that the court may order separate trials or otherwise protect the parties and prevent delay or prejudice. Originating in modern English procedure, it came to this country by way of the New York Civil Practice Act of 1921 and has been widely adopted, as in the codes of such states as California, Connecticut, Illinois, and Pennsylvania, as well as in the fifteen jurisdictions which have adopted the federal rules in toto. It substitutes principles of trial convenience and efficiency for rigid rules of interrelationship of parties. Its range can be seen from an early and famous case in New York, Akely v. Kinnicutt, 1924, 238 N. Y. 466, 144 N. E. 682, upholding the joinder of 193 plaintiffs seeking individual damages caused by reliance upon a fraudulent stock prospectus. The same concept is stated, perhaps even more directly in the provision of F. R. 42(a) for consolidation of actions or joint hearings or trial "When actions involving a common question of law or fact are pending before the court." This provision is important here because the plaintiffs in their complaint state their intention to ask for consolidation of this case with another now pending before the district court.[15] Its broad scope is shown by cases such as Gillette Motor Transport v. Northern Oklahoma Butane Co., 10 Cir., 179 F. 2d 711; Plough v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 2 Cir., 172 F. 2d 396, certiorari denied 337 U. S. 940; McAfoos v. Canadian Pac. Steamships, Ltd., 2 Cir., 243 F. 2d 270, 274.

[Questions of Law]

There are various suggestions of common questions of fact or law which we need not separately explore, since we think that in any event the suggestion of concerted activity because of the "conscious parallelism" of the defendants' acts affords a clear ground of joinder without need of more. And if joinder is permissible on facts alleged, it cannot and should not be restricted to certain theories of relief only, as, for example, restraint of trade as opposed to price discrimination, when the facts alleged support both theories. For it is clear law that it is the duty of the court to grant the relief which the facts before it require; the legal theories which the parties may have suggested or relied on may be of help to the court, but do not control.[16] Hence there is no proper basis for distinguishing here between Sherman and Robinson-Patman claims, although the plaintiffs may have indulged in unnecessary and repetitious separate statements of "causes of action."

[15] Baim & Blank, Inc. v. Warren-Connelly Co., D. C. S. D. N. Y. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,285], 19 F. R. D. 108.

[Policy]

This problem necessarily dovetails into that of pleading first discussed, and the over-all considerations there pertinent have significance here also. Under settled Congressional policy, acts of discriminatory price cuttting are bound to give rise to a multitude of damage claims which federal courts cannot push aside. How shall they be handled—by fragmentation or by mass attack, so to speak? Modern procedure favors the trial and disposition of similar cases together as a matter of court efficiency; this is shown by the popularity of these extensive joinder provisions, the most widely accepted of all pleading reforms. This case would seem to promise gain in the employment, not repudiation, of the authority given. To force on this already overcrowded court the necessity of separate actions—with accompanying pleading, discovery, pre-trial, and trial activities—in all the various combinations possible among thirteen plaintiffs and twenty-six defendants, not to speak of other causes which could be consolidated with this, would be quite intolerable. On the other hand, at this preliminary stage joinder seems to have attractive possibilities. Conceivably it may lead to a fairly expeditious settlement of all issues and at the longest it calls for trial work of perhaps difficult, but not impospossible, character for an experienced trial judge. And there is always at hand the authority to order separate trials of particular issues. We believe the reversal and remand we find required by law will lead eventually to more definite and affirmative results than the course embarked on by the court below. As our discussion shows, we do not think amendment of the complaint necessary and are not making its reinstatement contingent thereon. So far as the appeal affects defendant The Wilcox-Gay Corporation, it is dismissed by consent as per affidavit on file. Otherwise the action is reversed and remanded.

[¶ 68,840] New Orleans Insurance Exchange v. United States.

In the Supreme Court of the United States. October Term, 1957. No. 399. Dated October 28, 1957.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana, New Orleans Division. J. SKELLY WRIGHT, District Judge.

Case No. 1182 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Group Boycott—Interstate Commerce —Insurance Business Under McCarran-Ferguson Act.—The United States Supreme Court affirmed a trial court's rulings that (1) the by-laws of an association of insurance agents and brokers which required the members of the association to boycott any stock company which plants through any except association agents, to boycott any stock company which sells directly to the public, to boycott mutual companies irrespective of how or by whom the insurance is sold, and to boycott nonmember agencies so that the facilities of companies planting exclusively through association outlets are denied such agents constituted violations of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, (2) the business of insurance, when conducted across state lines, is interstate commerce, and (3) the McCarran-Ferguson Act does not render the Sherman Act inapplicable to any agreement to boycott, coerce, or intimidate, or act of boycott, coercion, or intimidation.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.205, 2005.533, 2035.153, 2263; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.720.

---

[16] See cases cited in note 9 supra and the many cases applying F. R. 54(c); Bowles v. J. J. Schmitt & Co., 2 Cir., 170 F. 2d 617; Couto v. United Fruit Co., 2 Cir., 203 F. 2d 456; Flynn v. United States, 8 Cir., 205 F. 2d 756; Clark, Code Pleading 265-273 (2d Ed. 1947).

For the appellant: Murray F. Cleveland, New Orleans, La.

For the appellee: J. Lee Rankin, Solicitor General; Victor R. Hansen, Assistant Attorney General; and Charles H. Weston and Ernest L. Folk, III, Attorneys, Department of Justice.

Affirming a decision of the U. S. District Court, Eastern District of Louisiana, New Orleans Division, 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,616; for a prior decision of the Court, see 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 67,935.

[Affirmed]

PER CURIAM [In full text]: The motion to affirm is granted and the judgment is affirmed.

[¶ 68,841] Quentin Stroud, et al. v. Ezra T. Benson, United States Secretary of Agriculture; Flue Cured Tobacco Cooperative Stabilization Corporation of Raleigh, North Carolina, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of North Carolina, New Bern Division. Civil No. 464. Filed September 26, 1957.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Contracts Requiring Identification of "Discount" Tobacco—Legality—Governmental Regulation—Restraint of Trade—Petition for Injunction—Lack of Equity.—Contracts between a tobacco cooperative stabilization corporation and tobacco warehousemen requiring that "discount" varieties of tobacco be identified on the warehouse floor at auction sales, pursuant to an order of the Secretary of Agriculture issued to implement its tobacco support program and to stabilize the tobacco market, did not constitute a restraint of trade in violation of the antitrust laws. A petition of certain tobacco growers to restrain the enforcement of the order was dismissed. The stabilization corporation and the warehousemen were agencies through which the Federal Government acted in carrying out its tobacco program, and the antitrust laws are not applicable to such governmental operations. The contracts were not agreements in restraint of trade, and, even if they were agreements in restraints of trade, they constituted a reasonable regulation of business. Furthermore, even if the antitrust laws were applicable to this governmental operation, equitable relief would not be granted since there was no equity in the plaintiffs' position. Any gain to the plaintiffs that might result by granting the equitable relief sought would be small when compared to the tremendous loss accruing to the thousands of tobacco growers whose welfare was dependent upon the continuation of the price support program. The plaintiffs seek the aid of a court of equity to prevent buyers from knowing the truth about the tobaccos which they are asked to buy.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005, 2005.760; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9023.

For the plaintiffs: J. A. Jones, Kinston, N. C.; and M. E. Cavendish, Greenville, N. C.

For the defendants: Julian T. Gaskill, United States Attorney, Raleigh, N. C.; Gerald O'Rourke, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.; and William T. Joyner, Raleigh, N. C.

Memorandum, Findings of Fact, and Order

[Nature of Action]

DON GILLIAM, District Judge [In full text except for omissions indicated by asterisks]: This cause came on to be heard at Raleigh, North Carolina, on September 5, 1957, upon an order of August 15, 1957, directing the defendants and each of them to show cause why the prayer for relief should not be granted. Plaintiffs, each of whom resides within the Eastern District of North Carolina, are engaged in the raising of tobacco and commenced this action by the filing of a complaint praying for an injunction restraining the defendants and each of them in their respective capacities from enforcing the rules and regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture providing for the support of flue-cured tobacco upon a variety basis; and the identification of tobacco of certain varieties upon the auction sale warehouse floor through the use of an identifying (striped) ticket, and also for a mandatory injunction ordering the Secretary of Agriculture to support tobacco produced by plaintiffs during 1957 upon a per grade basis at 90 percent of parity.

[Motion to Dismiss]

At the outset the defendants moved to dismiss for that: 1. The court lacks jurisdiction over the subject matter; 2. The Court lacks jurisdiction over the person of Ezra T. Benson, Secretary of Agriculture; 3. The venue as to the Secretary of Agriculture is improper; 4. The Secretary of Agriculture is an indispensable party; 5. The complaint fails to state a claim on which relief can be granted. The motion raised doubts in my mind, but believing it to be in the public interest to reach a consideration on the merits, the doubt was resolved in favor of the plaintiffs and the motion was denied.

[Discount Tobacco]

These facts are established by the evidence:

Historically one-third to one-half of this country's production of flue-cured tobacco has been consumed by the export trade which to a large extent desires our full-bodied, full-flavored and aroma tobaccos which are produced in no other country in the world.

Foreign buyers of tobacco have available to them in foreign countries all needed supplies of light-bodied tobacco which lacks the flavor and aroma traditionally found in the standard American varieties, and these foreign buyers can obtain such light-bodied tobaccos at from one-half to eighty percent of the net cost to them of the American produced light-bodied tobaccos.

The new American produced light-bodied tobaccos often simulate in appearance the various long established standard American varieties, but lack the flavor and aroma found in such standard varieties.

The grading of tobacco, under the Tobacco Inspection Act, (7 U. S. C. A. Sec. 511, et seq.) is based entirely on characteristics visible to the naked eye and the presence or absence of flavor and aroma is not a grading factor and cannot be established as a factor in the traditional marketing procedures followed in the tobacco industry.

Beginning with the 1955 tobacco marketing year and continuing with increasing intensity thereafter, the United States Department of Agriculture and the American tobacco producer and trade associations received complaints from foreign and domestic buyers and companies that the new light-bodied American produced tobaccos lacked the flavor and aroma which had been associated with American tobaccos and that such new varieties, which were identified by the complainants as Coker 139, 140, and Dixie Bright 244 (henceforth referred to as "discount" varieties), were not wanted by foreign tobacco buyers and companies.

In making complaints, foreign tobacco buyers and companies served notice that the "discount" varieties could not be identified readily from the standard American varieties on the auction sale warehouse floors in the cured leaf form, and that, unless steps were taken to identify these new varieties of tobacco at the market so as to inspire buying confidence and to encourage the production of American standard varieties, the foreign buyers and companies would sharply decrease and possibly cease buying American tobaccos.

The failure to distinguish on the warehouse floor between the full-bodied, full-flavored and aromatic standard American tobaccos and the new light-bodied American tobaccos would result in depressing the marketing prices for tobaccos generally because of the efforts of tobacco buyers and companies to offset the loss resulting to them by the inadvertent purchase of such new varieties by reducing the price they would pay for any and all American tobaccos.

[Effects]

The quantities of tobacco coming under Commodity Credit Corporation's 1955 and 1956 Tobacco Loan Programs, because of the buyer's unwillingness to purchase any tobacco which they believed might be of the light-bodied varieties, caused the Government's loan stocks of tobacco to reach their highest point since the inception of the Tobacco Loan Program, and it is an economic fact that over-large inventories of any commodity have a depressing effect on the prices of such commodity.

The unwillingness of the tobacco buyers and companies to purchase any tobacco which they believe might be of the new light-bodied varieties resulted in a general depressing effect upon the tobacco market, penalizing all producers of the standard American varieties desired by foreign and domestic tobacco buyers and companies.

* * *

[Government Program]

The program, which the United States Department of Agriculture determined to put into effect to stabilize the prices of tobacco, to promote the orderly marketing of tobacco and preserve for the American tobacco producer his export markets, was announced to the tobacco industry and the public generally by the Department's press release dated December 18, 1956, which stated in part as follows:

> "Major changes in the 1957 flue-cured tobacco price support program—changes which are expected to discourage production of varieties viewed as undesirable under present demand conditions and to encourage an increase in the proportion of the crop having characteristics currently in demand—were announced today by the U. S. Department of Agriculture.
>
> "Today's changes, which are in accord with recommendations of grower organization and industry leaders in the flue-cured tobacco area, are as follows:
>
> "(1) 1957-crop flue-cured tobacco of varieties '139', '140', and '244', irrespective of grade, will be supported at one-half of the support rates for comparable grades of other varieties.
>
> "(2) Price support rates for individual grades of all flue-cured varieties will be adjusted to reflect current demand patterns. This action will support a program to encourage cultural practices that will increase the proportion of the crop which has desirable flavor and aroma characteristics.
>
> "The three varieties viewed as currently undesirable have been classified by Federal and State scientists of the flue-cured tobacco area as 'low to lacking in flavor and aroma, generally of light body, and/or currently with poor acceptance in the trade.'"

Copies of such press releases were mailed by representative agencies of the Department of Agriculture to each tobacco producer in the United States. By press release dated January 9, 1957, the Department of Agriculture further explained the program which it had entered upon, stating in part as follows:

> "Rigid enforcement of its announced 50% cut in price support on 1957 production of flue-cured tobacco varieties Coker 139, Coker 140, and Dixie Bright 244 was emphasized today by the U. S. Department of Agriculture . . .
>
> "Commenting on the Department's enforcement plans Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Marvin L. McLain said: 'We expect to spare no reasonable effort to carry out the purpose and intent of the variety discount program.'"

Further notice was given by press release dated April 26, 1957, wherein it was repeated that the discount varieties would be supported at one-half the rate of comparable grades of other varieties of American tobaccos and that the discount varieties had been determined to be lacking in flavor and aroma and had poor acceptance in the trade. On May 10, 1957, consistent with the notice given in the press release of January 9, 1957, that the Department would rigidly enforce its program with respect to the discount varieties, and that it would spare no reasonable effort to carry out the purpose and intent of the program, the Department announced that acceptable varieties of flue-cured tobacco, that is, those other than the discount varieties, would be identified on the auction sale warehouse floor for the reason as follows:

> ". . . in order to stimulate confidence in buyers, stimulate prices on the market, and protect the price support program."

The press release of May 10, 1957, further stated:

> "The floor identification plan was developed in cooperation with committees representing the Bright Belt Warehouse Association and the South Carolina Warehouse Association. Under the plan, auction warehouses will use regular basket tickets to identify baskets of tobacco 'certified' as from farms that produced none of the undesirable varieties but will use special, distinguishably different tickets to identify all baskets which are not so 'certified'."

The regulations of the Department of Agriculture pertaining to its variety identification program appeared in the Federal Register of May 7, 1957 (22 F. R. 3201), in the form of a notice of proposed Rule Making, wherein all aspects of the program, excepting the actual level of support, and the matter of identification on warehouse floors which had not yet been determined upon was set out in detail and in the last paragraph of such Notice of Proposed Rule Making there appeared the statement as follows:

> "Prior to the final adoption and issuance of these regulations, consideration will be given to any data, views, and recommendations thereto which are submitted in writing to the director, Tobacco Division, Commodity Stabilization Service, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington 25, D. C. All submissions must be postmarked not later than ten days after date of publication of this notice in the Federal Register in order to be considered."

Pursuant to the notice of proposed Rule Making so given, there appeared in the Federal Register of June 11, 1957, (22 F. R. 4064) the terms of the Variety Identification Program and this Regulation, like the notice of proposed Rule Making previously given, showed that such program had been entered upon in connection with the Department's responsibilities under the price support legislation and there was cited for legal authority in both such Federal Register publications The Agriculture Act of 1949, 7 U. S. C. A. Sec. 1421, et seq. Thereafter, there appeared in the Federal Register of July 9, 1957, (22 F. R. 4777) the full terms of the 1957 Tobacco Loan Program, including the provisions with respect to the Variety Identification Program through the successive stages of production from the green plant growing in the field through the marketing on the tobacco auction warehouse floor. * * *

The Tobacco Loan Program in the flue-cured tobacco area is carried out by Commodity Credit Corporation, on behalf of the Secretary of Agriculture, through contracts between such Corporation and the Flue Cured Tobacco Cooperative Stabilization Corporation, Raleigh, North Carolina, and such contracts require that the contracts entered into between Stabilization and auction warehousemen through which the tobacco price support program is made available to producers be approved by Commodity Credit Corporation.

[Contracts Requiring Identification]

Consistent with the Variety Identification Program the Department of Agriculture required that contracts between Stabilization and auction warehousemen participating in the price support program contain provisions requiring differentiation on the warehouse floor between the standard varieties and the "discount" varieties. The foregoing contractual provisions have been complied with by the defendants.

* * *

[Notice to Plaintiffs]

The defendants, under the terms and provisions of the marketing regulations of June 11, 1957, determined that the plaintiffs had grown tobacco on their respective farms for the crop year of 1957, having growth characteristics or seed strains of the "discount" varieties, and notified the plaintiffs of their determination, upon which determination the tobacco would be identified on the warehouse floor at the time of sale.

* * *

[Antitrust Violation Alleged]

Finally, the plaintiffs contend that the contract between Flue Cured Stabilization and the defendant warehousemen requiring that the discount varieties be identified on the warehouse floor (pursuant to the order of the Secretary of Agriculture) is in restraint of trade and hence invalid as a violation of the Anti-trust laws.

[Objection to Identification]

The crux of plaintiffs' case lies in their objection to the identification on the warehouse floor of discount tobacco such as they propose to offer for sale. In other words, they seek to keep the buyers in the dark with respect to the tobacco which they do not desire, but being without such identification they may unwittingly buy; they hope and expect that without the information supplied by the striped card all or at least some of the buyers may be confused and that they may obtain better prices by reason of such confusion. Bluntly stated, they protest against the disclosure of the truth at the auction sale.

[Sovereign Acts—Immunity]

Anti-Trust acts are designed to insure competition and thereby promote the public interest; and as the sovereign acts in the public interest the Courts have held that these acts do not suppress the sovereign. Parker v. Brown [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,250], 317 U. S. 341, 350:

> "We find nothing in the language of the Sherman Act . . . which suggests that its purpose was to restrain a state or its officers or agents from activities directed by its legislature. . . . That its purpose was to suppress combinations to restrain competition and attempts to monopolize by individuals and corporations abundantly appears from its legislative history."

The Court in this case also held that the Anti-Trust statutes did not apply to those individual defendants who were not officers of the Government but were individuals operating the grower marketing agency as is the case here. Actually, the initiation of the identification idea was that of the federal government, acting through the Secretary of Agriculture to whom authority was given by the Congress; Stabilization and the two warehousemen are merely the agencies through which the government itself acts to carry out its program of stabilizing the tobacco auction market and implementing the tobacco support program. United States v. Edgerton & Sons, 178 F. 2d, 763, cited by plaintiffs' counsel, is not applicable. On this ground I find the plaintiffs' position untenable, but there are other grounds.

[Reasonableness—No Restraint]

If there is restraint of trade here, it is not unreasonable and, therefore, not outlawed. In Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U. S. 231, 239, the Court said: "But the evidence admitted makes it clear that the rule was a reasonable regulation of business, consistent with the provisions of the Anti-Trust Law"; and at page 241: "The restraint imposed by the rule is less severe than that sustained in Anderson v. United States, 171 U. S. 604. Every board of trade and nearly every trade organization imposes some restraint upon the conduct of business by its members." It appears clear to me that if the certification of full support varieties is any restraint of trade, it is a reasonable restraint and, therefore, valid. But it is also clear, so far as I see, that there is no restraint of trade at all. The questioned contracts are not agreements in restraint of trade. The purpose of the striped ticket required by the contracts is to disclose the simple truth concerning the nature of the product offered for sale. There is no attempt to create a monopoly, no conspiracy to fix prices or limit production. If the knowledge of the true identity of the discount varieties tends to result in lower prices and smaller purchases, it is because the market, knowing the truth, has no desire for them. The truth of the matter seems to be that competition has been promoted since the discount must now compete with the standard varieties. Generally, complete and full knowledge on the part of both vendor and vendee is considered an element of perfect competition.

[Equities]

Furthermore, if it be assumed that the Anti-Trust statute applies to this governmental operation, and that the restraint of trade, if any, is not reasonable, the plaintiffs must fall since there is lack of equity on plaintiffs' side. Such must appear when injunctive relief is demanded. The plight of some of the plaintiffs arouses sympathy until it becomes apparent that they are seeking relief from present economic loss arising from a situation for which neither they nor defendants are to blame, by obtaining the aid of a court of equity to prevent buyers from knowing the truth about the tobaccos which they are asked to buy. Any gain to the plaintiffs that might result by granting the equitable relief which they demand would be small, indeed, when compared to the tremendous loss accruing to the thousands of tobacco growers whose welfare as tobacco raisers is so definitely dependent upon the continuation of the price support program, if such relief is granted. There is no equity in plaintiffs' position and, accordingly, a court of equity will not sustain it.

[Dismissed]

It is ordered that the relief asked be denied and that the petition be dismissed at plaintiffs' cost.

[¶ 68,842] Lawrence Capitol, Inc. v. Stanley-Warner Corporation, Stanley-Warner Circuit Management Corporation, Massachusetts Amusement Corporation, Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Corporation, Warner Bros. Pictures Inc., T. C. F. Film Corporation, Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, Loew's Incorporated, Paramount Film Distributing Corporation, Paramount Pictures Inc., RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., Columbia Pictures Corporation, Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., United Artists Corporation, and Republic Pictures Corporation.

In the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts. Civil Action No. 55-332-S. Dated July 1, 1957.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—When Recovery May Be Barred—General Release—Validity.—In an action charging that motion picture companies conspired to deny first run pictures to a motion picture exhibitor, a general release, which was given by the exhibitor to certain of the defendant companies in settlement of a prior similar action, barred the exhibitor from asserting its present claims (accruing prior to the date of the release) against the companies named in the release. The exhibitor failed to prove that the release was obtained by fraud and duress. There was no evidence that the companies failed to keep their promise to give the exhibitor the opportunity of competing for first run pictures, and the exhibitor failed to establish that the companies promised to supply first run pictures to it without competitive bidding. Also, the exhibitor failed to establish that the companies switched settlement papers, and the exhibitor introduced no evidence to support its claim that it was subjected to duress during the settlement negotiations. The exhibitor did not establish its right to cancel the release.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9010.700, 9010.775.

For the plaintiff: Jean C. Campopiano, Lawrence, Mass., and Russell Hardy, Sr., Washington, D. C.

For the defendants: Robert W. Meserve and John R. Hally, of Nutter, McClennen & Fish, Boston, Mass., for Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp., Paramount Film Distributing Corp., Republic Pictures Corp., Columbia Pictures Corp., United Artists Corp., Loew's Inc., RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., and Universal Film Exchanges, Inc.; and Richard L. Brickley, of Brickley, Sears & Cole, Boston, Mass., for Stanley-Warner Corp., Massachusetts Amusement Corp., Stanley-Warner Circuit Management Corp., Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Corp., and Warner Bros. Pictures Inc.

Opinion

[Motion for Directed Verdict]

SWEENEY, Chief Judge [In full text]: This proceeding arises out of a motion picture antitrust action, the complaint of which charges a conspiracy to deny first run pictures to the plaintiff. Counts 6 and 7 of the complaint further allege that the settlement of a prior similar action against all but two of these defendants (Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and Republic Pictures Corporation) and the general release given by the plaintiff were obtained by fraud and duress. The court had granted a motion of the defendants to try counts 6 and 7 separately and prior to the substantive counts of the complaint, and it is this proceeding which is in issue now. The matter to be decided is the defendants' motion, presented at the close of the plaintiff's evidence, for a directed verdict pursuant to Rule 52(a), Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, 28 U. S. C. A.

[General Release]

All parties concede that the settlement negotiations were completed on June 5, 1952, with the payment to the plaintiff of $100,000, the execution of a general release by him, and the subsequent filing of a dismissal with prejudice. The plaintiff now alleges in substance the following.

Mr. Abe Montague, the general sales manager of Columbia Pictures Corporation (hereinafter referred to as Columbia) in New York, and a friend of Mr. Campopiano, the president and principal shareholder of the plaintiff corporation, initially telephoned Campopiano on March 12, 1952 and suggested discussing a possible settlement of the then pending case. There followed a number of conferences between Montague and Campopiano during which it was finally agreed that the settlement should consist of a guaranteed supply of A pictures and the payment of $100,000. A meeting was arranged on May 23 with two of Columbia's lawyers who also agreed that the plaintiff was to have an adequate supply of first run A pictures without competitive bidding and that this agreement was to be reduced to writing. A delay was necessary to collect the money and draft the requisite papers and on June 2, 1952 Campopiano was again told to return the following day to close the matter. On June 3, Campopiano allegedly signed a general release, a memorandum of guaranties for pictures, and a notice of dismissal with prejudice and was told to return the following day to receive the checks which were not yet ready. When Campopiano came back to collect he was told that it was inadvisable to execute the memorandum of guaranties and that instead the plaintiff was to get oral assurances from all the defendants and as a token of their good faith a notice of dismissal without prejudice was to be filed. On June 5, Campopiano alleges, he signed a notice of dismissal without prejudice and initialled a memorandum incorporating the oral assurances. He was given checks totalling $100,000 and an unsealed envelope supposedly containing copies of these settlement papers which in fact, however, contained a copy of the notice of dismissal with prejudice and no copy of the "oral memorandum." Campopiano, without first inspecting its contents, deposited the envelope in a safe deposit box at the Irving Trust Company in New York where it remained until November 1954.

[Alleged Fraud]

The alleged fraud consists of the substituting of these papers and the failure to comply with the agreement to supply A pictures without bidding and, indeed, having had no intention of complying with these promises at the time they were made.

[Evidence]

The only evidence adduced on the first point was Campopiano's testimony and some self-serving documents prepared by him. In view of the fact that the general release which Campopiano admittedly executed, would bar a subsequent action in any event and since his statements at the trial were markedly different from his statements on depositions in a number of very crucial respects, I cannot and do not give this evidence very much weight.

On the second allegation of fraud the evidence indicates that the promise made was a promise to permit the plaintiff to compete on an equal basis with other exhibitors in Lawrence. Plaintiff's exhibit 11, a letter from Columbia's counsel to all defendants reads in part:

> "You are reminded of the oral assurances given Mr. Campopiano by representatives of each of the defendant distributors that the Capitol Theatre in Lawrence, Mass., will be afforded an equal opportunity to license pictures for first run exhibition."

Mr. Campopiano himself never interpreted the promise to be anything other than an assurance of equal opportunities to compete, as he indicated by his letter to R K O Radio Pictures Corporation (hereinafter referred to as R K O) dated June 14, 1952, defendants' exhibit T:

> "At a conference we held on June 4th at your office in New York you requested I write you a written request for the opportunity of bidding on your pictures for first run in the city of Lawrence, Mass. I hereby now make this request in writing with this letter. . . ."

Campopiano wrote similar letters to Columbia, defendants' exhibit C, and the two Warner Brothers corporations, defendants' exhibit U, requesting "the opportunity of bidding for pictures." The plaintiff has presented no evidence to show that he was not given the opportunity of competing as promised.

[Burden of Proof]

The burden of proof is on the plaintiff to show by clear and convincing evidence that the alleged promises were made with the present intention of not keeping them and that they were not kept. Woods v. Barnes et al., 84 F. Supp. 155, 158. This burden the plaintiff has not sustained. The plaintiff has also failed to meet his burden of proof on the issue of the switching of the settlement papers.

[No Evidence of Duress]

The plaintiff introduced no evidence to support the allegations of count 7, that it or its agents were subjected to duress during the settlement negotiations.

[Claims Barred]

Accordingly and pursuant to Rule 41(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure counts 6 and 7 of the amended complaint are dismissed with prejudice. Since the plaintiff has not established its right to cancel the release, that instrument is valid and constitutes a bar to all claims prior to the date thereof, June 5, 1952 in favor of the parties named therein. Counts 1 through 5 are therefor dismissed with respect to all claims which accrued prior to June 5, 1952 against all defendants except T. C. F. Film Corporation, Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and Republic Pictures Corporation. The remainder of the complaint shall stand.

[¶ 68,843] Independent Productions Corporation and IPC Distributors, Inc. v. Loew's Incorporated, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil 110-304. Filed October 18, 1957.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages and Injunctive Relief—Pretrial Procedures—Motion for More Definite Statement.—A more definite statement filed by plaintiffs was held inadequate because it failed to specify the nature of the interstate commerce in which two individual defendants were engaged, either individually or in connection with their union positions; failed to define the relationship of the individual defendants with the motion picture industry, either personally or in connection with their union positions; and, as to both the individual and one of the corporate defendants, failed to specify in which of the alleged conspiracies referred to in the amended complaint the defendants participated, or the time during which each defendant participated in the alleged conspiracies. Also, the statement that the corporate defendant participated in a conspiracy with some or all of the defendants and co-conspirators named in the complaint was held indefinite.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9013.170.

For the plaintiffs: Rosston, Hort & Brussel, New York, N. Y., for Independent Productions Corp.; and George Brussel, Jr. (George Brussel, Jr., and Eugene G. King, of counsel), New York, N. Y., for IPC Distributors, Inc.

For the defendants: Cahill, Gordon, Reindel & Ohl (Oleg Peter Petroff, of counsel), New York, N. Y., for Radio Corp. of America; and Spivak & Kantor (Louis Kantor, of counsel), New York, N. Y., for Richard F. Walsh and John J. Francavilla.

For a prior opinion of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, see 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,615.

Opinion

RICHARD H. LEVET, District Judge [In full text]: Defendant Radio Corporation of America and defendants Walsh and Francavilla move for reargument of motions of said respective defendants, decided by memorandum of the undersigned dated July 28, 1957.

[Procedural Background]

The procedural background herein is as follows:

1. On or about September 20, 1956, the plaintiffs instituted this action for treble damages under the anti-trust laws of the United States and for injunctive relief. Subsequently, an amended complaint was filed.

2. By Notice of motion dated October 24, 1956, the defendants Walsh and Francavilla moved this court for an order under Rule 12(e) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure directing the plaintiffs to file a more definite statement of the following matters:

(a) The nature of the interstate commerce in which the defendants Richard F. Walsh and John J. Francavilla engaged.

(b) The relationship of said defendants to the motion picture industry.

(c) In which of the alleged conspiracies referred to in the amended complaint did these defendants participate.

(d) The time when or during which said defendants allegedly participated in the alleged conspiracy or conspiracies.

(e) The respects in which said defendants participated in the alleged conspiracies and with whom.

The defendant Radio Corporation of America made a motion for similar relief and the motions were jointly argued.

3. By an order filed February 11, 1957, Judge Palmieri granted the motions of said defendants and directed the plaintiffs to serve upon the attorneys for the defendant Radio Corporation of America and upon the attorneys for the defendants Richard F. Walsh and John J. Francavilla an amendment to the amended complaint, a more definite statement of the items referred to above as to each defendant.

4. On or about May 6, 1957, plaintiffs served upon said defendants an allegedly more definite statement.

5. By notice of motion dated May 13, 1957, defendants Walsh and Francavilla moved under Rule 12(e) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure to dismiss and strike the amended complaint as against them upon the grounds that the plaintiffs had failed and refused to serve a more definite statement in accordance with the said order of Judge Palmieri filed February 11, 1957. Radio Corporation of America made a similar motion. Both motions were denied by me on June 28, 1957 by memorandum decisions. The plaintiffs contended that the statement served by them on or about May 6, 1957 was sufficient since the defendants could answer the pleading as thus augmented.

[Reargument Granted]

The motion for reargument is granted. Upon such reargument, the motions are determined as hereinafter set forth.

I will first consider the motion of the defendants Richard F. Walsh and John J. Francavilla.

[Interstate Commerce]

The order of February 11, 1957, subdivision (a), required a more definite statement as to "The nature of the interstate commerce in which the defendants Richard F. Walsh, John J. Francavilla and Radio Corporation of America engaged." The more definite statement of May 6, 1957 as to defendants Walsh and Francavilla is as follows:

"(a) 1. The nature of the interstate commerce engaged in by defendant Richard F. Walsh is as follows: said defendant is acting as the chief executive officer of International Alliance of Theatrical State Employees and Moving Picture Machine Operators of the United States and Canada, a labor union representing almost all persons employed by producers and exhibitors of motion pictures throughout the United States and Canada in connection with the conditions of their employment; the amount of wages they receive, and the making of contracts with such producers and exhibitors throughout the United States concerning their working conditions, hours and salaries.

"2. Defendant John J. Francavilla is engaging in interstate commerce by virtue of the duties he performs as business agent of one of the locals of said Union."

This statement is inadequate as it fails to specify the nature of the interstate commerce in which the individual defendants themselves are engaged either individually or in connection with their union positions.

[Relationship to Industry]

Item (b) of the order requires a more definite statement as to "The relationship of each of said defendants to the motion picture industry."

Item (b) of the statement as to defendants Walsh and Francavilla is:

"(b) The relation of defendants Richard F. Walsh, John J. Francavilla and Radio Corporation of America to the motion picture industry is as set forth in paragraph (a) above."

This statement read in conjunction with item (a) of plaintiffs' statement is inadequate since it fails to define the relationship of defendants Walsh and Francavilla with the motion picture industry, either personally or in connection with their labor union positions.

[Conspiracy]

Item (c) of the order reads:

"(c) In which of the alleged conspiracies referred to in the amended complaint did each of these defendants participate."

Plaintiffs' statement is:

"(c) Defendants Richard F. Walsh, John J. Francavilla and Radio Corporation of America joined in the conspiracy described in paragraph 16 of the amended complaint in 1952 and became participants therein as alleged in paragraphs 19 through 22 of the amended complaint."

This statement multiplies rather than diminishes ambiguity. Paragraph 16 of the amended complaint may be termed the "blacklisting conspiracy." However, by the terms of the amended complaint, paragraph 16 appears to exclude these individual defendants. Do plaintiffs now intend to include such defendants? Moreover, the reference to allegations in paragraphs 19 through 22 generally does not suffice. If plaintiffs intend to allege only one conspiracy rather than two, they should so state. Item (c) does not at present in fact comply with the order.

[Time of Participation]

Item (d) of the order requires a more definite statement as to "The time when or during which each of said defendants allegedly participated in the alleged conspiracy or conspiracies." Item (d) of the statement is:

> "1. Defendants Richard F. Walsh and John J. Francavilla participated in the alleged conspiracy beginning in 1952 down to the present time."

Which "conspiracy" is not stated. The time should be fixed for each conspiracy in which these defendants are alleged to be connected. Hence, this is insufficient compliance unless plaintiffs intend to charge only one conspiracy. If so, plaintiffs should so state.

Item (e) of the order deals with "The respects in which each of said defendants participated in the alleged conspiracies and with whom." Item (e)1. of the statement is:

> "(e)1. Defendant Richard F. Walsh and John J. Francavilla participated in the alleged conspiracy by preventing plaintiffs and each of them from producing, distributing and exhibiting Salt of the Earth and by making the production, distribution and exhibition thereof difficult and unremunerative in that they committed the overt acts described in paragraph 21 of the amended complaint together with some or all of the defendants and co-conspirators named in the amended complaint."

The statement is no more definite than the pleading.

[Other Rulings]

As to the defendant Radio Corporation of America, without repeating the items of the order, the statements as to this defendant are as follows:

> "(a)3. Defendant Radio Corporation of America is engaged in interstate commerce by receiving across state lines motion picture film negatives, processing the same for sound in various parts of the United States, shipping such processed film throughout the United States and manufacturing and selling and/or leasing motion picture film sound processing equipment throughout the United States."
>
> "(b) The relation of * * * Radio Corporation of America to the motion picture industry is as set forth in paragraph (2) above."
>
> "(c) * * * Radio Corporation of America joined in the conspiracy described in paragraph 16 of the amended complaint in 1952 and became [a] participant(s) therein as alleged in paragraphs 19 through 22 of the amended complaint."
>
> "(d)2. Defendant Radio Corporation of America participated in the alleged conspiracy during 1953.
>
> "(e)2. Defendant Radio Corporation of America participated in the alleged conspiracy by interfering with and preventing plaintiffs from processing 'Salt of the Earth' for sound and by refusing to process said film for sound without valid reason or justification other than the desire to prevent said film from being produced, distributed and exhibited, and to restrain plaintiffs from carrying on their business of producing, distributing and exhibiting motion pictures. Defendant Radio Corporation of America participated in the conspiracy with some or all of the defendants and co-conspirators named in the complaint."

In my opinion, the statements to Radio Corporation of America as to items (a) and (b) are adequate; (c) is little, if any, more enlightening to defendant Radio Corporation of America than the other defendants here concerned; (d) is equally lacking unless plaintiffs intend to allege only one conspiracy. If so, they should so state. The statement in (e) that this defendant "participated in the conspiracy with some or all of the defendants and co-conspirators named in the complaint" is woefully indefinite.

[Issue]

It might be well to observe at this point that this is not a motion to dismiss a complaint on the ground that it fails to state a claim. Therefore, the cases cited by counsel with respect to the adequacy of pleadings have no direct bearing here. The sole question, as I now see it, is whether the statement is in accordance with the order of February 11, 1957. The last sentence of Rule 12(e) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides that the court, when the order is not obeyed, may strike the pleading to which the motion is directed or make such other order as it deems just.

Dismissal is rarely justifiable unless the parties have been given another opportunity to serve a proper pleading. 2 Moore's Federal Practice, Vol. 2, p. 2310; see Seaboard Midland Petroleum Corp. v. Socony Vacuum Oil Co. (S. D. N. Y. 1941) 5 FR Serv. 12e.54, Case 1.

[More Definite Statement]

Each motion is therefore granted to the extent that the plaintiffs are directed to serve upon the defendants Richard F. Walsh and John J. Francavilla and upon the defendant Radio Corporation of America a more definite statement as above specified and in accordance with the February 11, 1957 order of Judge Palmieri. Such statement shall be served within ten days after entry and service of copies of respective orders herein and without prejudice to motions by said defendants to dismiss the complaint herein as to said defendants in the event of plaintiffs' failure to serve such statement.

Settle orders on notice.

[¶ 68,844] A. B. C. Distributing Company v. Distillers Distributing Corporation, et al.

In the California District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division Two. Civ. No. 22084. Dated October 4, 1957.

Appeal from a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County. ARTHUR CRUM, Judge. Affirmed.

California Cartwright Act

Combinations and Conspiracies Under State Laws—Practices—Refusal To Deal—Refusal To Renew Distributorship—Legality.—A distiller of alcoholic beverages did not violate the California Cartwright Act when it refused to renew a distributorship contract with a wholesaler because the wholesaler intended to distribute the products of one of the principal competitors of the distiller. Unless the distiller had agreed with another party not to deal with the wholesaler, there was no restraint of trade. The fact that the wholesaler had contracted with one of the distiller's competitors to distribute the competitor's products also was not sufficient to render the refusal to proceed with the wholesaler a monopoly. From the mere fact of the distiller's refusal to sell to the wholesaler, no inference of unlawful agreement can arise for the reason that a producer may lawfully select his own customers. Statistics that the distiller distributed not in excess of seven per cent of the nation's consumed distilled spirits and not over three per cent of those consumed in California disproved that the distiller was a monopoly. Also, an importer had the right to refuse to distribute its products through the wholesaler, and there was no evidence of a conspiracy between the distiller and the importer to restrain trade. The wholesaler had no perennial right to deal with the customers to whom it had sold the distiller's products.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2337.

Combinations and Conspiracies Under State Laws—Practices—Exclusive Dealing—Legality.—In a wholesaler's action charging that a distiller of alcoholic beverages unlawfully refused to renew its distributorship contract, the question whether the provisions of the contract illegally prevented the wholesaler from purchasing and selling products of competitors of the distiller was held to be immaterial. The wholesaler approved the questioned provisions of the contract when it signed the contract and subsequently when it demanded a renewal of the contract. There was no showing that the wholesaler suffered injury by reason of the questioned provisions of the contract.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2323.

Combinations and Conspiracies Under State Laws—Procedure—Right to Sue—Right to Damages for Antitrust Violations.—The Cartwright Act authorizes a person injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden by the Act to recover twofold the damages sustained, but the right to double damages is not exclusive. The Act merely articulates in greater detail a public policy against restraint of trade that has long been recognized at common law. Therefore, under the common law of California, combinations entered into for the purpose of restraining competition and fixing prices are unlawful, and one whose business has been injured by the activities of a combination in restraint of trade is entitled to damages, not only under the Cartwright Act, but also under the common law. Also, in the absence of injury, a violation of the Act is not actionable by a private party. In the instant case, the plaintiff failed to prove that it was injured by the non-renewal of its distributorship contract or by certain provisions of such contract.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2403.

Fair Trade—Alcoholic Beverage Industry—Legality of Resale Price Fixing.—A distiller of alcoholic beverages did not violate the Federal or California fair trade act when it fixed no prices upon its products except the prices at which it sold to a wholesaler and the prices at which the wholesaler sold to retailers. The distiller had specified that the retail prices to be charged by the wholesaler to retailers should be in accordance with the Fair Trade Act of California. Such control by the distiller over resale prices was in accordance with the California Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, which prevails in the event it should conflict with other statutes.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3480.05.

For the appellant: J. Albert Hutchinson.

For the respondents: Lawler, Felix & Hall and John M. Hall.

Action for an accounting, damages and injunctive relief. Judgment of dismissal affirmed.

MOORE, Presiding Justice [In full text except for omissions indicated by asterisks]: Appeal from a judgment or order of dismissal entered after motion for nonsuit had been granted and from the judgment for costs.

[Plaintiff]

Plaintiff is a licensed importer. It purchases from manufacturers and other distributors alcoholic beverages for resale to retail dealers.

[Defendants]

Defendant Distillers Distributing Corporation, herein referred to as "Distillers," is, by virtue of successive mergers, successor to Calvert Distillers Corporation. Both are herein referred to as "Calvert." Defendant Chivas Brothers Import Corporation is referred to as "Chivas."

[Causes of Action]

There are five causes of action which compositely seek an accounting, damages and injunctive relief by reason of alleged unfair competition and, also, damages for alleged breach of contract. Count 1 charges an unlawful restraint of trade and unfair competition on the part of both defendants; counts 2 and 4 seek declarations of plaintiff's rights as to each of the defendants but both counts were on motion of plaintiff dismissed.[1] Count 3 alleges damages caused by Calvert by reason of its repudiation of its written contract; count 5 alleges damages caused by Chivas for breach of its oral agreement. The gravamen of the several counts "is the appropriation of plaintiff's business by defendants and certain of their favored customers, pursuant to a pre-existing and continuing combination and conspiracy to restrain trade in, and to monopolize the distribution of, alcoholic beverages—in general and in plaintiff's area of operation

[1] Plaintiff urges that the dismissal was forced by the court's stated intention to try the declaratory relief issues first and in the absence of the jury. Plaintiff urges error in the ruling of the court in view of the decision of the Supreme Court in State Farm etc. Ins. Co. v. Superior Court, 47 Cal. 2d 428, 431 [304 P. 2d 13], filed after the trial in the instant action. But it is not necessary to pass upon that question in view of our conclusion. Even if the declaratory relief issues had been presented to the jury and they had returned a verdict declaring that plaintiff had an option to renew the contract, such verdict would have been patently erroneous. Therefore, even if the court's ruling was erroneous, plaintiff suffered no prejudice thereby.

—and the deprivation of profits and good will by means of wrongful refusal to deliver supplies for resale in accordance with contracts between the immediate parties."

COUNT 1

[Activities of Parties]

Count 1 alleges the corporate existence of Distillers and its authority to do business in California; its successorship to Calvert by way of merger and declares that the transactions alleged were had with Calvert and Chivas; that plaintiff is the holder of all licenses necessary to permit it "to engage in the wholesale distributing of alcoholic beverages within the State of California"; and is so engaged in such business principally within the county of Los Angeles; that defendants are licensed to be and "are engaged in the manufacture, importation, exportation and sale of alcoholic beverages in foreign and interstate commerce within the United States" and to the extent licensed have so engaged in such lines in the State of California; that defendants do not manufacture distilled spirits within California; that defendants are not authorized to conduct or participate in transactions respecting alcoholic beverages "with persons licensed to sell alcoholic beverages at retail to unlicensed persons."

That defendants import and manufacture a large number of "distilled spirits products" of the varieties customarily purchased by the consuming public and competitive with defendants' principal competitors as to variety, quality and price range; that such products are sold in containers bearing labels and trade-marks owned and controlled by defendants and unavailable from any other source; that defendants distribute and sell a substantial proportion of all the potable distilled spirits sold and consumed in the United States; that certain of said products have been advertised and have customer acceptance whereas others have not been so advertised; that there is a tendency of the purchasing public to continue the use of products known to it and a reluctance to accept new products of the same general kind as a substitute therefor; that from time to time certain of defendants' products have been in short supply and have been allocated to their wholesale customers by some means unknown to plaintiff; that defendants have adopted the policy of distributing their products "as a group sometimes known as each respective defendant's 'line,' indifferently to the demand, customer acceptance, quality, price and competitive advantage or particular products" and have attempted to require the purchase of unpopular products as a condition to the purchase or allocation of acceptable products and have required their distributors to maintain in advance large stocks; "that at all times defendants have determined, declared and controlled the prices from time to time to be charged by them of their immediate purchasers and by their purchasers upon resale thereby by means of contract provisions, implied agreements, arrangements, recording, and causing the recording thereof, and by other means."

That at all times defendants distributed their products through licensed wholesale distributors; that defendants employed salesmen known as "specialty" men who visited customers of the distributors, solicited orders and submitted the same to the distributors for delivery; that for this purpose defendants sought to discover the identity of the customers of such distributors.

[Distributorship]

That prior to 1945, one Moyer was doing business as A. B. C. Distributing Company and was the distributor for Calvert; that during 1945 plaintiff entered into negotiations with Moyer "for the purchase of the business, stocks, good will, accounts, customer lists and physical properties and distributorships of Moyer"; that during such negotiations, in response to plaintiff's inquiry, "defendants expressly and affirmatively assured and represented to plaintiff that, in the event of the purchase of said business of Moyer by plaintiff, said defendants would appoint plaintiff their distributor in place and instead of Moyer and would continue the distribution of their said products by and through plaintiff as such distributor"; that on July 2, 1945, plaintiff purchased the business of Moyer and on the same day entered into an oral contract of distributorship with "said defendants"; that thereafter the contract was renewed from time to time to and including January 21, 1952; that on January 1, 1951, plaintiff entered into a similar oral distribution agreement with defendant Chivas for the distribution of Chivas products; that the Chivas contract was renewed, from time to time, to and including February 5, 1954; that both contracts have been duly performed by plaintiff.

That plaintiff, at its own expense, used its best efforts to increase the volume of sales of defendants' products and "to this end . . . expanded its facilities, increased and numbers of its employees and established additional suitable facilities"; that the purchase of defendants' products by plaintiff's customers progressively increased in volume and amount, "exceeding on the 1st day of January, 1952, annual purchases from plaintiff of defendants' products in excess of fifteen thousand five hundred (15,500) cases at sales prices in excess of plaintiff's cost of acquisition of One Hundred Thousand Dollars ($100,000) per year; and would have continued to so progressively increase in volume and amount in the absence of defendants' wrongful conduct, as hereinafter set forth."

[Alleged Combination]

That defendants are, and each of them, is "an affiliate and member of a combination of in excess of twenty corporations . . . engaged in the importation, manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages in foreign and interstate commerce in the United States and in trade and commerce within the State of California"; that such combination "imports, manufactures and sells . . . in excess of twenty-five per cent (25%) of all alcoholic beverages" and that the aggregate gross sales of the alleged combination are in excess of $700,000,000 per year; that each member of the combination is in competition with other persons and in "pretended competition" with each of the other members of the combination; that the combination "is organized, carried out and managed by stock ownership, common directors and officers, planned common courses of action, conferences, committees, correspondence and exchange of information"; that each member of the combination was "created and acquired by Distillers Corporation-Seagrams, Ltd. . . . and is owned by Distillers Corporation-Seagrams, Ltd. directly and through subsidiary corporations of said combination."

That the members of the combination, including the defendants, "have combined, agreed, conspired and acted together as a combination of capital, skill and acts for the purpose . . . and effect of unfairly competing with other persons engaged" in the same business, and of "restraining, restricting and hindering competition, trade and commerce therein by means of said combination"; that this has been accomplished by placing the following conditions upon the sale to, and resale by, distributors such as plaintiff: (1) allocation of customers; (2) allocation of territories; (3) requirements for minimum purchases and stated percentages of the distributor's aggregate business in the products of members of the combination, and (4) the enforcement of agreements, expressed and implied, "requiring distributors and other purchasers to give notice to members of said combination in advance of dealing in any alcoholic beverage product produced or sold by any person other than a member of said combination."

[Termination of Distributorship]

That on July 1, 1951, "defendants wrongfully demanded that plaintiff surrender its said distributorship with respect to substantial areas of said county in which plaintiff was then defendants' said distributor . . . and permit competitors of plaintiff in said areas to appropriate plaintiff's customers . . . as a condition to the continuation of said distributorship in other areas of said county"; that they demanded that unless plaintiff acceded to their proposal, defendants would repudiate the contract. That thereupon plaintiff did accede to such demand and on January 21, 1952, Calvert required the execution of an instrument in writing designating the areas in which plaintiff would continue as distributor and providing that plaintiff would be sole distributor in those areas for a "period of one year from and after the 1st day of March, 1952, and subject to renewal from year to year, for like periods, at the option of plaintiff." That plaintiff complied with the demand and executed such instrument.

That prior to March 1, 1953, "plaintiff duly exercised its said option to renew said distributorship" whereupon Calvert presented to plaintiff for execution a distributorship agreement dated February 5, 1953, which will hereinafter be designated as the 1953 contract; that about June 1, 1953, Calvert allowed others of its distributors to operate in the territory assigned to plaintiff; that the contract contained a provision requiring plaintiff to "spend no less than 22.1 per cent of its time and effort" and "of the money spent by it on advertising and sales promotion" in the sale and promotion of Calvert products; that this provision was intended by Calvert to prevent plaintiff from distributing the products of other manufacturers and as a means of requiring minimum purchases of Calvert's products; that the contract provided also that plaintiff "will not undertake the distribution of any additional brands of alcoholic beverages without giving Calvert 90 days' written notice of its intention so to do" and that "in the event this contract is not renewed" plaintiff "agrees that within 30 days after March 1, 1954, it will return to Calvert at its invoice price all of the Calvert merchandise remaining in its inventory"; that the foregoing provisions were intended to prevent plaintiff from dealing in the products of persons other than members of the alleged combination.

[FTC Proceeding]

That on November 19, 1953, defendants stipulated with the United States Federal Trade Commission in a proceeding pending before that agency entitled "In the Matter of Distillers Corporation-Seagrams, Ltd. and its subsidiaries" (1) that defendants (respondents in that proceeding) had required its distributors to give notice in advance of an intention to deal in products of defendants' competitors and (2) that the Commission might make its order declaring such to be "unfair methods of competition" and that defendants "cease and desist" from such practices; that the order pursuant to the stipulation was entered March 2, 1954.[2]

[Refusal To Sell]

That on January 28, 1954, plaintiff advised Calvert that it had entered into negotiations with a competitor of Calvert looking toward the distribution of the products of such competitor in addition to those of Calvert; that thereupon Calvert notified plaintiff that it repudiated its 1953 contract and the alleged option to renew it after March 1, 1954; that Calvert gave as its reason for such repudiation plaintiff's intention to distribute the products of a competitor; that thereafter Calvert refused to fill orders placed with it by plaintiff after March 1, 1954; that this repudiation had the effect of restraining competition in alcoholic beverages in violation of state and federal laws; that thereafter "defendants commenced a systematic course of solicitation of orders for alcoholic beverages of plaintiff's customers"; that in such solicitation defendants used confidential information previously obtained from plaintiff; that plaintiff has been damaged by this course of conduct.

* * *

Was Refusal to Deal With Plaintiff Lawful?

[State Antitrust Law]

The Cartwright Anti-Trust Law, Statutes of 1907, chapter 530, was incorporated into the Business and Professions Code, sections 16700 through 16758, in 1941. Section 4[3] of the federal Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. A. § 15) is substantially like section 16750,[4] Business and Professions Code, which authorizes a person injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden to recover twofold the damages sustained. But the right to double damages is not exclusive. The local statute "merely articulates in greater detail a public policy against restraint of trade that has long been recognized at common law. Thus, under the common law of this state combinations entered into for the purpose of restraining competition and fixing prices are unlawful . . . One whose business has been injured by the activities of a combination in restraint of trade is entitled to damages, not only under the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16750), but also under the common law. (Civ. Code, § 3281, see cases cited in 36 Am. Jur. 660, n. 9.)" (Speegle v. Board of Fire Underwriters [1946-1947 Trade Cases ¶ 57,493], 29 Cal. 2d 34 at 44 and 46 [172 P. 2d 867].) We must therefore inquire whether the proof presents substantial evi-

[2] This order, herein referred to as the "consent decree," was refused admission into evidence at the trial. Plaintiff's claim of error in this respect is considered below.

[3] Clayton Act, section 4, 15 U. S. C. A. § 15.

"Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee."

[4] Business and Professions Code, section 16750.

"Any person who is injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden or declared unlawful by this chapter, may sue therefor in any court having jurisdiction in the county where the defendant resides or is found, or any agent resides or is found, or where services may be obtained, without respect to the amount in controversy, and to recover twofold the damages sustained by him, and the costs of suit."

dence of an unreasonable restraint of trade on the part of defendants.

[Non-Renewal of Contract]

Calvert's alleged reason for not renewing its contract because plaintiff was taking on the line of Schenley, one of Calvert's principal competitors, is not sufficient to make it guilty of antitrust law violation. Where a defendant had refused to renew a contract with the plaintiff, the plaintiff charged a violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act and section 3 of the Clayton Act. It contended that the defendant had declined to renew their contract because plaintiff had refused to give up the handling of a competing product. A judgment for plaintiff was reversed, because "plaintiff had no tenure, no right to renewal of his contract as master dealer. Defendant on the other hand had an absolute right either to renew or not to renew it, and the exercise by it of that right did not, it could not form the basis of a suit under section 15." (Hudson Sales Corp. v. Waldrip [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,694], 211 F. 2d 268. See Nelson Radio & Supply Co. v. Motorola [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,386], 200 F. 2d 911.)

Plaintiff's position is not unlike that of one Brosious who sued Pepsi-Cola Company and its distributor for treble damages under the antitrust act after he had purchased such product from Cloverdale for six years. When Cloverdale conditioned its sale of Pepsi-Cola to Brosious upon the latter's agreement to sell only Pepsi-Cola, and after the Pepsi-Cola Company refused to approve Cloverdale's conduct, Brosious charged a conspiracy between the producer and its distributor. But the court found no evidence that would support the finding of a conspiracy to violate the antitrust laws. "It is the right, long recognized of a trader engaged in a strictly private business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to the parties with whom he will deal." (Brosious v. Pepsi-Cola Co. [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,459], 155 F. 2d 99, 102.)

Other federal courts have announced the same doctrine with clarity and finality.

"In general, it seems a necessary part of our business mores for a manufacturer to have free selection in dealing with its distributors. Upon the recognition of this fact, why may he not refuse to do business with one who deals in a closely competitive product?" (Camfield Mfg. Co. v. McGraw Electric Co. (Del., 1947) [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,570], 70 F. Supp. 477.)

"Every manufacturer has a natural and complete monopoly of his particular product, especially when sold under his own private brand or trade name." (Schwing Motor Co. v. Hudson Sales Corp. (Md., 1956) [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,292], 138 F. Supp. 899, 902.)

"We have not yet reached the stage where the selection of a trader's customers is made for him by the government." (Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. v. Cream of Wheat Co. (C. C. A. 2, 1915), 227 F. 46, 49.)

"Likewise a wholesale dealer has the right to stop dealing with a manufacturer 'for the reasons sufficient to himself.'" (Federal Trade Com. v. Raymond Bros.-Clark Co. (1924), 263 U. S. 565 [44 S. Ct. 162, 68 L. Ed. 448, 30 A. L. R. 1114].)

"It requires no argument to demonstrate that appellant [plaintiff] had the right to decline to sell any but its own product upon the leased property." (Associated Oil Co. v. Myers (1933), 217 Cal. 297, 306 [18 P. 2d 668].)

[No Agreement]

From the foregoing authorities and the pronouncements of the several courts, it is clear that unless Calvert had agreed with another party not to deal with plaintiff there was no restraint of trade in Calvert's refusing to use plaintiff as its distributor. The fact that plaintiff had contracted with one of Calvert's competitors to distribute the latter's products also, was not sufficient to render the refusal to proceed with plaintiff a monopoly. (Rolley, Inc. v. Merle Norman Cosmetics [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,937], 129 Cal. App. 2d 844, 851 [278 P. 2d 63, 282 P. 2d 991].) From the mere fact of Calvert's refusal to sell plaintiffs, no inference of unlawful agreement can arise for the reason that a producer "may lawfully select his own customers." (Johnson v. J. H. Yost Lbr. Co. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,088], 117 F. 2d 53, 61; Theatre Enterprises v. Paramount Distrib. Corp. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,640], 346 U. S. 537, 541 [74 S. Ct. 257, 98 L. Ed. 273]; Speegle v. Board of Fire Underwriters, supra, 29 Cal. 2d 34, 38. See Webster Motor Car Co. v. Packard Motor Car Co. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,171], 135 F. Supp. 4, 8; Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,737], 340 U. S. 211, 213 [71 S. Ct. 259, 95 L. Ed. 219].) Conspiracy was proved in the Kiefer-Stewart case by showing the conferences between the officials of Seagram and Calvert, "concerning sales of liquor to" Kiefer-Stewart and sales were made to other wholesalers who abided by the conditions but no shipments were made to Kiefer-Stewart. It was proved that the agreement worked an injury to the public.

[Lack of Monopoly]

The statistics that from 1951 to 1954, inclusive, Calvert distributed not to exceed 7 per cent of the nation's consumed distilled spirits and not over 3 per cent of those consumed in California disprove that it was a monopoly. Judge Hand held that "it is doubtful whether sixty or sixty-four per cent would be enough and certainly thirty three per cent is not." (United States v. Aluminum Co. of America [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,342], 148 F. 2d 416, 424.)

[Fair Trade Pricing]

Further to show that Calvert did not act violative of either the federal or state fair trade act, it fixed no prices upon its product except those which it sold to plaintiff and the prices at which the latter sold to retailers. In its 1953 contract with plaintiff, it specified the retail prices to be charged by plaintiff to retailers should be in accordance with the Fair Trade Act of California. Such control by Calvert over resale prices to be charged by plaintiff is in accordance with the law. (Cal. Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 24750, 24756.) The cited act prevails in the event it should conflict with other statutes. (Nelson v. Reilly [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,326], 88 Cal. App. 2d 303, 306 [198 P. 2d 694].)

[Legality of Contract]

With meticulous severity plaintiff arrays three paragraphs (2, 9 and 12)[5] of the 1953 contract and seeks to have them declared illegal. The purpose of this action is to determine whether plaintiff by defendants' refusal to extend the term of the 1953 contract suffered detriment and whether the refusal to renew the contract caused damage to the plaintiff. Plaintiff has striven valiantly to establish the affirmative of both questions. Now, whether paragraph 2 was designed to prevent plaintiff from purchasing and selling the products of other manufacturers, competitors of Calvert, or whether paragraph 9 was used to prevent plaintiff from purchasing and selling the products of other manufacturers in competition with Calvert, or whether paragraph 12 was a punitive and unlawful covenant running with the goods is immaterial. Plaintiff approved those paragraphs along with the others when it signed the contract in 1953 and subsequently when it demanded a renewal of such contract. There is no showing that plaintiff suffered injury by reason of such paragraphs from March 1952 to March 1954.

[Damage]

Moreover, the law is against plaintiff's contention. In the absence of injury to the plaintiff, a violation of the anti-trust statute is not actionable by a private party. (Wolfe v. National Lead Co. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,094], 225 F. 2d 427, 432; Karseal Corp. v. Richfield Oil Corp. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,020], 221 F. 2d 358, 362; Sargent v. National Broadcasting Co., 136 F. Supp. 560, 566.)

Plaintiff contends that Calvert misused information it gained from plaintiff during the tenure of their contract. The record discloses no instance in which Calvert used any information gained from plaintiff except when it used information relative to its own business and the information was used with plaintiff's consent. (See Alex Foods, Inc. v. Metcalfe, 137 Cal. App. 2d 415, 427 [290 P.

[5] "2. Distributor hereby accepts the appointment as such distributor and agrees to sell and distribute to retail licensees such alcoholic beverages within the designated territory. Distributor warrants that during the year ending December 31st, 1952, the proportion of its total sales of alcoholic beverages represented by Calvert products was 22.1 per cent. Distributor agrees that during the term of this contract, it will spend no less than 22.1 per cent of its time and effort on the sale of Calvert products and not less than 22.1 per cent of the money spent by it on advertising and sales promotion shall be expended on Calvert products."

"9. Distributor represents that at the time of the execution of this agreement, it is acting as a distributor of the brands of alcoholic beverages listed on Exhibit B attached hereto.

"Distributor agrees that it will not undertake the distribution of any additional brands of alcoholic beverages without giving Calvert 90 days' written notice of its intention so to do."

"12. In the event this contract is not renewed, Distributor agrees that within 30 days after March 1, 1954, it will return to Calvert at its invoice price all of the Calvert merchandise remaining in its inventory."

2d 646].) The solicitation of business from those concerns made known to Calvert through information furnished by plaintiff after the distributorship had been terminated "is not unlawful and does not constitute . . . trade secrets." (J. C. Millett Co. v. Park Tilford Distillers Corp., 123 F. Supp. 484, 496.)

Plaintiff was not injured in any way by Calvert's use of information gained from plaintiff.

[Right to Customers]

Plaintiff asserts an exclusive perennial right to deal with customers to whom it had sold Calvert's products during the period of the contract. No such right is upheld by law. When plaintiff's 1953 contract terminated, Calvert was at liberty to advise any other distributor with reference to retailers within his area. There is "no vested and indefeasible right to monopolize customers." (Corica v. Ragen, 140 F. 2d 496, 498.) Customers are not things to be owned by anyone. They are the life-stream of trade and commerce; are free to choose for themselves and to be chosen by those whose only motive is to advance their own welfare and to do no harm to others. So long as his competition is fairly and legally conducted and he is not restrained by negative covenants, a former employee is free to solicit business from his former employer's customers. (Aetna Building Maintenance Co. v. West, 39 Cal. 2d 198, 203 [246 P. 2d 11]; Avocado Sales Co. v. Wyse, 122 Cal. 627, 634 [10 P. 2d 485].)

[Alcoholic Beverage Control Act]

Plaintiff contends that Calvert violated the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 23366) by selling its products directly to retailers. Not only is such claim negatived by the declarations of the complaint but there is no evidence that Calvert sold its products to retailers, and if Calvert's employees had made an illegal sale to a retailer, such illegality would not justify an action against Calvert unless it was the proximate cause of injury to plaintiff. It will be readily conceded that a sale by Calvert made after plaintiff's relations with Calvert had terminated could not have proximately caused injury to plaintiff.

[Conspiracy Not Shown]

Inasmuch as we have concluded that Calvert in refusing to sell to plaintiff had not acted in violation of any anti-trust statute, it follows that Chivas also had a right to refuse to distribute its products through plaintiff. There is no evidence of an unlawful conspiracy, as plaintiff contends, between Chivas and Calvert. Both corporations were justified in distributing their products through the same distributors. There is no evidence that they conspired unlawfully to restrain trade. There was no error in granting the nonsuit as to Chivas.

Judgment affirmed.

Fox, J., and ASHBURN, J., concurred.

[¶ 68,845] Socony Mobil Oil Company, Inc. v. Louis Tavares, Sr., d.b.a. Warren Filling Station.

In the Supreme Court of Rhode Island. Equity No. 2598. Dated October 23, 1957.

Rhode Island Fair Trade Act

Fair Trade—Fair Trade Enforcement Suits—Preliminary Injunction—Appeal—Suspension of Fair Trade Prices—Mootness.—On an appeal from a preliminary injunction enjoining a gasoline station from selling an oil company's gasoline below its fair trade prices, the Rhode Island Supreme Court refused to answer questions certified to it because the oil company's suspension of its fair trade prices for gasoline rendered the questions moot.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3350.

For the complainant: Francis I. McCanna; Tillinghast, Collins & Tanner; Harold E. Staples, and Edwin H. Hastings, all of Providence, R. I.; Herman J. Schmidt, John J. Scott, and H. Francis Shattuck, Jr., all of New York, N. Y.; H. G. Gilbert, Boston, Mass.

For the respondent: Leo Patrick McGowan and John P. Bourcier, Providence, R. I.

Opinion

[Mootness]

Per Curiam [In full text]: This is a bill in equity to enjoin the respondent from selling gasoline bearing the complainant's trade name below the prices fixed in a contract between the complainant and another dealer. The respondent has not signed a similar contract but he has knowledge of the prices fixed in the signed contract. After a hearing in the superior court a preliminary injunction was granted, and the parties then signed an agreed statement of facts and asked that court to certify to us three questions. Such request was granted.

Since the case was heard here, complainant has furnished us with a copy of a notice issued to all its gasoline dealers in this state that it has suspended its "fair trade" prices for gasoline in this state. In these circumstances we are of the opinion that between these parties the questions certified have become moot and, such being the case, we decline to answer them.

The papers in the case are ordered sent back to the superior court.

[¶ 68,846] Bowden Concrete Products, Inc., and J. E. Bowden v. Besser Company.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit. No. 13071. Decided and filed October 31, 1957.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Western District of Tennessee, Western Division. Boyd, District Judge.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Injunctive Decree—Effect of Decree on Machinery Lease.—A trial court, in entering a judgment against a lessee of concrete block-making machinery for rental payments owed to the lessor under their lease agreement, did not erroneously disregard the effect of a decree entered against the lessor in a Government antitrust action. The decree in the Government action had the effect of modifying the lease agreement by giving the lessee an option to cancel it within a specified period of time and a further option to purchase the leased machinery as mutually satisfactory to the parties. The lessee did not exercise the option to cancel the lease, and, although the lessee sought to purchase the leased machinery, no mutually satisfactory terms of purchase were agreed upon by the parties. Therefore, the rights of the parties were properly determined by the terms of the original lease agreement.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8233.275, 8233.800.

For the appellants: Argued by Caruthers Ewing, Memphis, Tenn., and Irving W. Coleman, Northampton, Pa. (Caruthers Ewing, Memphis, Tenn., and Irving W. Coleman, Northampton, Pa., on brief).

For the appellee: Argued by John M. Heiskell, Memphis, Tenn. (John M. Heiskell, Memphis, Tenn., and Carl R. Henry, Alpena, Mich., on brief).

Before Simons, Chief Judge, Martin and Stewart, Circuit Judges.

[Appealed Judgment]

Per Curiam [In full text]: This is an appeal from a judgment of the United States District Court for the Western District of Tennessee for rental payments which the court held were owed by the appellants to the appellee under a contract of lease.

[Lease]

The contract in question was executed by the parties in 1949. Under its provisions the appellee Besser Company leased to the appellants certain machinery for the manufacture of concrete blocks. The lease was for a five year term at a stipulated monthly rental computed on the basis of appellants' production.

[Government Antitrust Decree]

Shortly before the execution of this lease the United States had instituted proceedings against Besser and others in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan, charging a conspiracy to restrain and monopolize interstate commerce in concrete block making machinery in violation of the Sherman Act. These proceedings resulted in a judgment against Besser and others in 1951, holding that they had violated the antitrust laws [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,773], 96 F. Supp. 304. This judgment was affirmed by the United States Supreme Court in 1952. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,280] 343 U. S. 444. To effectuate its judgment, the district court in Michigan required Besser to notify each of its lessees that the lessee might, at its option, (1) terminate its lease agreement on or before a specified date, or (2) continue under the terms of the lease, or (3) enter into an agreement to purchase the leased machinery "as mutually satisfactory to the parties concerned."

In compliance with this decree Besser notified the appellants in writing of these options available to them. The appellants did not exercise their option to cancel the lease, but continued to make monthly payments under the lease agreement. They did, however, advise Besser that they wished to purchase the machinery. Negotiations looking towards the purchase of the machinery were carried on intermittently for a long period, but the parties did not agree upon mutually satisfactory terms of purchase.

[Expiration of Lease]

In the meantime the five-year term of the lease expired, and shortly thereafter the appellants wrote a letter to Besser stating,

> "At this time we would like to advise you that it is our desire to discontinue the lease, and ask that you give us instructions to return the equipment to your plant or some other designated point that you might make."

The machinery was not returned to Besser, however, but remained in the possession of the appellants, who continued to use it.

The lease agreement provided:

> "If this agreement expires and the Equipment is not returned by User or retaken by Besser then User shall continue to make regular monthly reports and payments as called for herein."

The appellants made no payments after the lease expired in 1954, and Besser, with the consent of the district court in Michigan, filed this action in the Tennessee district court asking judgment for unpaid rentals after 1954.

[Effect of Decree]

The appellants contend that in entering judgment against them in this case the district court erroneously disregarded the effect of the decree entered by the Michigan district court in the anti-trust proceedings brought by the United States. We do not agree. So far as these parties were concerned the effect of the anti-trust decree was to modify the lease agreement by giving the appellants an option to cancel it within a specified time and a further option to purchase the leased machinery "as mutually satisfactory to the parties concerned." Concededly the first option was not exercised. With respect to the second option, no mutually satisfactory terms of purchase were agreed upon by the parties.

The district court found upon substantial evidence that, "neither fraud nor bad faith on the part of the Besser Company in its negotiations to agree on mutually satisfactory price for the machinery herein, is shown by evidence which is clear, cogent, and convincing, or otherwise sufficient." In view of this finding the district court correctly held that the rights of the parties were to be determined by the terms of the original lease agreement.

The judgment is affirmed.

[¶ 68,847] Arrow Metal Products Corporation; Awnair Corporation of America; and Alex Levine, James V. Cosman, and William N. Gurtman, individually and as officers of each of said corporations v. Federal Trade Commission.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. No. 12,224. Argued October 25, 1957. Filed November 7, 1957.

Appeal from the Federal Trade Commission.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Unfair Practices—Use of Misleading Trade Name—Tendency To Deceive Public—Survey—Validity of Order Prohibiting Use of Term.—A Federal Trade Commission order prohibiting the use of the trade name "porcenamel" to describe awning products that are not finished with porcelain enamel was affirmed. There was sufficient evidence to support the finding that the use of the term "porcenamel" to describe awning products which were not coated with porcelain enamel, but with an organic plastic resin quite different from porcelain enamel, had a tendency to deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public. The Federal Trade Commission, in prohibiting the use of this term, made "an allowable judgment in its choice of the remedy". Also, the Commission did not err in receiving a report of a survey made to find out whether the use of the term was capable of and did deceive members of the public.

See Unfair Practices, Vol. 2, ¶ 5081, 5201.341, 5201.481, 5201.661; FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8611.55, 8611.71.

For the petitioners: Aaron Z. Schomer, Passaic, N. J.

For the respondent: E. K. Elkins, Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D. C.

Affirming a Federal Trade Commission cease and desist order in Dkt. 6471.

Before GOODRICH, KALODNER and STALEY, Circuit Judges.

Opinion of the Court

[FTC Order]

PER CURIAM [In full text]: The petitioners seek reversal of a cease and desist order issued against them by the Federal Trade Commission. The petitioners use the term "porcenamel" to describe their awning products. It is charged that the use of this term carries a representation that the awning products are coated with porcelain enamel. They are not coated with porcelain enamel but with an organic plastic resin quite different from porcelain enamel. It was found by the hearing examiner that the use of the term "porcenamel" had a tendency to deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public. The examiner made a cease and desist order which was affirmed on appeal by the Commission following an opinion fully discussing the questions involved. Arrow Metal Products Corp., CCH TRADE REGULATION REPORTER (10th ed.) ¶ 26,386 (FTC 1957).

[Findings Supported—Survey]

The findings of the Commission are adequately supported. There was no error in receiving a report of a survey made to find out whether the use of petitioners' term was capable of and did deceive members of the public. See United States v. 88 Cases, More or Less, etc., 187 F. 2d 967, 974 (3rd Cir.), cert. denied, 342 U. S. 861 (1951); Household Finance Corp. v. Federal Finance Corp., 105 F. Supp. 164, 166 (D. Ariz. 1952).

[Scope of Order]

The petitioners complain that the cease and desist order is too drastic and that some other manner of preventing deception, if any, should be adopted. But the matter of shaping a remedy is for the Commission. Our function is simply, in the words of the Supreme Court, to find whether the Commission has made "an allowable judgment in its choice of the remedy." Jacob Siegel Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,451], 327 U. S. 608, 612 (1946). The Commission did make an allowable judgment in this instance.

[Affirmed]

The order of the Commission will be affirmed.

[¶ 68,848] Wometco Television and Theatre Company v. United States and Miami Beach Theatre Corp.

In the Supreme Court of the United States. October Term, 1957. No. 438. Dated November 12, 1957.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York.

Case No. 434 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Intervention by Private Party.—The United States Supreme Court affirmed a trial court judgment (1)

denying a television and theatre company's motion for leave to intervene in the hearing and determination of a theatre company's petition, which was made pursuant to Paragraph III 7(b) of a consent decree entered in U. S. v. Loew's Inc. (1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,228), for leave to acquire and operate a theatre to be erected in Florida, and (2) granting the theatre company's petition to acquire and operate the theatre.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8381, 8421.

For the appellant: Monroe E. Stein (Richard F. Wolfson, of counsel), New York, N. Y.

For the appellees: J. Lee Rankin, Solicitor General; Victor R. Hansen, Assistant Attorney General; and Charles H. Weston and Maurice Silverman, Attorneys, Department of Justice. Albert R. Connelly (Archie Weltman and Donald Cronson, of counsel), New York, N. Y., for Miami Beach Theatre Corp.

[Affirmed]

PER CURIAM [In full text]: The motions to affirm are granted and the judgment is affirmed.

[¶ 68,849] International Boxing Club of New York, Inc., et al. v. United States.

In the Supreme Court of the United States. October Term, 1957. Dated October 29, 1957.

On Application for a Stay of Judgment of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. RYAN, District Judge.

Case No. 1122 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Judgment—Appellate Review—Supreme Court—Stay of Judgment Pending Appeal.—An application for a stay of a District Court judgment pending the defendants' appeal to the Supreme Court was granted in part and denied in part by a Justice of the Supreme Court. The Justice was of the opinion that the application should be granted in substantial part in view of (1) the fact that the suit was the first Government antitrust case involving professional sports to be reviewed by the Supreme Court after a trial on the merits and (2) the "drastic" character of some aspects of the relief granted by the District Court. The stay would become effective upon the expiration of the stay previously granted by the District Court and would continue until the Supreme Court's final determination of the defendants' pending appeal.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8235.

For the appellants: Kenneth C. Royall, New York, N. Y.; John F. Caskey, New York, N. Y.; and Charles H. Watson, Chicago, Ill.

For the appellee: J. Lee Rankin, Solicitor General, and Richard B. O'Donnell, New York, N. Y.

For prior opinions of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, see 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,759 and 68,649, and 1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,758; for a prior opinion of the U. S. Supreme Court, see 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 67,941.

[Stay of Judgment]

MR. JUSTICE HARLAN, Circuit Justice [In full text]: The fact that this is the first Government antitrust case involving professional sports to be reviewed by this Court after trial on the merits and the admittedly "drastic" character of some aspects of the relief granted by the District Court combine to lead me to the conclusion that the appellants' application for a stay of the judgment below, pending appeal, should be granted in substantial part. Indeed, the Government concedes, with commendable frankness, that such parts of the judgment "which would result in substantial and irreparable injury [to appellants] in the event of a reversal" and "which could substantially affect the property interests of the appellants" should not be put into effect pending review. Accepting the premises on which the Government suggests this application should be decided, cf. Breswick & Co. v. United States, 75 S. Ct. 912, I shall make the following disposition of the application for a stay, to become effective upon the expiration of the stay heretofore granted by the District Court and to continue until this Court's final determination of appellants' pending appeal:

(1) As to paragraphs "8," "9," "10," "11," "13," "14," "15," "16," "17," "18," "19," "20," "21," and "22" of the judgment, the application for a stay is granted. To this relief the Government has no objection.

(2) As to paragraphs "3," "5," "6," and "7" of the judgment, the application for a stay is granted to the extent that such provisions relate to the exercise of subsisting contract rights acquired by any of the appellants prior to March 8, 1957, the date on which the District Court filed its opinion holding that the Sherman Act had been violated. Although the Government opposes any stay of these provisions, I consider that this limited stay is in keeping with the formula which the Government has recognized should govern the disposition of this application.

(3) In all other respects the application for a stay is denied.

An appropriate order may be submitted to me for signature on or before November 4, 1957.

[¶ 68,850] United States v. National Cranberry Association; A. D. Makepeace Co.; United Cape Cod Cranberry Co.; Marcus L. Urann; and John C. Makepeace.

In the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts. Civil Action No. 55-418-S. Filed October 28, 1957.

Case No. 1232 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Exclusive Marketing Agreements—Cranberries.—An association engaged in the manufacturing and marketing of cranberry products was prohibited by a consent decree, (1) for a period of five years, from entering into any contract for the marketing of cranberries for a term of more than one year, unless such contract is terminable by the other party between June 1st and July 31st of any year, and (2) after the five-year period, from entering into any such contract for a term of more than three years, unless such contract is terminable by the other party between June 1st and July 31st of the third year and each subsequent third year of its term.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.690; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.300.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Interlocking Officers or Directors.—An association engaged in the manufacturing and marketing of cranberry products was prohibited by a consent decree from having as one of its officers or directors any person whom it knows to be engaged in, or to be an officer, director, or agent of, any other person engaged in, the marketing of cranberries or cranberry products in competition with the association.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.735; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.420.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Allocation of Markets.—An association engaged in the manufacturing and marketing of cranberry products was prohibited by a consent decree from entering into any agreement, with any other person engaged in the marketing of cranberries, to allocate or divide markets.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.468; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Production and Sale Control.—An association engaged in the manufacturing and marketing of cranberry products was prohibited by a consent decree from (1) contracting for the processing of any of its cranberries by any other processor at any time when it has available capacity and could process such cranberries itself, without incurring substantially greater expense, (2) receiving from any association member, for marketing, any cranberries which it knows to have been grown by a person not a member of the association, (3) exchanging with any person cranberries suitable for the fresh market for cranberries suitable only for processing to prevent such cranberries from being acquired by any competitor, or (4) entering into any agreement for the destruction of cranberries with any other person engaged in the marketing of cranberries. Also, growers of cranberries were prohibited from purchasing cranberries from others and reselling or otherwise disposing of them to artificially raise, depress, or stabilize market price levels of fresh or processed cranberries; or from delivering to the association any cranberries other than those grown by them or their subsidiaries.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.760; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610, 2610.800.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Discriminations—Rebates and Preferences.—An association engaged in the manufacturing and marketing of cranberry products was prohibited by a consent decree from (1) following any sales policy which includes any element of rebate or discount from the purchase price, unless the amount or mathematical formula for calculating the amount is disclosed to the customer, or which grants any bonus or allowance to customers on the basis of business done prior to the period to which such bonus or allowance applies, (2) granting any allowance or subsidy on account of losses incurred by its customers on resale of products purchased from the association, (3) granting any manufacturers' discount to anyone other than a manufacturer, (4) receiving from any person not a member of the association any cranberries, except on the same terms or conditions as would apply if such person were a member, or (5) discriminating among members in the administration of any pooling of cranberries. Also, growers of cranberries were prohibited from inducing or compelling any financial institution to take any action with respect to the granting or calling of loans for the purpose of discriminating against any borrower who is a competitor of the association.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.630, 2005.768; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.280.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Use of Stock Voting Rights.—In an action against an association engaged in the manufacturing and marketing of cranberry products, two growers of cranberries, and two individuals, a consent decree prohibited the growers and individuals from exercising voting rights on common stock of the association for a period of three years, except in two specified situations.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.833; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Modification—Further Relief—Government Petition.—A consent decree provided that the Government could, within one year after the expiration of five years after the entry of the decree, petition the court for such further relief as it might deem necessary or appropriate. Also, the decree provided that, if the Government's petition prays for relief requiring a defendant association to divest itself of any processing facilities, the association and other defendants in the action would have the burden of showing cause why the requested relief should not be granted. The decree would not constitute a bar or estoppel as to any issue of law or fact raised in such proceeding.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8361.15, 8421.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Modification—Legality of Marketing Agreements or Orders—Modification by Defendant.—A consent decree entered against an association engaged in the manufacturing and marketing of cranberry products provided that, in the event that any of the provisions of the decree should conflict with any provision of any marketing agreement with, or marketing order of, the Secretary of Agriculture, the association could petition the court for such modification of the decree as to permit compliance with such marketing agreement or order.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8321.48, 8361.37.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Permissive Provisions—Foreign Activities.—A consent decree entered against an association engaged in the manufacturing and marketing of cranberry products, two growers of cranberries, and two individuals provided that the provisions of the decree should not be deemed to relate to activities or operations outside of the United States, its territories, and its possessions not affecting the domestic commerce of the United States.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8321.33.

For the plaintiff: Victor R. Hansen, Assistant Attorney General; Worth Rowley, W. D. Kilgore, Jr., Richard B. O'Donnell, William J. Elkins, and John J. Galgay, Attorneys, Department of Justice; and Anthony Julian, United States Attorney.

For the defendants: Charles B. Rugg of Ropes, Gray, Best, Coolidge & Rugg; and Whitney, North, Seymour, Simpson, Thacher & Bartlett for Natl. Cranberry Assn. Francis A. Brick, Jr., of Donovan, Leisure, Newton & Irvine; and Fletcher Clark, Jr., for A. D. Makepeace Co. and John C. Makepeace. Claude B. Cross, of Withington, Cross, Park & McCann, for United Cape Cod Cranberry Co. Lothrop Withington, of Withington, Cross, Park & McCann, for Marcus L. Urann.

Final Judgment

George C. Sweeney, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on May 10, 1955, and the defendants herein, by their attorneys, having appeared and filed their answers to such complaint denying the substantive allegations thereof; and the plaintiff and each of defendants by their attorneys having severally consented to the making and entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and without admission by any party with respect to any such issue;

Now, Therefore, before any testimony has been taken, and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and upon consent as aforesaid of all the parties hereto, it is hereby Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed as follows:

I

[Sherman Act]

The Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter herein and of the parties hereto. The complaint states a claim for relief against the defendants under Sections 1 and 2 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Act, as amended.

II

[Definitions]

As used in this Final Judgment:

(A) "NCA" shall mean the defendant National Cranberry Association, a cooperative corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, and with its principal office and place of business at Hanson, Massachusetts;

(B) "ADM" shall mean the defendant A. D. Makepeace Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and with its principal place of business at Wareham, Massachusetts;

(C) "United" shall mean the defendant United Cape Cod Cranberry Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and with its principal place of business at Hanson, Massachusetts;

(D) "Urann" shall mean the defendant Marcus L. Urann, an individual;

(E) "Makepeace" shall mean the defendant John C. Makepeace, an individual;

(F) "Person" shall mean any individual, partnership, firm, corporation, association, trustee, cooperative or any other legal or business entity.

III

[Applicability of Judgment]

The provisions of this Final Judgment applicable to any defendant shall apply to such defendant, its successors, assigns, officers, directors, servants, employees and agents and to all persons in active concert or participation with such defendant who receive actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise.

IV

[Association—Practices Enjoined]

Defendant NCA is enjoined and restrained from:

(A) Entering into, renewing, maintaining or adhering to, (1) during the five years immediately following the date of entry of this Final Judgment, any agreement for the marketing of cranberries for any person, for a term of more than one year unless any such agreement shall on its face be terminable by such person by written notice delivered between June 1st and July 31st of any year, and (2) after such five year period, from entering into any agreement for the marketing of cranberries for any person for a term of more than three years unless any such agreement shall on its face be terminable by such person by written notice delivered between June 1st and July 31st of the third year and each subsequent third year of its term;

(B) Having, or allowing to serve, as one of its officers or directors, any person whom it knows to be engaged in, or to be an officer, director or agent of, any other person engaged in, the processing or marketing of cranberries or cranberry products in competition with NCA;

(C) Entering into, renewing, maintaining or adhering to any agreement or arrangement with any other person engaged in the marketing of cranberries to allocate or divide markets;

(D) Contracting for or otherwise arranging for the processing of any of NCA's cranberries by any other processor at any time when NCA has available capacity and could process such cranberries itself without incurring substantially greater expense;

(E)(1) Following any sales policy on cranberry products which includes any element of rebate or discount from the purchase price unless the amount of mathematical formula for calculating the amount is disclosed to the customer at or before the time of purchase by him, or which grants any bonus or allowance to customers on the basis of business done prior to the period to which such bonus or allowance applies;

(2) Granting any allowance or subsidy on account of losses incurred by NCA customers on resale of cranberry products purchased from NCA, except that this provision shall not apply to guarantees against, or allowances for, general NCA price declines on floor stocks, or to guarantees against, or allowances for, losses due to damage or defects in quality;

(3) Granting any manufacturers' discount to anyone other than a manufacturer;

(F)(1) Receiving from any member for marketing any cranberries which it knows to have been grown by a person not a member of NCA or receiving from any person not a member of NCA for marketing any cranberries except on the same terms or conditions as to payment therefor as would apply if such person were a member;

(2) Discriminating among members in the administration of any pooling of cranberries;

(3) Exchanging with any person cranberries suitable for the fresh market for cranberries suitable only for processing, to prevent such cranberries from being acquired by any person engaged in the marketing of cranberry products in competition with NCA;

(G) Entering into, enforcing or adhering to any agreement or arrangement for the destruction of cranberries with any other person engaged in the processing or marketing of cranberries.

V

[Further Relief]

The plaintiff may, within one year after the expiration of five years immediately following the date of entry of this Final Judgment, and without the necessity of showing any change in circumstances occurring subsequent to the entry hereof, petition this Court for such further relief as it may then deem necessary or appropriate with respect to the marketing by defendant NCA of cranberries for processing and processed cranberries. In such event, if plaintiff's petition prays for relief requiring NCA to divest itself of any processing facilities, the defendants NCA, ADM and United shall be required to assume the burden of showing cause why the requested relief on the facts and the law should not be granted. Also in such event, neither the entry of this Final Judgment nor any of the provisions hereof shall operate as a bar or estoppel as to any issue of law or fact raised in such proceeding or bar or estop the plaintiff or the defendants NCA, ADM and United from introducing any evidence or testimony therein with respect to any such issue.

VI

[Other Defendants—Practices Enjoined]

Defendants ADM, United, Makepeace and Urann are jointly and severally enjoined and restrained from:

(A) Purchasing cranberries from others and reselling or otherwise disposing of them to artificially raise, depress or stabilize market price levels of fresh or processed cranberries;

(B) Delivering to NCA any cranberries other than those grown by them or their subsidiaries, or for them or their subsidiaries pursuant to agreement;

(C) Exercising voting rights on common stock of NCA for a period of three years immediately following the date of entry of this Final Judgment, except that:

(1) ADM, United, Makepeace and Urann may individually exercise their voting rights on common stock of NCA during the aforesaid three-year period for the election of directors of NCA, provided, however, that none of them may vote for more than 10% of the total number of directors to be elected in each such election; and

(2) ADM, United, Makepeace and Urann may individually exercise their voting rights on common stock of NCA during the aforesaid three-year period in connection with any matter under NCA's charter or by-laws or applicable Delaware statutes requiring a stockholders' vote and which is directly connected with the transfer, assignment, pledging, sale, liquidation or other disposition of capital assets of NCA, or with any amendment of the Certificate of Incorporation of NCA.

Provided, however, that this subsection (C) shall not be deemed to apply to any person acquiring in good faith common stock of NCA from any of said defendants by transfer or by operation of law, if such person is not an officer, director, servant, employee or agent of any of said defendants;

(D) Inducing or compelling, or attempting to induce or compel any financial institution to take any action with respect to the granting or calling of loans for the purpose of discriminating against any borrower who is a competitor of NCA.

VII

[Government Marketing Orders]

In the event that any of the provisions of this Final Judgment shall conflict with any provision of any marketing agreement with, or marketing order of, the Secretary of Agriculture, the defendant NCA, without showing any other change in circumstances and upon notice to the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, may petition this Court for such modification of such of the terms of this Final Judgment as is necessary to permit compliance with such marketing agreement or order.

VIII

[Effective Date—Compliance]

(A) This Final Judgment shall take effect upon the expiration of ten (10) days after the date of its entry.

(B) For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment and for no other purpose, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on written request of the Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to any consenting defendant made to its principal office, be permitted, subject to any legally recognized privilege:

(1) Access, during the office hours of said defendant, to those books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda, and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of said defendant which relate to any matter contained in this Final Judgment;

(2) Subject to the reasonable convenience of said defendant and without restraint or interference from it, to interview officers or employees of the defendant, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters.

Upon written request of the Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, said defendant shall submit such reports in writing with respect to the matters contained in this Final Judgment as may from time to time be necessary to the enforcement of this Final Judgment.

No information obtained by the means permitted in this Section VIII shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department of Justice except in the course of legal proceedings in which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment or as otherwise required by law.

IX

[Foreign Activities]

The provisions of this Final Judgment shall not be deemed to relate to activities or operations outside of the United States, its territories and possessions not affecting the domestic commerce of the United States.

X

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to this Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this Final Judgment, for the modification of any of the provisions herein and for the enforcement of compliance therewith and punishment of violations thereof.

[¶ 68,851] United States v. Lyman Gun Sight Corporation, W. R. Weaver, M. Jackson Stith, John Unertl, National Rifle Association of America, Popular Science Publishing Company, Inc., and Henry Holt and Company, Inc.

In the United States District Court for the District of Columbia. Civil Action No. 890-56. Dated November 8, 1957.

Case No. 1269 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Resale Price Fixing—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Resale Price Agreements—Cancellation of Fair Trade Contracts—Telescopic Rifle Sights.—Manufacturers of telescopic rifle sights were prohibited by a consent decree from entering into any understanding to maintain or stabilize resale prices and, for a period of seven years, from entering into or enforcing any fair trade contract. Also, the manufacturers were required to cancel all of their existing fair trade contracts.

See Resale Price Fixing, Vol. 1, ¶ 3015.20, 3015.80; Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8301.45, 8421.

Resale Price Fixing—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Resale Price Fixing—Coercion—Boycott.—Manufacturers of telescopic rifle sights were prohibited by a consent decree from entering into any understanding to coerce (1) dealers or jobbers to observe suggested prices or prices in consumer advertisements, (2) jobbers to refuse to sell to off-list dealers, or (3) publishers of outdoors magazines to reject advertisements offering sights for sale by off-list dealers. Also, the manufacturers were prohibited from entering into any understanding to establish cooperative means and methods to accomplish the exclusion, from outdoors magazines, of advertisements offering sights for sale by off-list dealers; or to enforce boycotts against advertisements for the sale of sights by off-list dealers. The manufacturers were further prohibited, for a period of two years, from publishing any suggested prices or from engaging in any consumer advertisements, unless any reference to prices is limited to suggesting that sights may be purchased from other persons for approximately a stated number of dollars and advising that local dealers should be consulted to determine the actual prices.

See Resale Price Fixing, Vol. 1, ¶ 3015.80.

Resale Price Fixing—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Resale Price Fixing—Refusal To Deal.—Manufacturers of telescopic rifle sights were prohibited by a consent decree from entering into any understanding to refuse to sell sights to off-list dealers, and publishers of outdoors magazines were prohibited from entering into any understanding whereby any defendant publisher refuses to accept, publish, or carry advertisements for sights offered by any dealer or jobber at prices less than the manufacturer's list prices. Also, each of the publishers was prohibited, for a period of ten years, from refusing to publish advertisements for sights from any dealer or jobber, where the advertiser and the advertisements meet the reasonable standards uniformly applied by the publisher without regard to the fact that the advertiser offers sights for sale at prices less than the manufacturer's list prices.

See Resale Price Fixing, Vol. 1, ¶ 3015.70.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Specific Relief—Sale of Product—Contingent Provision.—A consent decree entered against manufacturers of telescopic rifle sights provided that, in the event that any defendant manufacturer (during a period of seven years) elects to engage in consumer advertising, such manufacturer, during the time of the publication of such advertisements, must either sell sights or cause jobbers to sell sights to any off-list dealer with satisfactory credit standing.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8301.50, 8341.20.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Specific Relief—Notice of Decree.—Manufacturers of telescopic rifle sights were required to mail a copy of a consent decree entered against them to each of their jobbers and dealers on their current distribution lists for sales or advertising materials or to each of their jobbers or dealers with whom they had a fair trade contract. Also, publishers of outdoors magazines were required to mail a copy of the consent decree entered against them to each off-list dealer who had been refused, since a specified date, advertising of sights.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8301.60.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Contingent Provision.—A consent decree provided that a former distributor of telescopic rifle sights would become subject to specified provision of the decree if and when he either engaged in the manufacture of sights or in the sale of sights manufactured exclusively for him.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8341.20.

For the plaintiff: Victor R. Hansen, Assistant Attorney General, and W. D. Kilgore, Jr., Baddia J. Rashid, Max Freeman, James L. Minicus, William H. Crabtree, and Forr A. Ford.

For the defendants: Rodney J. McMahon for Lyman Gun Sight Corp.; Alan Y. Cole for M. Jackson Stith; J. J. Wilson for Natl. Rifle Assn. of America; Saterlee, Warfield & Stephens, by William E. Stockhausen and Webb C. Hayes, III, for Henry Holt and Co., Inc.; Cahill, Gordon, Reindel & Ohl, by Jerrold G. Van Cise, for W. R. Weaver; Gerald L. Phelps for John Unertl; and Parker, Duryee, Benjamin, Zuning & Malone, by Vincent J. Malone and Arthur B. Carton, for Popular Science Publishing Co., Inc.

Final Judgment

F. Dickinson Letts, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on February 29, 1956; the defendants having appeared and filed their answers to the complaint denying the material allegations thereof; and the plaintiff and the defendants, by their attorneys, having severally consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and without this Final Judgment constituting evidence or an admission by any party hereto in respect of any such issue;

Now, Therefore, before the taking of any testimony and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and upon the consent of the parties hereto, it is hereby

Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed as follows:

I

[Sherman Act]

This Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter herein and of all the parties hereto. The complaint states a claim upon which relief against the defendants may be granted under Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Act, as amended.

II

[Definitions]

As used in this Final Judgment:

(A) "Manufacturing defendants" means defendants Lyman Gun Sight Corporation, W. R. Weaver and John Unertl;

(B) "Publishing defendants" means defendants National Rifle Association of America, Popular Science Publishing Company, Inc., and Henry Holt and Company, Inc.;

(C) "Scopes" means all telescopic sights, utilizing optical glasses, to be secured or mounted on rifles for the purpose of aiming more accurately than would be possible with metallic sights. Scopes usually contain a reticule in the form of cross hairs, a dot or a post;

(D) "Manufacturer's suggested prices" means any prices determined by a manufacturing defendant and suggested to any jobber or dealer as prices to be charged by a person or persons other than such defendant on sales of scopes manufactured by such defendant;

(E) "Consumer advertisements" means any advertisements by a manufacturing defendant in any outdoors magazine or in any sales literature sent directly to consumers which suggest prices to be charged by a person or persons other than defendant on sales of scopes manufactured by such defendant;

(F) "Person" means an individual, partnership, firm, corporation, or any other legal entity [for the purpose of this definition a manufacturing defendant, its subsidiaries, officers, directors, agents and employees shall be deemed to be one person];

(G) "Fair trade agreement" means any resale price maintenance contract, or supplement thereto, pursuant to which the resale price of scopes is fixed, established or maintained under state fair trade laws in accordance with either Section 1 of the Sherman Act or Section 5(a) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended;

(H) "Jobber" means any person who purchases scopes from manufacturers thereof and resells them to other distributors or retailers;

(I) "Dealer" means any person who buys scopes from manufacturers or jobbers and retails them to the ultimate consumer;

(J) "Off-list dealer" means any person who, in making sales to ultimate consumers, fails to adhere to manufacturer's suggested prices or prices in manufacturer's consumer advertisements;

(K) "Outdoors magazine" means any periodical having interstate circulation and devoted, principally, to outdoors activities such as marksmanship, hunting and fishing.

III

[Applicability of Judgment]

The provisions of this Final Judgment applicable to any defendant shall apply to such defendant, its subsidiaries, successors and assigns and to each of its or their officers, directors, agents and employees, and to all persons in active concert or participation with any defendant who shall have received actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise.

IV

[Concerted Activity]

The manufacturing defendants are jointly and severally enjoined and restrained from entering into, adhering to, maintaining or furthering any contract, agreement, understanding or concerted plan of action with or among themselves, with any publisher of any outdoors magazine, with any jobber or dealer in scopes or with any other person:

(A) to maintain or stabilize resale prices on scopes;

(B) to coerce or compel dealers to observe, or adhere to manufacturer's suggested prices or prices in consumer advertisements;

(C) to coerce or compel jobbers to observe, or adhere to manufacturer's suggested prices or prices in consumer advertisements;

(D) to refuse to sell scopes to off-list dealers;

(E) to coerce or induce jobbers to refuse to sell scopes to off-list dealers;

(F) to coerce or induce publishers of outdoors magazines to reject advertisements offering scopes for sale by off-list dealers or by any other person;

(G) to establish cooperative means and methods to accomplish the exclusion from outdoors magazines of advertisements offering scopes for sale by off-list dealers or by any other person;

(H) to cause, initiate or enforce boycotts against advertisements for the sale of scopes by off-list dealers or by any other person.

V

[Individual Activity]

The manufacturing defendants are jointly and severally enjoined and restrained from:

(A) coercing or compelling dealers to observe, or adhere to, manufacturer's suggested prices or prices in consumer advertisements;

(B) coercing or compelling jobbers to observe, or adhere to, manufacturer's suggested prices or prices in consumer advertisements for scopes;

(C) coercing or compelling jobbers to refuse to sell scopes to off-list dealers;

(D) coercing or compelling publishers of outdoors magazines to reject advertisements offering scopes for sale by off-list dealers;

(E) establishing cooperative means and methods to accomplish the exclusion from outdoors magazines of advertisements offering scopes for sale by off-list dealers;

(F) causing, initiating or enforcing boycotts against advertisements for the sale of scopes by off-list dealers.

VI

[Fair Trade Contracts Cancelled]

The manufacturing defendants are jointly and severally ordered and directed to cancel forthwith all fair trade agreements to which such defendants are now a party, and any such defendant who is a party thereto shall give notice to plaintiff, within ninety days from the date of entry of this Final Judgment, that such fair trade agreements have been cancelled.

VII

[Fair Trade Contracts Prohibited]

The manufacturing defendants are jointly and severally enjoined and restrained, for a period of seven years from the date of entry of this Final Judgment, from entering into, adhering to, or enforcing any fair trade agreement. After this seven year period of time, nothing contained in this Final Judgment shall prevent any manufacturing defendant from entering into, adhering to, or enforcing any fair trade agreement, valid and enforceable in the state where to be enforced, or from taking any lawful action permitted or required by any such fair trade law.

VIII

[Suggested Prices—Publication]

The manufacturing defendants are jointly and severally enjoined and restrained for a period of two years commencing ninety days from the date of entry of this Final Judgment from:

(A) publishing any manufacturer's suggested prices, or

(B) engaging in any consumer advertisements unless any reference therein to prices is limited to suggesting that scopes manufactured by such defendant may be purchased from persons other than defendant for approximately a stated number of dollars and advising that local dealers should be consulted to determine the actual prices for such scopes.

IX

[Sale of Scopes]

In the event that any manufacturing defendant during the period of seven years from the date of entry of this Final Judgment shall elect (subject to Section VIII herein) to engage in consumer advertisements, such defendant during the time of the publication of such consumer advertisements is ordered and directed either to sell scopes or cause jobbers to sell scopes to any off-list dealer with satisfactory credit standing, who makes application in writing to such defendant, without discrimination as to availability, price, terms and conditions of sale, or credit requirements; provided, however, that nothing contained in this Section IX shall be interpreted to prevent such defendant or a jobber of such defendant from giving to any person, purchasing scopes for resale, functional or quantity discounts otherwise lawful.

X

[Notice of Decree—Manufacturers]

Each of the manufacturing defendants is ordered and directed within ninety days after the date of entry of this Fnal Judgment to mail a true and complete copy of this Final Judgment to each jobber and dealer on such defendant's current distribution list for sales or advertising materials relating to scopes, or with whom such defendant has in effect on the date of entry of this Final Judgment a fair trade agreement relating to scopes.

XI

[Contingent Provision]

Defendant M. Jackson Stith shall become subject to all provisions in Sections I-X, and XV and XVI of this Final Judgment if and when he either engages in the manufacture of scopes, or sells scopes manufactured exclusively for him which he sells under his own name.

XII

[Concerted Refusal To Accept Ads]

The publishing defendants are jointly and severally enjoined and restrained from entering into, adhering to or claiming any rights under any contract, agreement, understanding or common course of conduct with any manufacturer, jobber or dealer of scopes or any publisher of outdoors magazines whereby any publishing defendant refuses to accept, publish, carry or run advertisements for scopes offered by any dealer, jobber, off-list dealer or other person at prices less than the manufacturer's list prices therefor, if the advertisements otherwise meet the reasonable standards uniformly applied by the defendants.

XIII

[Individual Refusal To Publish Ads]

Each publishing defendant is enjoined and restrained, for a period of ten years commencing ninety days from the date of entry of this Final Judgment, from refusing to publish or threatening to refuse to publish advertisements for scopes from any dealer, jobber, off-list dealer or other person advertising such scopes for sale, where the advertiser and the advertisements meet the reasonable standards uniformly applied by the defendant without regard to the fact that the advertiser offers scopes for sale at prices less than the manufacturer's list prices therefor.

XIV

[Notice of Decree—Publishers]

Each of the publishing defendants is ordered and directed within ninety days after the date of entry of this Final Judgment to mail a true and complete copy of this Final Judgment to each off-list dealer who has been refused, since March 1, 1949, advertising of scopes by such defendant.

XV

[Inspection and Compliance]

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment, and for no other purpose, and subject to any legally recognized privilege, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, upon the written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, upon reasonable notice to the defendants made to their principal offices, be permitted: (a) reasonable access, during the office hours of said defendants, to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession of or under the control of said defendants relating to any of the matters contained in this Final Judgment; and (b) subject to the reasonable convenience of said defendants and without restraint or interference from them, to interview the officers and employees of defendants, who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters. For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment, any defendant, upon the written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and upon reasonable notice made to its principal office, shall submit such written reports with respect to any of the matters contained in this Final Judgment as from time to time may be necessary for the enforcement of this Final Judgment. No information obtained by the means provided in this Section XV shall be divulged by a representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of such Department except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment, or as otherwise required by law.

XVI

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction is retained by this Court for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to this Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this Final Judgment, for the modification or termination of any of the provisions thereof, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof.

[¶ 68,852] United States v. Combustion Engineering, Inc.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil No. 126-230. Filed November 1, 1957.

Case No. 1367 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Restrictive Patent Licensing Agreements with Foreign Companies—Restrictive Agreements with Foreign Companies.—A manufacturer of steam generating equipment was prohibited by a consent decree from enforcing those provisions of its existing equipment licensing agreements with foreign companies which allegedly had the effect of allocating world markets for the manufacture and sale of such equipment. The manufacturer was further prohibited from entering into any future agreement with any foreign company (1) allocating or dividing territories or markets, (2) requiring any foreign company to purchase any equipment from any designated source or to use the equipment installation service of any other foreign company, (3) restricting imports into or exports from the United States, (4) not to buy or use equipment manufactured or sold by anyone other than the manufacturer, or (5) giving the manufacturer the continuing right to take title under any United States letters patent owned by the foreign company and licensed to the manufacturer exclusively.

Also, the manufacturer was prohibited from giving any foreign company any commission or other credit when the manufacturer exports equipment into any country or market except for actual services rendered in connection with a specific sale or a negotiation for a specific sale; or using any United States patent right, acquired by the manufacturer pursuant to any agreement prior to such acquisition, from a foreign company having at the time an equipment patent license from the manufacturer, to prevent such foreign company itself from importing into, and selling in, the United States to an ultimate consumer equipment covered by such patent.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.055, 2005.718, 2013.275.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Permissive Provisions—Foreign Activities.—A consent decree entered against a manufacturer of steam generating equipment provided that a specified provision of the decree should not be construed to prohibit the manufacturer from making a specific sale of equipment to a foreign company.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8321.33, 8421.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Specific Relief—Notice Requirements.—A manufacturer of steam generating equipment was required by a consent decree to furnish a copy of the decree (1) to each of its officers and directors, (2) to each of its employees engaged in licensing equipment, and (3) to each foreign company having an equipment licensing agreement with the manufacturer.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8301.60.

For the plaintiff: Victor R. Hansen, Assistant Attorney General, and W. D. Kilgore, Jr., Baddia J. Rashid, Richard B. O'Donnell, John D. Swartz, John V. Leddy, Charles F. B. McAleer, David Schwartz, John H. Clark, III, and Bernard A. Friedman, Attorneys, Department of Justice.

For the defendant: Thomas F. Fennell of Shearman & Sterling & Wright.

Final Judgment

RICHARD H. LEVET, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein; defendant, Combustion Engineering, Inc., having appeared and filed its answer to the complaint denying any violation of law charged therein; and plaintiff and defendant by their attorneys having severally consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein and without admission by defendant in respect of any such issue;

Now, Therefore, before any testimony has been taken herein, and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and upon consent as aforesaid of plaintiff and defendant, it is hereby

Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed as follows:

I

[Sherman Act]

This Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter hereof and of the parties hereto. The complaint states a claim upon which relief may be granted against defendant under Section I of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," as amended, commonly known as the Sherman Act.

II

[Definitions]

As used in this Final Judgment:

(A) "Defendant" shall mean Combustion Engineering, Inc., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, having an office at 200 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.;

(B) "Foreign Company" or "Foreign Companies" shall mean any, some or all of the following:

1. France Tosi, S.p.A., a company organized under the laws of the Italian Republic, having an office in the city of Legnano, Italy.

2. Stein et Roubaix, S.A., a company organized under the laws of the French Republic having an office in the city of Paris, France.

3. International Combustion, Ltd., a company organized under the laws of the United Kingdom, having an office at 19 Woburn Place, London W.C. 1, England.

4. Meller-Goodwin, S.A., a company organized under the laws of the Republic of Argentina, having an office in the city of Buenos Aires, Argentina.

5. A. S. Kvaerner Brug, a company organized under the laws of the Kingdom of Norway, having an office in the city of Oslo, Norway.

6. Kohlenscheidungs-Gesellschaft, m.b.H., a company organized under the laws of the German Federal Republic, having an office in the city of Stuttgart, Germany.

7. Mitsubishi Nippon Heavy-Industries, Ltd., a company organized under the laws of Japan, having an office in the city of Tokyo, Japan.

8. Mitsubishi Heavy-Industries, Reorganized, Ltd., a company organized under the laws of Japan, having an office in the city of Kobe, Japan.

9. Mitsubishi Zosen-Kabuski Kaisha, a company organized under the laws of Japan, having an office in the city of Tokyo, Japan.

10. N. V. Koninkliijke Maatschappij De Schelde, a company organized under the laws of the Kingdom of the Netherlands, having an office in the city of Vlissingen, the Netherlands.

11. The Superheater Company Limited, a company organized under the laws of the United Kingdom, having an office at 53 Haymarket, London S.W. 1, England.

12. A. B. Svenska Maskinverken, a company organized under the laws of the Kingdom of Sweden, having an office at Sodertalje. Sweden.

13. Any other Company, organized and existing under the laws of any foreign country, and having its office and principal place of business in such foreign country, which is engaged in the manufacture of Equipment;

(C) "Equipment" shall mean all apparatus, equipment, materials and parts therefor, of the types manufactured commercially by Defendant for the purpose of steam generation and fuel burning.

III

[Applicability of Judgment]

The provisions of this Final Judgment shall apply to the Defendant and to its officers, servants, employees, agents and attorneys, and to all persons in active concert or participation with the Defendant who receive actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise.

IV

[Equipment Licensing Agreements]

Defendant is hereby enjoined and restrained from the further performance or enforcement of those provisions in any existing Equipment licensing agreement between Defendant and any Foreign Company by which:

(A) The Foreign Company agrees not to export equipment to the United States or Defendant agrees not to export Equipment to any foreign country, or

(B) The Foreign Company agrees to cross-license Defendant by granting to Defendant the exclusive right to manufacture, use and sell Equipment in the United States under any United States Letters Patent or application therefor presently owned by such Foreign Company, or

(C) The Foreign Company grants Defendant the right to acquire title to any United States Letters Patent, relating to Equipment, which patent is presently owned by the Foreign Company and under which patent Defendant has been granted by the Foreign Company an exclusive license to manufacture, use and sell in the United States, or

(D) Defendant agrees, when it exports Equipment into any country, to give the Foreign Company (i) any credit against any royalty based upon the value of the Equipment exported and payable by such Foreign Company to Defendant or (ii) any other credit, or

(E) The Foreign Company agrees when it exports Equipment into any country in which there is another Foreign Company which is licensed by Defendant to manufacture, use and sell Equipment:

1. To secure parts for such Equipment from any designated source, or

2. To use the Equipment installation service of such licensee in connection with the erection of such Equipment, or

(F) The Foreign Company agrees not to use the products manufactured or sold by anyone other than Defendant.

V

[Future Agreements]

Defendant is enjoined and restrained from entering into or adhering to any future contract, agreement or understanding with any Foreign Company:

(A) Allocating or dividing territories or markets for the manufacture, installation or sale of Equipment;

(B) Restricting or limiting imports into or exports from the United States of Equipment;

(C) Requiring any Foreign Company to purchase any Equipment from any designated source or requiring any Foreign Company to use the Equipment installation service of any other Foreign Company; provided, however, that this subsection shall not be construed to prohibit a specific sale of Equipment by Defendant to a Foreign Company;

(D) Not to buy or use Equipment manufactured or sold by anyone other than Defendant;

(E) Giving Defendant the continuing right to take title under any United States Letters Patent owned by the Foreign Company, and relating to Equipment, and licensed to the Defendant exclusively.

VI

[Practices Prohibited]

Defendant is enjoined and restrained from:

(A) Giving any Foreign Company any commission or other credit when Defendant exports Equipment into any country or market except for actual services rendered in connection with a specific sale or a negotiation for a specific sale;

(B) Using any United States patent right, acquired by Defendant pursuant to any agreement prior to such acquisition, from a Foreign Company having at the time an Equipment patent license from Defendant, to prevent such Foreign Company itself from importing into, and selling in, the United States to an ultimate consumer Equipment covered by such patent; provided that this provision shall not be applicable if such Foreign Company comes under the direct or indirect control of any domestic Equipment competitor of Defendant.

VII

[Notice of Judgment]

(A) Defendant is ordered and directed within ninety days after the entry of this Final Judgment to furnish a true and complete copy of this Final Judgment to each of its officers and directors and to each of its employees engaged in licensing Equipment, and within fifteen days thereafter to file with the Clerk of this Court a statement as to the fact and manner in which Defendant has complied with the foregoing terms of this subsection (A) of Section VII;

(B) Defendant is ordered and directed within one hundred and twenty days after the entry of this Final Judgment to furnish a true and complete copy of this Final Judgment to each Foreign Company having at that time an Equipment licensing agreement with Defendant, and within fifteen days thereafter to file with the Clerk of this Court a statement as to the fact and manner in which Defendant has complied with the foregoing terms of this subsection (B) of Section VII.

VIII

[Inspection and Compliance]

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to Defendant made to its principal office, be permitted, subject to any legally recognized privilege:

(A) Access, during office hours of Defendant, to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda, and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of Defendant relating to any matters contained in this Final Judgment;

(B) Subject to the reasonable convenience of Defendant and without restraint or interference from Defendant, to interview officers or employees of Defendant, who may have counsel present regarding any such matters.

Upon such written request, Defendant shall submit such reports in writing with respect to the matters contained in this Final Judgment as may from time to time be necessary to the enforcement of this Final Judgment.

No information obtained by the means permitted in this Section VIII shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department of Justice except in the course of legal proceedings in which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment or as otherwise required by law.

IX

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction is retained by this Court for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to this Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this Final Judgment, for the amendment or modification of any of the provisions thereof, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof.

X

[Effective Date]

The provisions of this Final Judgment shall become effective thirty days from the date of entry hereof.

[¶ 68,853] Dura Electric Lamp Company, Inc. v. Westinghouse Electric Corporation, Tungsol Electric, Inc., Sylvania Electric Products, Inc., and Consolidated Electric Lamp Company.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. No. 12,196. Argued October 21, 1957. Filed November 8, 1957.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey.

Clayton and Sherman Antitrust Acts

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Defenses—General Release—Joint Tortfeasors.—Defendants, charged with engaging in a conspiracy, were properly granted a judgment in a private antitrust action, where it was established that the plaintiff had given a valid and unconditional release to one of the parties to the alleged conspiracy. Under the applicable state and federal case law, the release of one joint tortfeasor is a release to all. The fact that the plaintiff did not intend to release all of its claims based on the alleged conspiracy did not change the application of the rule. There was nothing in the release by which it could be interpreted as a covenant not to sue, there was nothing which indicated a reservation of rights, and there was nothing in the facts to indicate mutual mistake or that the release was obtained by fraud.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9010.700.

For the appellant: Burton R. Thorman, Washington, D. C.

For the appellees: Edward J. O'Mara, Jersey City, N. J.

Before GOODRICH, STALEY and HASTIE, Circuit Judges.

Opinion of the Court

[Appeal]

By GOODRICH, Circuit Judge [In full text]: This is an appeal from a judgment for the defendant rendered on motion for summary judgment in an antitrust case. The basis for the district court's ruling was that the plaintiff had given a valid and unconditional release to one of the parties to a joint tort and that this release discharged the obligation of all.

[Suit]

It appears that plaintiff in this case had, at the conclusion of a government action against important producers in the incandescent electric lamp industry, started a suit against General Electric Company naming Corning Glass as a coconspirator. This suit was dismissed by the plaintiff upon receiving a payment of $50,000 from General Electric and giving to the defendant a general release. Subsequently the plaintiff brought action against the defendants named here, alleging conspiracy under the Sherman and Clayton Acts and naming as coconspirators General Electric and Corning Glass Works but not naming them as defendants.

[Effect of Release]

The single question for decision here is whether the release given by the plaintiff in the General Electric suit bars the action against alleged coconspirators.

[Applicable Law]

The plaintiff says this question is to be settled by federal law and federal law is in its favor. We are not so sure that what we have here is a federal law question. The right is created under federal law, true. But whether subsequent things which the plaintiff has done destroys the right is not necessarily a federal law question. Cf. Bank of America v. Parnell, 352 U. S. 29 (1956), reversing, 226 F. 2d 297 (3d Cir. 1955). But see Stella v. Kaiser, 221 F. 2d 115 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 350 U. S. 835 (1955). See also Mishkin, The Variousness of "Federal Law": Competence and Discretion in the Choice of National and State Rules for Decision, 105 U. Pa. L. Rev. 797 (1957). We do not need to decide that issue because we think by either route the plaintiff cannot now recover.

[Scope of Release]

The common-law rule on the subject was perfectly clear. It is accurately expressed in Restatement, Torts, § 885(1) (1939) as follows:

> "(1) A valid release of one tortfeasor from liability for a harm, given by the injured person, discharges all others liable for the same harm, unless the parties to the release agree that the release shall not discharge the others and, if the release is embodied in a document, unless such agreement appears in the document."

Some of the applications of the rules have been severely criticized by law teachers. See Prosser, Torts, 1107-11 (1941). Much of this criticism, however, has come from refusal of courts in some instances to give effect to language reserving rights against parties not released or in interpreting language sounding in terms of a covenant not to sue as a general release.[1] Here we have no such complication. The document of release, which sounds as though it had been taken from an old form book, is as broad as all out of doors and typical of the wasteful use of words in the English language in which lawyers sometimes indulge. It is set out verbatim in the margin because it is the heart of the case but setting it out does not carry the court's approval of it as a piece of English composition.[2]

[1] In McKenna v. Austin, 134 F. 2d 659 (D. C. Cir. 1943), which discusses the evils of the common-law rule the document under consideration was couched in terms of a covenant not to sue and was accompanied by an express reservation against other parties.

It is to be noted that the language of the release is as general as language can be. There is nothing by which it may be interpreted as a covenant not to sue. There is nothing which even hints at a reservation of rights. There is nothing in the facts here which looks to a reexamination of the release based upon fraud or mutual mistake or anything of the sort. Michael Rose Productions v. Loew's Inc. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,307], 143 F. Supp. 606 (S. D. N. Y. 1956); McDermott v. Botwick, 38 N. J. Super. 528, 119 A. 2d 776 (App. Div. 1956). The transaction was one conducted between lawyers so we do not have an instant where a court may strive to extricate an uninformed layman from the consequences of a hasty settlement. As the court below said at the conclusion of the argument upon the motion for summary judgment, "[I]f there ever was [a] case . . . which seems to come within the confines of the general rule that release of one tortfeasor is a release to all, this is it." That is our view also.

[State and Federal Law]

The New Jersey authorities are clear in their enunciation of the common-law rule as to the effect of a release as applied to a situation like this. See, e. g., Moss v. Cherdak, 114 N. J. L. 332, 176 Atl. 333 (E. & A. 1935); cf. Aljian v. Ben Schlossberg, Inc., 8 N. J. Super. 461, 73 A. 2d 290 (App. Div. 1950). So, too, we think are the federal cases. See, e. g., Combined Bronx Amusements v. Warner Bros. Pictures [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,123], 132 F. Supp. 921 (S. D. N. Y. 1955); Solar Elec. Corp. v. General Elec. Co., Civil No. 14157, W. D. Pa., Oct. 2, 1957; cf. Stella v. Kaiser, 218 F. 2d 64, 68 (2d Cir. 1954); Save Elec. Corp. v. General Elec. Co., Civil No. 7146, N. D. Ohio, March 28, 1957.

[Affidavit—Intention]

One more point should be noted. There is an affidavit by the president of the plaintiff company which figures in the district court proceedings. This affidavit does not claim that the company was lured into making this settlement. It simply says that it was not the intention of the president to release all claims against other conspirators. We think this affidavit does not change the application of the rule. When a man uses words which have a given legal effect he is bound by that effect in the absence of fraud or mistake none of which there is here. Combined Bronx Amusements v. Warner Bros. Pictures, supra; Save Elec. Corp. v. General Elec. Co., supra; Restatement, Torts § 885, Com. d (1939); 3 Williston, Contracts § 647 (rev. ed. 1936).

[Affirmed]

The judgment of the district court will be affirmed.

[¶ 68,854] Frank Riggall v. Washington County Medical Society; Stanley Applegate, Individually and as President of Washington County Medical Society; Fount Richardson; Friedman Sisco; Ruth Ellis Lesh; and Alfred Hathcock.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit. No. 15,804. Dated November 15, 1957.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Western District of Arkansas.

[2] "Dura Electric Lamp Company, Inc., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New Jersey, on its own behalf and on behalf of the individuals and corporation who have executed assignment of claims to it, a copy of which assignment is annexed hereto as Exhibit 'A,' for and in consideration of the sum of Fifty Thousand Dollars ($50,000), lawful money of the United States of America, and other good and valuable consideration, to it in hand paid by General Electric Company, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, has remised, released and forever discharged, and, by these presents, does, for itself, its predecessors, successors and assigns, remise, release and forever discharge General Electric Company and all its subsidiary and successor companies, all its past, present and future officers, directors, stockholders, agents, employees, and each and every one of the aforesaid jointly and severally, of and from all, and all manner of action and actions, cause and causes of action, suits, debts, dues, sums of money, accounts, reckonings, bonds, bills, specialties, covenants, contracts, controversies, agreements, promises, variances, trespasses, damages, judgments, extents, executions, claims and demands whatsoever, in law or in equity, which it, or any of its predecessors or assignors, ever had, now has or which it or any of its predecessors or assignors or its successors or assigns hereafter can, shall or may have, for, upon and by reason of any matter, cause or thing whatsoever from the beginning of the world to the day of the date of these presents."

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages and Injunctive Relief —Necessary Averments To State Cause of Action—Injury to Public—Interstate Commerce.—A doctor's antitrust suit alleging that a county medical society wrongfully denied him membership, and that, as a result, his practice was less profitable, was properly dismissed. The complaint failed to allege that the defendants' act cast any burden upon interstate commerce. The practice of medicine, as disclosed by the complaint, did not constitute either trade or commerce within Section 1 of the Sherman Act. The mere fact that a doctor in one state may be treating patients from other states who must travel interstate does not result in practicing medicine in interstate commerce as the transportation of such patients is incidental. Furthermore, the complaint contained no charge that the defendants' acts imposed an economic burden upon the public or that the rejection of the doctor's membership application resulted in the raising or fixing of fees charged the public by other physicians, and there were no allegations indicating that the defendants' actions resulted in a monopoly within the provisions of Section 2 of the Sherman Act.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2035.213; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.475, 9009.600.

For the appellant: James R. Hale.

For the appellees: Eugene R. Warren (Rex W. Perkins and Bailey, Warren & Bullion on the brief).

Before GARDNER, Chief Judge, and VOGEL and VAN OOSTERHOUT, Circuit Judges.

[Nature of Action]

GARDNER, Chief Judge [In full text]: Appellant, a duly licensed physician and surgeon, brought this action against the defendants to recover treble damages for alleged violations of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, Title 15, U. S. C., Secs. 1, 2, 12 and 15. We shall refer to the parties as they were designated in the trial court.

Plaintiff was duly licensed as a physician and surgeon by the licensing authorities of the State of Arkansas in 1935 and at and since said time has been practicing his profession in Washington County, Arkansas. The defendant Washington County Medical Society is an unincorporated professional, economic organization and institution with at least thirty-six dues-paying or active members, and the other named defendants are members of the Washington County Medical Society and are also physicians and surgeons. Plaintiff in his complaint alleged that he was a citizen of Arkansas and that the defendants were also citizens of the State of Arkansas; that jurisdiction of the court was dependent upon provisions of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, Title 15, U. S. C., Secs. 1, 2, 12 and 15; that he had received various degrees from educational institutions and had thorough training and wide experience in the field of medicine and its practice; that while he was located at Prairie Grove, Arkansas, where he had practiced his profession since 1935, he received, accepted, treated and administered to patients from Arkansas, Oklahoma, Kansas, Missouri, Texas and other states and that had he been a member of the Washington County Medical Society he would in the past have received, accepted, treated and administred to a great many more patients and would in the future receive, accept, treat and administer to a great many more patients than in the past, not only from Arkansas but from many other states; that he was qualified for membership in the society but that notwithstanding such qualifications he had applied for membership in due form on four different occasions; that his applications had been wrongfully, unlawfully, capriciously and arbitrarily rejected, no reason for such rejections being given therefor; that he had exhausted his administrative remedies by appeal to the Arkansas Medical Society and the American Medical Association but was unable to secure any redress and would in the future be unable to secure any remedy for the injuries suffered by reason of the arbitrary rejection of his applications for membership in the Washington County Medical Society, that the Constitution and By-Laws of the Washington County Medical Society provided that "Every legally registered physician residing and practicing in Washington County who is of good moral and professional standing and who does not support or practice, or claim to practice, any exclusive system of medicine, shall be eligible for membership," and "The Society shall judge of the qualifications of its members, but as it is the only door to the state medical society and the American Medical Association, for physicians within its jurisdiction, every reputable and legally qualified physician of Washington County who does not support, or practice or claim to practice sectarian medicine, or who does not claim to have exclusive or special medicines not available to the general profession, and who adheres carefully to the principles of medical ethics, shall be eligible to membership," and "This Society shall have general direction of the affairs of the medical profession of the county, and its influence shall be constantly exerted to better the scientific, material and social condition of every physician within its jurisdiction. Systematic efforts shall be made by each member, and by the Society as a whole, to increase the membership until it embraces every reputable physician in the county;" that the Washington County Medical Society was a component member of the Arkansas Medical Society and held a charter from that society, that the Arkansas Medical Society was a constituent member of the American Medical Association; that the American Medical Association is the only medical association or society of national prominence, influence or importance in the United States and that membership in the American Medical Association is of great economic importance and benefit; that because of his denial of membership in the Washington County Medical Society he had been and was prevented from doing a number of enumerated things all of which would be of great economic benefit and importance to him as well as to his patients and the public and society in general, all of which substantially affected trade and commerce between the State of Arkansas and other states, territories and foreign countries, and that the defendants had combined, confederated, and conspired among themselves and with other persons in disregard of the provisions of the constitution and by-laws of the Washington County Medical Society not to admit plaintiff to membership in said society and that defendants had stated publicly that they were not required to give plaintiff any reason for refusing or denying him membership. In his prayer he asked for $100,000 damages, that this amount be trebled pursuant to provisions of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, that the defendants be enjoined and restrained from collusive or concerted action in respect to his application for membership, and that mandatory injunction issue commanding the defendant Washington County Medical Society to admit him to full membership. Other specific relief was also demanded.

[Defenses]

Defendants filed answer denying that the court had jurisdiction of the cause of action or that the Sherman Anti-Trust Act was applicable to the allegations of plaintiff's complaint.

[Dismissal of Complaint]

On hearing the court determined that it was without jurisdiction and entered judgment dismissing the complaint.

[Issue]

On this appeal it is urged that the court erred in holding that it was without jurisdiction and that is the sole issue.

[Sherman Act]

Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, so far as here pertinent, read as follows:

> "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal: * * * (Sec. 1, Title 15, U. S. C.)
>
> "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court." (Sec. 2, Title 15, U. S. C.)

Section 3 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act is confined in its operation to territories or the District of Columbia and has no bearing on the issues here presented.

[Trade or Commerce—Public Injury]

We must accept as true all well-pleaded facts in the complaint, but not conclusions.

Section 1 of the Sherman Act was enacted by Congress pursuant to the commerce clause of the Constitution vesting in Congress the power to regulate interstate commerce. It is to be noted that the complaint is confined to plaintiff's private medical practice. It charges no economic burden on the public by reason of the alleged acts of the defendants. There is no charge that the rejection of plaintiff's application for membership in the Washington County Medical Society resulted in the raising or fixing of fees charged the public by other physicians. There is no allegation in the complaint remotely suggesting that the acts of defendants cast any burden upon interstate commerce. The mere fact that plaintiff at his location in Arkansas may be treating patients from other states who must travel interstate does not result in practicing his profession in interstate commerce as the transportation of such patients is incidental. The practice of his profession as disclosed by the allegations of his complaint is neither trade nor commerce within Section 1 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, nor are there any allegations in the complaint indicating that the actions of defendants here complained of resulted in a monopoly within the provisions of Section 2 of the Act. Plaintiff has not been prevented from practicing his profession, but in the final analysis his complaint is that he could practice it more profitably but for the acts of the defendants. The Sherman Anti-Trust Act was not primarily to protect the individual but to protect the general public economically, and a private party may not recover under the act unless there has been an injury to the general public economically. Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,039], 310 U. S. 469; Spears Free Clinic and Hospital v. Cleere, 10 Cir. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,276], 197 F. 2d 125; United States v. Oregon State Medical Society, Ore. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,703], 95 F. Supp. 103; United States v. Oregon Med. Soc. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,264], 343 U. S. 326; Northern California M. D. Ass'n. v. Interment Ass'n., S. D. Cal. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,715], 120 F. Supp. 93; Kolb v. Pacific Maritime Association, N. D. Cal. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,363], 141 F. Supp. 264. In Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, supra, the Supreme Court has pointed out the scope and purpose of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. In the course of the opinion in that case the court in referring to the purpose of the enactment of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act said:

> "It was enacted in the era of 'trusts' and of 'combinations' of businesses and of capital organized and directed to control of the market by suppression of competition in the marketing of goods and services, the monopolistic tendency of which had become a matter of public concern. The end sought was the prevention of restraints to free competition in business and commercial transactions which tended to restrict production, raise prices or otherwise control the goods and services, all of which had come to be regarded as a special form of public injury."

Again, it is said:

> "In the cases considered by this Court since the Standard Oil case in 1911 some form of restraint of commercial competition has been the sine qua non to the condemnation of contracts, combinations or conspiracies under the Sherman Act, and in general restraints upon competition have been condemned only when their purpose or effect was to raise or fix the market price. It is in this sense that it is said that the restraints, actual or intended, prohibited by the Sherman Act are only those which are so substantial as to affect market prices. Restraints on competition or on the course of trade in the merchandising of articles moving in interstate commerce is not enough, unless the restraint is shown to have or is intended to have an effect upon prices in the market or otherwise to deprive purchasers or consumers of the advantages which they derive from free competition."

[Related Rulings]

In United States v. Oregon State Medical Society, supra, the United States brought suit against the Oregon State Medical Society and others to restrain alleged violation by defendants of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. The court in holding that the defendants were not guilty of any of the charges against them, among other things, said:

> "The practice of medicine as conducted within the State of Oregon by doctors of Oregon, including defendants, is not trade or commerce within the meaning of Section 1 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Law, 15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 1, nor is it commerce within the meaning of the constitutional grant of power to Congress 'To regulate Commerce * * * among the several States'."

On direct appeal to the Supreme Court this decision was affirmed and the Supreme Court in the course of its decision, in referring to the finding that the practice of medicine was not trade or commerce within the meaning of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, said:

> "If that finding in both aspects is not to be overturned as clearly erroneous, it, of course, disposes of this charge * * *."

The decision of the Supreme Court is of significance in another aspect. Plaintiff here relies quite strongly on American Medical Association v. United States [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,254], 317 U. S. 519. The decision of the Supreme Court in United States v. Oregon State Medical Society, supra, points out that that decision is clearly distinguishable because it arose under Section 3 of the Sherman Act. Referring to this question the court said:

> "American Medical Assn. v. United States [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,254], 317 U. S. 519, does not stand for the proposition that furnishing of prepaid medical care on a local plane is interstate commerce. That was a prosecution under Section 3 of the Sherman Act of a conspiracy to restrain trade or commerce in the District of Columbia. Interstate commerce was not necessary to the operation of the statute there."

In Spears Free Clinic and Hospital v. Cleere, supra, action was brought against the Medical Society of Denver City and County, former and present members of the State Board of Health and former and present officials and trustees of the Medical Society based on alleged violations of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. There it was alleged that "numerous persons from all of the United States and from many foreign countries" regularly came to the plaintiff institution for treatment. The complaint further alleged that the defendants combined and conspired to prevent the licensing of the institution and to prevent the operation and maintenance of the institution and to further allocate to various members of the medical profession within the State the entire practice of the healing arts to the exclusion and restraint of the practice of chiropractic. There were further allegations that the defendants did certain acts to prevent the maintenance of the hospital as a chiropractic institution and to monopolize the entire practice of the healing arts within the State of Colorado in the medical profession. Referring to these charges the court among other things said:

> "The practice of the healing arts in Colorado, including chiropractic, is wholly local in character. The alleged conspiracy and the acts alleged to have been done in furtherance thereof had for their purpose and object the monopolization and restraint of purely local activities. No price fixing or price maintenance for professional or other services was involved. There was no intent to injure, obstruct or restrain interstate or foreign commerce. The mere fact that a fortuitous and incidental effect of such conspiracy and acts may be to reduce the number of persons who will come from other states and countries to the Spears Hospital for chiropractic treatments does not create such a relation between interstate and foreign commerce and such local activities as to make them a part of such commerce.
>
> "To come within the purview of the Sherman Act the restraint of commerce or the obstruction of commerce must be direct and substantial and not merely incidental or remote."

[Conclusion]

As has been observed, plaintiff's complaint in substance is that the practice of his profession would have been more profitable to him had the defendants not deprived him of membership in the Washington County Medical Society. Plaintiff was not prevented from practicing his profession and the complaint, we think, is wholly lacking in allegations essential to a cause of action under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

[Affirmed]

The judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

[¶ 68,855] John P. Kinsey, individually, and as a Director and Stockholder of Monroe Paper Products Company; Lawrence G. Kunkel and The Waterbury Corrugated Container Co., individually and as Stockholders of said Monroe Paper Products Company v. Burton S. Knapp, Charles E. Raney, George A. Blum, Don B. Leathers, and Arthur W. Sempliner, individually and as Directors and Stockholders of said Monroe Paper Products Company, and as Trustees under Voting Trust Agreement dated as of December 31, 1953 pertaining to stock herein; George J. Huber, individually and as Chairman of Stockholders' Committee of Monroe Paper Products Company stock, and said Monroe Paper Products Company.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan, Southern Division. No. 13179. Filed July 30, 1957.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Price Fixing—Voting Trust—Agreement Not To Sell Below Specified Price—Refusal To Deal—Legality.—A voting trust agreement, under which stockholders agreed that the deposited stock could not be sold for less than $15.00 per share and only if a purchaser buys all of the deposited stock, was not, as a matter of law, void under the Sherman Act. Price fixing under the Sherman Act is illegal per se, if it affects commerce among the states. The Act does not restrict the right of a trader to exercise his own independent discretion as to the parties with whom he will deal. In the instant case, the stockholders simply authorized the trustees not to sell to any person who would not buy all of their stock at $15.00 per share. Such authority of the trustees to sell only upon certain conditions or to refuse to sell at all is a feature indispensable to the existence of such agreements. The Sherman Act should not be construed to prohibit such agreements. Furthermore, it was doubtful whether the activity involved could be characterized as commerce among the states.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.785, 2011.181.

Michigan Antitrust Law

Combinations and Conspiracies Under State Laws—Price Fixing—Voting Trust—Agreement Not To Sell Below Specified Price—Legality.—A voting trust agreement, under which stockholders agreed that the deposited stock could not be sold for less than $15.00 per share and only if a purchaser buys all of the deposited stock, was not, as a matter of law, void under the Michigan antitrust laws. Only contracts embodying unreasonable price fixing provisions are illegal under Michigan law. The trust agreement was not unreasonable; it was designed for the protection of legitimate interests of the parties and it was not specially injurious to the public.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2335.

For the plaintiffs: George E. Brand and George E. Brand, Jr., Detroit, Mich.

For the defendants: Hugh Francis, Detroit, Mich., for Monroe Paper Products Co.; Stanton, Sempliner, Dewey & Knight, Detroit, Mich. (Fischer, Sprague, Franklin & Ford, Detroit, Mich., of counsel), for Knapp et al.; Weipert & Weipert, Monroe, Mich., substituted for Knapp et al.

Opinion of the Court

[Motion]

FRANK A. PICARD, District Judge [In full text except for omissions indicated by asterisks]: Plaintiffs move this court, pursuant to Rule 54(b) FRCP, to invalidate a voting trust agreement while reserving judgment on damages and other related issues of fact raised by their complaint.

Findings of Fact

[Parties]

All plaintiffs are stockholders of Monroe Paper Products Company, and plaintiff Kinsey is, in addition, a director. Defendants, Knapp, Blum, Raney, Leathers and Sempliner are directors and also trustees under the above voting trust agreement. Defendant Huber, neither a trustee nor director, was chairman of the stockholders' committee which allegedly participated in creating the trust agreement.

[Voting Trust Agreement]

The controversial trust, which empowered defendant trustees to vote 95,244 shares of Monroe's stock was created at a time when plaintiffs and defendants were waging a fight to gain financial and managerial control of the corporation. The fight followed the death of Alex J. Groesbeck, its president, on May 10, 1953, owning 32,814½ of the 190,000 shares of Monroe stock and who had been for years the dominant figure in the company's operation, control and management. Ex-Governor Groesbeck died in 1953 and in September, 1953 National Container Corporation made a public offer to purchase all, but not less than 55.6% of Monroe's outstanding stock thus precipitating the battle for control, which first stage began in September, 1953 with the establishment of an escrow agreement by defendants and was augmented in December, 1953, when the voting trust agreement was consummated.

Defendants' escrow agreement, which was put into effect immediately after National Container's purchase offer, but shortly before the 1953 stockholders' meeting, was designated to defeat acceptance of that offer. That escrow agreement provided that any person wishing to purchase company stock for $10.00 per share could deposit money in a fund to be held by the Monroe State Bank for that purpose. Plaintiffs allege that defendants, by soliciting company customers, suppliers, employees, and by contributions of $15,000.00 by Raney, $15,000.00 by Leathers and $5,000.00 by Blum, were able to secure deposit of $162,000.00 in escrow with which was purchased 15,538 shares of company stock both through means criticized by plaintiffs as fraudulent and with these secured proxies as well as other stock controlled by them, along with their individual holdings, enabled them to defeat the National Container offer and secure their own re-election as directors.

But the threat that plaintiffs might still be able to purchase controlling interest in Monroe shortly, remained, so to neutralize this possibility the voting trust agreement was executed on December 31, 1953, as a permanent proxy to defendants for a period of five years. Plaintiffs claim that the voting trust, thus created again by alleged devious means, is void or at least voidable as a matter of law and they have enumerated the following five reasons why that voting trust is void and one reason why it is voidable.

Void—because it

(1) Violates the Michigan Restraint of Trade Law M. S. A. 28.31(5) and 28.36;

(2) Violates the Sherman Antitrust Act 15 U. S. C. 1;

(3) Violates Michigan Common Law against restraints on the alienation of property;

(4) Places each director in an inconsistent position as director and trustee in violation of his fiduciary duties as the former; and

(5) Defendants, in creating the trust violated 15 U. S. C. 78cc and Rule X 10B-5 of the Securities Exchange Commission.

Voidable—because

(1) Neither the agreement, nor certificates issued pursuant thereto, were registered as required by the Securities Act of 1933, 15 U. S. C. 77a et seq., and Michigan Blue Sky Law M. S. A. 19.747.

Conclusions of Law

We briefly discuss and decide these contentions seriatim.

[Michigan Antitrust Law]

1. Is trust agreement void because in violation of Michigan's laws against Restraint of Trade?

Sub-paragraph (5) of M. S. A. 28.31 provides inter alia, that it shall be unlawful for two or more persons to agree not to sell any article or commodity below a common fixed price, or in any manner establish or settle the price of any article so as to directly or indirectly preclude free and unrestricted competition for the purchase thereof. M. S. A. 28.36 declares that any contract violation of sub-paragraph (5) is against public policy and absolutely void.

True, under the trust the stockholders agreed that the stock deposited thereunder could not be sold for (a) less than $15.00 per share and (b) only if the purchaser would purchase all of the stock so deposited. But we do not agree with plaintiffs' claim that all price fixing is illegal under Michigan law; on the contrary only contracts embodying unreasonable price fixing provisions. S-K Oil Co. v. Mac's Auto Mart, Inc., 329 Mich. 351. In Hubbard v. Miller, 27 Mich. 14 at p. 19, Chief Justice Christiancy narrowed the prohibition to the reasonableness of any contract encompassing price fixing. He said:

> ". . . if, considered with reference to the situation, business and objects of the parties, and in the light of all the surrounding circumstances with reference to which the contract was made, the restraint contracted for appears to have been for a just and honest purpose, for the protection of the legitimate interests of the party in whose favor it is imposed, reasonable as between them and not specially injurious to the public, the restraint will be held valid."

We hold that at this point this trust agreement is not unreasonable from any angle, "business situation," "objects of the parties" designed "for the protection of the legitimate interests of the parties" or "not specially injurious to the public" as a matter of law.

[Sherman Act]

2. Does the trust agreement violate the Sherman trust law?

Here again plaintiff bases invalidity upon alleged price fixing and restraint of trade features of the agreement. Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act condemns as illegal

> "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations."

While the Sherman Act, like the Michigan Restraint of Trade Act, does not encompass and condemn all activity that may restrain trade (Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,039], 310 U. S. 469) unlike the Michigan Act, price fixing under the Sherman Act is illegal per se (U. S. v. McKesson and Robbins [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,368], 351 U. S. 305) if it affects commerce among the States, and is not exempt by the law,[1] the good intentions of the parties to the agreement, and the reasonableness thereof to the contrary notwithstanding.

Here we are not concerned with reasonableness, dependent upon circumstances and facts surrounding the execution of the trust agreement, but only with whether the agreement fixes prices so that it restrains commerce among the states.

And again we find that plaintiffs' contention that the trust agreement in question fixed prices is not well founded. As stated in U. S. v. Bausch & Lomb Co. [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,224], 321 U. S. 707 p. 722, quoting U. S. v. Colgate & Co., 250 U. S. 300,

> ". . . the Sherman Act 'does not restrict the long recognized right of trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he will deal. And, of course, he may announce in advance the circumstances under which he will refuse to sell.'"

It may be appreciated, therefore, that limitation upon exercise of this right is that the seller may not, under the Sherman Act, go beyond exercise of the right, and unduly hinder, by contract or other means, the free natural flow of interstate commerce. In the case at bar the stockholders under the trust agreement simply authorized the trustees not to sell to any person who would not buy all of their stock at $15.00 per share. They went no further. Such authority of trustees to sell only upon certain conditions, or indeed, to refuse to sell at all, is a feature indispensable to the existence of such agreements. Voting trusts are authorized in nearly all, if not all, of the forty-eight states. We do not divine the congressional intent, at the time the Sherman Act was enacted, to have been to outlaw such agreements by implication and we will not make that result possible by abuse of the power of judicial construction.

Aside from the foregoing, we entertain grave doubts as to whether the trustees and the stockholders under the trust agreement limited activity that may be characterized as "commerce among the several states." The trust was consummated in Michigan, and it is clear that, for the most part, economic repercussions therefrom will not reach beyond the borders of this state. See Lawson v. Woodmere [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,904], 217 F. 2d 151; Spears Free Clinic and Hospital v. Cleere [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,276], 197 F. 2d 125.

We deny the motion insofar as it is based upon the instant contention.

* * *

[Scope of Decision]

We do not in this opinion decide anything on the facts. We do not hold that it is not possible that the proof might alter our decision as to whether or not this trust agreement is void or voidable on the facts. We do not pass upon any of the alleged wrongful acts of these directors.

* * *

There is nothing in this decision that prevents any stockholder or anyone else from now purchasing the stock of the Monroe Paper Products Company wherever he may find it or for whatever price. This partial judgment is aimed to free the stock of this corporation as much as we can in view of the circumstances under which we find the corporation at the present time and to temporarily, at least, dispose of the alleged double and triple damage claims of plaintiff based on the trust agreement by being void as a matter of law.

[1] Miller-Tydings Act 50 Stat. 693 and the McGuire Act 66 Stat. 632.

[¶ 68,856] United States v. Parke, Davis and Company, G. L. Walker and S. M. Dripps.

In the United States District Court for the District of Columbia. Criminal Action No. 444-57. Dated November 4, 1957.

Case No. 1339 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Resale Price Fixing—Price Fixing Through Refusal To Deal—Legality—Agreement To Fix Resale Price—Sufficiency of Evidence.—A manufacturer of drugs and two of its officers were acquitted of charges that they conspired with drug wholesalers and retailers to establish, maintain, and enhance the prices at which the manufacturer's products were sold to retailers and to the public in the District of Columbia and the State of Virginia. On a motion for a judgment of acquittal, the court held that there was a complete lack of evidence indicating any conspiracy and that the evidence did not establish the existence of any agreement to control prices. The manufacturer and its officers did not prohibit retailers or wholesalers from disposing of the manufacturer's products; they merely said to them, if you sell the products below our recommended list price or retail price, we will not, in the future, deal with you. The fact that a dealer, looking to his own future business and his future financial interest, decides that he is going to maintain the recommended price does not constitute an agreement.

See Resale Price Fixing, Vol. 1, ¶ 3015.20, 3015.70, 3060.

For the plaintiff: Edward R. Kenney, Department of Justice; Richard C. Shadyac; and Herbert F. Peters, Jr.

For the defendants: Gerhard A. Gesell and John H. Schafer, both of Covington & Burling, Washington, D. C.; and James E. Tobin, of Miller, Canfield, Paddock, and Stone, Detroit, Mich.

Ruling of the Court

[Motion]

The Court [EDWARD A. TAMM, District Judge, In full text]: The present motions for judgment of acquittal of all defendants are addressed to the court under Rule 29-A of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure which provides that such a motion may be made at the termination of the Government's case and that the Court may, if it believes the evidence is insufficient to sustain a conviction of such offense, grant the motion.

The Court has taken the opportunity over the weekend of reading the well-written memoranda which counsel for the Government and counsel for the Defendant have filed with the Court in this case. I have read the majority of the cases cited in those memoranda.

[Colgate Decision]

There are two cases in the Supreme Court that have caused me considerable concern because I had some difficulty, at least in the first reading, in reconciling the ruling in the case of U. S. v. Bausch & Lomb with the case of U. S. v. Colgate and Company. I do think, however, that the Bausch & Lomb case is readily distinguishable from the present case as Mr. Gesell has pointed out, by the factual situations.

In the Bausch & Lomb case there was a complicated series of licensing agreements, a system of franchises to retail dealers. In addition, the manufacturer, Bausch & Lomb, was the majority stockholder in the intermediate wholesale corporations with whom the defendant Soft-Lite was alleged to be conspiring.

It does seem to me in the present case that there is a complete lack of evidence indicating any conspiracy. I cannot conclude upon the basis of the evidence that there is factually any agreement between the manufacturer and the wholesalers. The Colgate case is pretty well summarized in the last paragraph appearing on page 304 wherein the Supreme Court in quoting from the trial court's opinion said, and I quote:

> "In the view taken by the Court, the indictment here fairly presents the question of whether a manufacturer of products shipped in interstate trade, is subject to criminal prosecution under the Sherman Act, for entering into a combination in restraint of such trade and commerce, because he agrees with his wholesale and retail customers, upon prices claimed by them to be fair and reasonable, at which the same may be resold, and declines to sell his products to those who will not thus stipulate as to prices. This, at the threshold, presents for the determination of the court how far one may control and dispose of his own property; that is to say, whether there is any limitation thereon, if he proceeds in respect thereto in a lawful and bona fide manner. That he may not do so fraudulently, collusively, and in unlawful combination with others, may be conceded. But it by no means follows that, being a manufacturer of a given article, he may not, without incurring any criminal liability, refuse absolutely to sell the same at any price, or to sell at a named sum to a customer, with the understanding that such customer will resell only at an agreed price between them, and, should the customer not observe the understanding as to retail prices, exercise his undoubted right to decline to further deal with such person."

The Colgate opinion emphasizes the fact that under the Colgate system of distribution the retailer could do anything that he wanted with the product when he received it. He could sell it at a high price or a low price, he could keep it or he could throw it away, and he suffered no penalty. But, if he sold it at a price lower than the recommended retail price, the manufacturer would not in the future do business with him.

[Evidence]

It seems to me in the present case factually that the same situation exists. The defendants do not prohibit the retailer or the wholesaler from disposing of products purchased from the manufacturer, but they say to him, if you sell them below our recommended list price or retail price, we will not in the future deal with you.

I am of the further opinion that rather than there being any agreement to control prices between these defendants and the wholesalers, that legally the attitude of the defendants—the defendant Parke, Davis Company—towards the wholesaler was and is the same as that attitude towards retailers.

In other words, when representatives of Parke, Davis Company went to the Gilpin people or to the District Wholesale Drug Company, they said in effect, you can dispose of these goods as you see fit but if you sell them to retailers that are not maintaining our prices, we will not sell to you in the future. I think that doesn't constitute an agreement when the wholesaler, looking to his own future business and his future financial interest, decides that he is going to maintain this price.

[Motion Granted]

I believe, upon the basis of the evidence before the Court, that it is insufficient to sustain a conviction of the offenses charged in the first and third counts of the indictment. I believe that the Court must grant the defendant's motion for judgment of acquittal as to all three defendants.

Mr. Gesell: If your Honor please, should we be here tomorrow when the jury is back?

The Court: It is not necessary. When the jury returns in the morning, the Court will advise them as to the nature of the motion that was made, of the Court's ruling upon the motion and will tell the jurors that they are relieved from further responsibility in the case. You may be present if you desire to do so. It is not required.

[¶ 68,857] United States v. The Kansas City Star Company, Roy A. Roberts, as President, and Emil A. Sees, as Director of Advertising of said corporate defendant.

In the United States District Court for the Western District of Missouri. Civil No. 7989. Filed November 15, 1957.

Case No. 1152 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Acquiring Control of Competitor or Related Company—News and Newspaper Advertising.—A newspaper company, its president, and its advertising director were prohibited by a consent decree from acquiring any interest in any commercial radio or television broadcasting station in Metropolitan Kansas City, except upon application to the court and establishing that such acquisition will not unduly restrain competition or tend to create a monoply in the dissemination of news and advertising in the area. They were further prohibited from acquiring any interest in or assets of any person engaged in the publication of a newspaper having a circulation in Metropolitan Kansas City.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.833; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.120.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Exclusive Dealing and Tying Arrangements.—A newspaper company, its president, and its advertising director were prohibited by a consent decree from negotiating for publication, accepting for publication or publishing advertisements, or entering into contracts for the publication of advertisements, on or accompanied by the condition, agreement, or understanding that the advertiser shall not use, or shall limit or restrict his use of, other advertising media. Refusals to deal and discriminatory practices having as their purpose exclusive dealing or tying arrangements also were prohibited.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.690, 2005.848; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.300, 2610.850.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Discriminations.—A newspaper company, its president, and its advertising director were prohibited by a consent decree from discriminating as to space, location, or arrangement of advertisements, except as such discrimination may be necessitated by the objective dictates of the make-up of the paper; discriminating or threatening to discriminate as to credit having been made or to be made available to an advertiser unless the company is able to establish that the advertiser has a poor credit rating, or otherwise fails to meet reasonable standards promulgated and uniformly applied, without regard to whether the advertiser advertises or proposes to advertise in or through any other advertising medium, expends any particular portion of its advertising funds for advertising through any other medium, or refuses to spend on advertising in media of the defendants any amounts specified or set by the defendants.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.630; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.280.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Refusal To Deal.—A newspaper company, its president, and its advertising director were prohibited by a consent decree from refusing to publish advertisements where the advertiser and the advertisements meet reasonable standards promulgated and uniformly applied by the defendants or from refusing to sell general advertising separately in the morning, evening or Sunday newspapers published by the defendants. There was a similar prohibition as to classified advertising. The defendants were not, however, prohibited from granting discounts, not to exceed a stated per cent, on multiple insertions in two or more of the defendants' newspapers.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.785; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.720.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Permissive Provisions—Retention of Security Interest.—A consent decree requiring a newspaper to sell physical assets and good will connected with a radio and television station did not prohibit the newspaper from retaining a security interest to secure payment of the purchase price or from reacquiring such assets upon default by the purchaser.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8321.48, 8421.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Nature and Use—Applicability of Provisions.—A consent decree entered against a newspaper company, its president, and its advertising director provided that the provisions of the decree should be applicable to each individual defendant only for so long as he retains a financial interest in or is employed by the defendant company.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8241.15.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Specific Relief —Divestiture.—A newspaper was required to sell to a person or persons, having no interest in the newspaper and having been approved by the Federal Communications Commission, all physical assets and good will connected with a radio station and a television station. The transfer of licenses also had to be approved by the Commission.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8301.10.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Specific Relief —Newspaper Subscription Options.—A newspaper was required to permit, on other than sales of single copies of its newspapers through newsstands and news vendors, every person at his election to subscribe to its morning, evening, and Sunday newpapers on the following options: morning and Sunday; evening and Sunday; or morning, evening, and Sunday. The subscription price of the morning and Sunday option or of the evening and Sunday option should bear a fair differential from the price of the morning, evening, and Sunday option.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8301.50.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Specific Relief —Notice Requirements.—A newspaper was required (1) to publish, for four weeks, once a week, the full terms of the decree entered against it in all editions within one twenty-four hour period, and to publish for the following six months, once a month, the substantive terms of the decree in all editions within one twenty-four hour period; (2) to notify all regular advertisers in its newspapers that it will sell advertising space in its morning, evening, and Sunday papers at rates, terms, and conditions which comply with the terms of the decree; (3) and to advise, in writing, all officers, advertising agents, advertising solicitors, and all other employees in its advertising department of the terms of the decree and that each is subject to the provisions of the decree.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8301.60.

For the plaintiff: Victor R. Hansen, Assistant Attorney General; and Earl A. Jinkinson, W. D. Kilgore, Jr., George D. Reycraft, Charles F. B. McAleer, Raymond P. Hernacki, Attorneys, Department of Justice.

For the defendants: Henry N. Ess, Elton L. Marshall, Carl E. Enggas, and Colvin A. Peterson, Jr.

Final Judgment

RICHARD M. DUNCAN, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on January 6, 1953; the defendants being represented by their respective counsel having appeared and filed their answer to said complaint denying the substantive allegations thereof, and the plaintiff and said defendants by their respective attorneys having severally consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein and without admission by any party with respect to any such issue,

Now, Therefore, before taking of any testimony and without trial or adjudication of any fact or law herein, and upon consent as aforesaid of all the parties hereto,

It Is Hereby Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed as follows:

I

[Sherman Act]

This Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter hereof and of all parties hereto. The complaint states claims upon which relief may be granted against said defendants under Sections 1 and 2 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled, "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Act, as amended.

II

[Definitions]

As used in this Final Judgment:

(A) "Metropolitan Kansas City" shall mean the area comprising the Counties of

Jackson and Clay in Missouri and the Counties of Johnson and Wyandotte in Kansas;

(B) "Person" shall mean any individual, partnership, firm, corporation, association or other business or legal entity;

(C) "Classified advertising" shall mean the advertising carried in the classified columns of defendants' newspapers;

(D) "General advertising" shall mean all display advertising carried in defendants' newspapers except that placed by stores located in Metropolitan Kansas City quotting items and prices or otherwise promoting their retail sales.

III

[Applicability of Judgment]

The provisions of this Final Judgment applicable to any defendant shall apply to such defendant, its subsidiaries, directors, agents, employees, successors and assigns, and to all persons in active concert or participation with a defendant who receive actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise.

IV

[Divestiture—Acquisitions]

(A) Defendant The Kansas City Star Company is ordered and directed within a reasonable time to sell to a person or persons having no interest in The Kansas City Star Company and being approved by the Federal Communications Commission all physical assets and good will connected with the Radio Station WDAF and the Television Station WDAF-TV, and upon approval of the Federal Communications Commission to transfer the licenses to such stations to the approved person or persons;

(B) Defendants are jointly and severally enjoined and restrained from acquiring any interest in any commercial radio or television broadcasting station in Metropolitan Kansas City except upon application to this Court and establishing to the satisfaction of this Court that such acquisition will not unduly restrain competition or tend to create a monopoly in the dissemination of news and advertising in Metropolitan Kansas City;

(C) Provided, however, that nothing contained in this Section IV shall prohibit defendant The Kansas City Star Company from retaining a security interest in the physical assets and good will connected with Radio Station WDAF and Television Station WDAF-TV to secure the payment of the purchase price thereof or from reacquiring the physical assets and good will connected with Radio Station WDAF and Television Station WDAF-TV upon default by the purchaser or purchasers thereof in which event defendant The Kansas City Star Company shall have a further reasonable time to sell such assets and good will to another qualified person or persons as provided in subsection (A) of this Section IV.

V

[Practices Enjoined]

Defendants are jointly and severally enjoined and restrained from:

(A) Refusing to publish or threatening to refuse to publish advertisments where the advertiser and the advertisements meet the reasonable standards promulgated and uniformly applied by defendants;

(B) Discriminating as to space, location or arrangement of advertisements except as such discrimination may be necessitated by the objective dictates of the make-up of the paper; provided, however, that this subsection (B) shall not be deemed to require defendants necessarily to give an advertiser a location which has heretofore historically been accorded to another advertiser;

(C) Discriminating or threatening to discriminate as to credit having been made or to be made available to an advertiser unless the defendant is able to establish that the advertiser has a poor credit rating, or otherwise fails to meet the reasonable standards promulgated and uniformly applied by defendants; without regard to whether the advertiser:

(1) advertises or proposes to advertise in or through any other advertising medium,

(2) expends any particular portion of its advertising funds for advertising through any other advertising medium, or

(3) refuses to spend on advertising in media of defendants any amounts specified or set by defendants;

(D) Negotiating for publication, accepting for publication or publishing advertisements, or entering into contracts for the publication of advertisements, on or accompanied by the condition, agreement or understanding that the advertiser shall not use, or shall limit or restrict his use of, other advertising media;

(E) Acquiring any interest in or assets of any person engaged in the publication of a newspaper having a circulation in Metropolitan Kansas City.

VI

[Refusals to Deal]

Defendants are enjoined and restrained from, directly or indirectly:

(A) Refusing to contract to sell, or refusing to sell, general advertising separately in the morning, evening or Sunday newspapers published by defendants; provided, however, that nothing in this Section VI shall prohibit defendants from granting discounts on such advertising on multiple insertions in two or more of defendants' morning, evening or Sunday newspapers except that such discounts in no event shall exceed thirty percent (30%) of the sum of the rates for the same amount of advertising space when purchased separately;

(B) Refusing to contract to sell, or refusing to sell, classified advertising separately in the morning, evening or Sunday newspapers published by defendants except as to the following classifications: cards of thanks; personals; situations wanted; farm and dairy products; antiques and pottery; household goods; wanted-rooms or board; wanted to rent-farms; wanted to rent; and other non-commercial classified advertising designed to satisfy human wants; provided, however, nothing in this subsection (B) shall prohibit defendants from granting discounts on such advertising on multiple insertions in two or more of defendants' morning, evening or Sunday newspapers, provided that such discounts shall not exceed thirty-five percent (35%) of the sum of the rates for the same amount of advertising when purchased separately.

VII

[Subscription Options]

Other than sales of single copies of defendants' newspapers through newsstands and news vendors, defendants shall permit every person at his election to subscribe to the morning, evening and Sunday newspapers published by defendants on the following options:

(A) Morning and Sunday;

(B) Evening and Sunday;

(C) Morning, evening and Sunday.

The subscription price of the morning and Sunday option or of the evening and Sunday option shall bear a fair differential from the price of the morning, evening and Sunday option.

Provided, however, that nothing in this Section VII shall be deemed to require any change in defendants' present plan of publishing approximately 12 hours of news coverage in each of their morning and evening newspapers; and provided, further, that in determining what is a fair differential, consideration must be given (except as to Section VI) to the injunctive, divestiture and other provisions of this Final Judgment, and to defendants' sound business judgment considering the objective of defendants to continue their present plan of publishing as referred to above.

VIII

[Notice of Decree]

Defendant, The Kansas City Star Company, is ordered and directed upon entry of this Final Judgment to:

(A) (1) publish for four weeks, once a week, the full terms of this Final Judgment in all editions within one twenty-four hour period; and

(2) publish for the following six months, once a month, the substantive terms of this Final Judgment in all editions within one twenty-four hour period.

(B) Notify promptly all regular advertisers now carrying national advertising, general advertising, resort advertising, legal advertising, classified automobile advertising, and classified help wanted advertising in The Kansas City Star that it will contract to sell and sell advertising space in its morning paper, its evening paper and its Sunday paper at rates, terms and conditions which comply with Section VI of this Final Judgment:

(C) Advise promptly, in writing, all officers, advertising agents, advertising solicitors and all other employees in its advertising departments of the terms of this Final Judgment and that each and every such person is subject to the provisions of this

Judgment; and it shall make readily available to such persons a copy of this Final Judgment and shall inform them of such availability.

IX

[Individual Defendants]

The Provisions of this Final Judgment applicable to the individual defendants Roberts and Sees shall be applicable to each such defendant only for so long as he retains a financial interest in or is employed by the defendant The Kansas City Star Company.

X

[Inspection and Compliance]

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, upon written request of the Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to any defendant made to its or his principal office, be permitted:

(A) Access, during the office hours of such defendant, to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and records and documents in the possession or under the control of such defendant relating to any matters contained in this Final Judgment;

(B) Subject to the reasonable convenience of such defendant and without restraint or interference from it or him, to interview officers or employees of such defendant who may have counsel present regarding any such matters.

Upon such request said defendants shall submit such reports in writing to the Department of Justice with respect to matters contained in this Final Judgment as may from time to time be necessary to the enforcement of this Final Judgment. No information obtained by the means provided in this Section X shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment or as otherwise required by law.

XI

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to this Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the carrying out of this Final Judgment or the modification of any of the provisions thereof and for the purpose of enforcement of compliance therewith and punishment for violation thereof.

XII

[Effective Date]

This Final Judgment shall become effective ninety (90) days after the date of entry thereof.

[¶ 68,858] Bernard Fein, Harry B. Leslie and Warren S. Schoenthaler, individually and as directors of Security Banknote Company v. Security Banknote Company, Columbian Bank Note Company, James A. Austin, Dudley E. Dawson, Jr., George W. Goldsworthy, Jr., Oswald Maland, Horatio W. Manning, Charles H. Sulzberger, William P. Hunt, Charles R. Koerwer, Jr., Ricardo H. Kriete and Latin American Investment Corporation, S. A.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil 126-6. Filed November 13, 1957.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Acquisitions of Stock or Assets—Private Enforcement of Prohibition Against Acquisitions—Preliminary Injunctive Relief—Consummated Acquisition.—Three directors of a company, engaged in the business of printing and engraving stock certificates and other documents, were denied a preliminary injunction in their action to restrain their company from commingling the assets of a competitor which the company had acquired. There was insufficient positive or affirmative proof that the acquisition violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act, and the directors failed to show irreparable loss or damage. The directors merely alleged the possibility of actions by the government and by private parties for treble damages as threatened damage. The acquisition had been fully consummated; therefore, there was no basis for granting preventative relief. Furthermore, preliminary injunctions will not be issued if the threatened damage can be adequately compensated for by monetary damages. Also, the directors did not act promptly after learning of the intended acquisition, but stood by while the acquisition was completed.

See Acquisitions of Stock or Assets, Vol. 1, ¶ 4208.15; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9026.15.

For the plaintiffs: Stroock & Stroock & Lavan (Morton L. Deitch, Milton N. Scofield, David Lubart, E. Millimet, and Roger S. Kuhn, of counsel), New York, N. Y.

For the defendants: Dwight, Royall, Harris, Koegel & Caskey (John A. Wells, H. Allen Lochner, Justin W. D'Atri, and Herbert C. Earnshaw, of counsel), New York, N. Y.; and Crowell & Leibman (Morris I. Leibman and Donald S. Macleod, of counsel), Chicago, Ill., for Security Banknote Co., James A. Austin, George W. Goldsworthy, Jr., Oswald Maland, Charles H. Sulzberger, William P. Hunt, and Charles R. Koerwer, Jr. Duke and Landis (David B. Landis and Herbert A. Harris, of counsel), New York, N. Y., for Columbian Bank Note Co.

Opinion

[Preliminary Injunction]

LEVET, District Judge [In full text]: The plaintiffs above named, stated to be suing individually and as directors of Security Banknote Company (hereinafter called Security), seek a preliminary injunction against certain acts of Security with regard to the acquisition of the assets of the Columbian Bank Note Company (hereinafter called Columbian). The plaintiffs predicate jurisdiction in this suit upon Section 16 of the Clayton Act, Title 15 USCA § 26, which in part is as follows:

> "Injunctive relief for private parties; exception
>
> "Any person, firm, corporation, or association shall be entitled to sue for and have injunctive relief, in any court of the United States having jurisdiction over the parties, against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws, including sections 13, 14, 18 and 19 of this title, when and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity, under the rules governing such proceedings, and upon the execution of proper bond against damages for an injunction improvidently granted and a showing that the danger of irreparable loss or damage is immediate, a preliminary injunction may issue: * * *"

[Acquisition of Assets]

The factual basis upon which plaintiffs predicate their asserted right to the relief requested is as follows:

1. Security is a Delaware corporation qualified to do business in the State of New York; Columbian is an Illinois corporation qualified to do business in the State of New York;

2. Security is said to be subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission;

3. Columbian and Security entered into a contract pursuant to which Security acquired all the assets of Columbian and assumed (with certain exceptions) all the liabilities of Columbian. This contract was consummated on October 18, 1957;

4. Prior to October 18, 1957, the principal business of Security and Columbian was the printing and engraving of stock certificates, bonds, debentures, warrants, corporate securities, etc.;

5. The plaintiffs contend that the three major companies engaged in this bank note business were defendants Security and Columbian and the American Banknote Company (hereinafter called American); that the bank note business in the United States prior to October 18, 1957, was the subject of active and intense competition between the three principal companies just mentioned. The plaintiffs assert that American did approximately one-third, Security, one-third, and Columbian, one-fifth of this total business, while the remainder was distributed among other companies; that the acquisition by Security of the assets of Columbian will eliminate competition between these two defendants and that this creates a violation of the antitrust laws of the United States, Title 15 USCA § 18.

[Antitrust Violation]

The defendants object to a preliminary injunction (to whatever effect such injunction would now lie) upon various grounds:

1. The burden rests on the plaintiffs to establish reasonable cause to believe that Section 7 of the Clayton Act has been violated. Lowe v. Consolidated Edison Co., D. C. S. D. N. Y., 1941, 67 F. Supp. 287; Hall Signal Co. v. General Ry. Signal Co., 2 Cir., 1907, 153 Fed. 907; Universal Major Electric App. v. Universal Major Corp., D. C. S. D. N. Y., 1956, 138 F. Supp. 745; Margolis v. Franks, D. C. S. D. N. Y., 1956, 138 F. Supp. 9. The defendants energetically and extensively dispute the allegations of the control of the bank note business aforesaid. They assert that plaintiffs' proof made upon this motion does not sustain this burden. I have concluded that there is in fact insufficient positive or affirmative proof by the plaintiffs of this allegation of violation of the antitrust acts.

[Threatened Injury]

2. The plaintiffs, having conceded by their complaint and affidavits that the exchange of Security stock for Columbian assets has been fully consummated in law and fact, they have no basis for intervention under Title 15 USCA § 26 permitting preventative or injunctive relief by reason of a threatened violation of the antitrust act. Obviously, the purpose of a preliminary injunction is to preserve the status quo pendente lite, not to undo completed transactions. See Warner Bros. Pictures v. Gittone, 3 Cir., 1940 [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,004], 110 F. 2d 292; Westor Threatres v. Warner Bros. Pictures, D. C. D. N. J., 1941, 41 F. Supp. 757, 763.

[Irreparable Loss or Damage]

3. The plaintiffs have failed to show the danger of irreparable loss or damage requisite for preliminary injunction, whereas defendants will, it is claimed, be greatly damaged by a preliminary injunction. It is fair to assert that under Section 16 of the Clayton Act, Title 15 USCA § 26, a preliminary injunction will be issued only upon a showing that the danger of irreparable loss or damage is immediate; that the danger must be real, not fancied, actual, not prospective, and threatened, not imagined. Weeks v. Alpert, D. C. D. Mass., 1955, 131 F. Supp. 608, 609. The principal, if not the only danger or threatened loss, asserted in the complaint and supporting affidavits is the possibility of actions by the government and by private parties for treble damage under the antitrust laws. In Gomberg v. Midvale Co., E. D. Pa., 1955, not officially reported, CCH 1955 TRADE CASES, Par. 68,238, it was held that possible private treble damage actions were not the type of threatened damages contemplated by Section 16 of the Clayton Act. There is also the further well-established principle that preliminary injunctions will not be issued if the threatened damage can be adequately compensated for by monetary damages. Henis v. Compania Agricola De Guatemala, D. C. D. Del., 1953, 116 F. Supp. 223, 225, affirmed 3 Cir., 1954, 210 F. 2d 950.

[American Crystal Sugar Case]

The case of American Crystal Sugar Co. v. Cuban-American Sugar Co., D. C. S. D. N. Y., 1957 [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,735], 152 F. Supp. 387, does not support plaintiffs' position on this motion for the following reasons:

1. In the American Crystal Sugar case a preliminary injunction had been denied and the question before the court was whether on the evidence adduced at the trial plaintiff was entitled to a permanent injunction;

2. In the American Crystal Sugar case injunctive relief was granted to prevent a threatened union of plaintiff and defendant. Here, union is already an accomplished fact;

3. The threatened injury to plaintiff in the American Crystal Sugar case was not merely the possibility of future antitrust litigation. The court found that the union of plaintiff and defendant would be harmful to plaintiff in impeding its plans for increasing its business in certain districts and in limiting plaintiff's effectiveness in representing the views of the American beet sugar interests.

[Balancing of Conveniences]

Obviously, the court must, in the determination of an issuance of a preliminary injunction, weigh the conveniences of the parties and possible injuries to them according as they may be effected by the granting or withholding of the injunction. See Yakus v. United States, 321 U. S. 414, 440 (1943). In such a balance, the weight must prevail in favor of the moving party before an injunction is granted. Nothing in the motion papers or in the complaint supplies any material basis for prospective injury to Security, other than the merely potential danger of suits above mentioned. The possibility of such suits naturally cannot be forecast but the probability of such suits is not shown by the plaintiffs.

["Unclean Hands"]

4. The defendants allege that the plaintiffs come into court with "unclean hands" and, hence, are not entitled to equitable relief. The basis of this argument is that the plaintiffs seek to force the defendant Security to settle with plaintiffs Leslie and Fein a certain suit brought by such plaintiffs in a New York State court on October 10, 1957, seeking to obtain valuable stock options from Security. There is no doubt that these two plaintiffs have such a claim pending and there seems to be little doubt that an effectuation of such option will mean a material financial gain if plaintiffs succeed.

[Delay]

5. The defendants maintain that the plaintiffs have not acted promptly. The background of events leading to the board meetings of Security and Columbian on October 18, 1957, demonstrates that the plaintiffs knew in advance of the impending transaction which the defendants consummated on that date. They did not act. This consequence meant the neglect of an action necessary to invoke the protective preventative remedies of Section 26 of Title 15 USCA.

Thus, it developes that the plaintiffs have stood by while the long-threatened act was not only planned, but completed. Now they seek to restore a condition existing prior to October 18, 1957, by a method of transaction of business by a maintenance of separate and distinct accounting procedures and by a segregated status of assets of the two corporations. In all likelihood, this will mean additional overhead expense and a probable preclusion of administrative savings which might otherwise occur.

[Injunction Denied]

Under the circumstances, plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction is denied and the temporary restraining order heretofore granted is vacated.

A supplemental decision will follow on defendants' motion under Rule 12(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure to dismiss the complaint.

So ordered.

[¶ 68,859] United States v. Imperial Chemical Industries, Ltd.; Imperial Chemical Industries (New York), Ltd.; E. I. du Pont de Nemours and Company, Inc.; Remington Arms Company, Inc.; Lammot du Pont; Walter Samuel Carpenter, Jr.; and Charles Krum Davis.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civ. No. 24-13. Filed November 12, 1957.

Case No. 789 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Modification of Decree—Additional Relief—Extension of Time.—A chemical company had been required by a judgment to license its nylon patents and to make available technical information. The judgment retained jurisdiction in the court for five years for the purpose of enabling the court to modify the relief granted or to grant additional relief. A subsequent motion by the Government to extend, for an additional two years, the period of time within which it could seek further relief was denied. The Government stated that it might seek relief requiring the chemical company (1) to sell intermediates and polymer to its licensees to enable them to manufacture a type of nylon and (2) to provide technical information. The court noted that the case did not involve a monopoly but rather involved an unreasonable restraint of trade. There was no claim or suggestion that the chemical company had not lived up to the letter and spirit of the judgment. The fact that none of the post judgment licensees manufactured the nylon did not indicate the inadequacy of the remedy provided in the judgment, but rather indicated a lack of interest or unwillingness to make the necessary capital expenditure. Furthermore, none of the post judgment licensees had sought to obtain technical information or had complained to the Government or come into court seeking the relief suggested by the Government. "It is not the purpose of the antitrust laws, nor is it of this Court, to hold a judgment open indefinitely when no good purpose is served thereby. An open end judgment would not aid competition, but rather tends to stifle it and prevent research and development of new or improved products."

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8233.325.

For prior decisions of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, see 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,435, 68,325; 1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,739; 1952 Trade Cases ¶ 67,282; 1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,923; and 1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,350.

Memorandum

[Modification of Judgment]

SYLVESTER J. RYAN, District Judge [In full text]: The United States of America, as plaintiff, has moved for an order modifying this Court's final judgment of July 30, 1952, solely as to defendant E. I. du Pont de Nemours and Company, Inc. The modification sought is that the Court extend the time for two additional years within which the plaintiff may, if so advised, seek further modification of the judgment for "further and more complete relief." The final judgment, at the behest of the United States, retained jurisdiction in the Court for five years (until July 30, 1957) "for the purpose of enabling the Court . . . to modify the relief granted by this final judgment, or to grant such other or additional relief as appears to be required . . .".

[Additional Relief]

The motion, made on the eve of the expiration of the five-year period, seeks additional time to permit plaintiff "to investigate and to await the outcome of certain matters." The matters involved on this motion are the patents and processes for manufacture of nylon 66 yarn, and the intermediates and polymer therefor. The additional relief which plaintiff states it might seek are (a) to require du Pont to sell to its licensees intermediates and polymer to enable them to manufacture nylon 66 yarn; and (b) to require du Pont to provide technology and know-how beyond that required by the final judgment.

[Restraint of Trade]

At the outset, it must be noted that the complaint in this case did not charge a monopoly—but rather it was an unreasonable restraint of trade case. The Government argues that none of the post judgment nylon licensees manufacture nylon 66 yarn. On its face, this does not indicate any inadequacy in the remedy provided in the judgment.

[Adequacy of Judgment]

The judgment requires du Pont to license others on a reasonable royalty basis to use its nylon patents. It requires du Pont to furnish written manuals describing du Pont's methods and process in commercially manufacturing the products. It requires du Pont to furnish written manuals describing methods found by du Pont prior to June 30, 1950 in a commercial plant, pilot plant or semiworks usable in practicing commercially the inventions claimed in the licensed patents. Furthermore, the judgment provided that if the manuals were inadequate, the Court would make further orders requiring other disclosure of methods or processes as were appropriate.

There is no claim or suggestion that du Pont has not lived up to the letter and spirit of the judgment. It is recognized that the setting up of a commercial plant for the manufacture of nylon polymer and intermediates requires a capital expenditure of many millions of dollars. The fact that none of the post judgment licensees has undertaken to establish a manufacturing plant for nylon 66 suggests not the inadequacy of the remedy in the judgment, but rather a lack of interest or unwillingness to make the necessary capital expenditure.

Two further facts are important: (1) none of the post judgment licensees of the nylon patents has sought to obtain from du Pont the technical know-how provided for in the judgment in the form of the written manuals or other descriptive material used by du Pont in commercially developing the manufacture of nylon 66 or its intermediates and polymer; and (2) no one of the companies listed by the Government as post judgment licensees has complained to the Government, nor have any come to the Court seeking the relief now suggested by the Government.

[Motion Denied]

Considering the papers submitted in support of the motion in the most favorable light, the Court concludes that they are wholly insufficient and form no basis for granting the relief sought. It is not the purpose of the anti-trust laws, nor is it of this Court, to hold a judgment open indefinitely when no good purpose is served thereby. An open end judgment would not aid competition, but rather tends to stifle it and prevent research and development of new or improved products.

Motion denied.

[¶ 68,860] Bertha Building Corporation v. National Theatres Corporation. Gumbiner Theatrical Enterprises, Inc. v. National Theatres Corporation.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. October Term, 1956, Nos. 329-330. Docket Nos. 24253-4. Petition filed September 24, 1957. Decided November 7, 1957.

On Petition for Rehearing.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Defenses—Statute of Limitations—State Tolling Provisions—Factual Issues—Right to Jury Trial.—A trial court had held that a California three-year statute of limitations was applicable to two treble damage actions brought in a Federal District Court in New York by reason of a New York borrowing provision, and that the running of the California statute of limitations was not tolled by a California statute which prevents the running of a statute of limitations against a plaintiff who is unable to present his cause of action in California because the defendant is not amenable to process of the California courts. The court's dismissal of the actions on the grounds that the California statute of limitations barred the actions and that the California tolling provision was not applicable because the defendant was amenable to suit in California under Section 12 of the Clayton Act was reversed by a Court of Appeals since a jury rather than the trial court should have decided whether or not the defendant was amenable to suit in California.

On a petition for rehearing, the Court of Appeals ruled that, as to one of the actions, it had not considered the impact of the New York statute of limitations (which provided that where a cause of action arises outside of the state, an action cannot be brought to enforce such cause of action after the expiration of the time limited by the laws of the state or the laws of the state where the cause of action arose) and held that the trial court properly dismissed that action without submitting any issue to a jury. The cause of action was barred by the New York statute of limitations, and the running of the New York statute of limitations was not tolled by the alleged absence of the defendant, a foreign corporation, from the state. Under the New York statute, the tolling provision does not apply where a foreign corporation has one or more officers in the state on whom a summons for such corporation may be served. On the record in the case, the defendant did have officers in the state; therefore, the statute of limitations was not tolled.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9008.210, 9010, 9010.100, 9014.

For the petitioner: Dwight, Royall, Harris, Koegel & Caskey, New York, N. Y. (John F. Caskey, Frederick W. R. Pride, Charles F. Young, and Stanley Godofsky, of counsel), for National Theatres Corporation.

For the plaintiffs: Corcoran, Kostelanetz & Gladstone, New York, N. Y. (Boris Kostelanetz, Arthur Karger, Theodore E. Gladstone, and Francis J. Mulderig, of counsel).

Petition for rehearing of a decision of the U. S. Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,818, reversing a decision of the U. S. District Court, Eastern District of New York, 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,308; for prior opinions of the Court, see 1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,897 and 67,793, and 1952 Trade Cases ¶ 67,271.

Before: HAND, CHASE and HINCKS, Circuit Judges.

[Rehearing]

PER CURIAM [In full text]: By its petition for rehearing the defendant, National, persuades us to amplify and modify our original opinion and decision.

[Order of Dismissal]

We are unmoved by the petitioner's contention that we were wrong in asserting that a dismissal based upon a defense of the statute of limitations is an adjudication on the merits. Warner v. Buffalo Drydock Co., 2 Cir., 67 F. 2d 540, which is cited in support of that contention, we think is distinguishable. And moreover, it has been superseded by the clear mandate of Rule 41(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure which in its last sentence directly contradicts the holding of the Warner case. Although under the rule in a proper situation the District Judge may specify that his order be without prejudice, Judge Galston did not so qualify his order of dismissal.

[Statute of Limitations]

We think, however, that National is right when it now urges that we failed to consider the impact of the New York statute of limitations on the Gumbiner cause of action. The Bertha cause of action arose in 1935 which was within six years of the Paramount action. Thus as to Bertha the six-year New York statute, C. P. A. § 48(2), could not possibly have run and the crucial question was whether the three-year California statute had run, as we correctly stated in the opening paragraph of our original opinion. However, in the Gumbiner case there was another question equally crucial, viz., whether the New York statute of limitations had run. For the Gumbiner cause of action accrued on December 8, 1931. Thus if the New York statute was not tolled by National's absence, the Gumbiner action was barred here in December, 1937. Section 13 of the New York Civil Practice Act* is alternative in operation: if the statute has run either in California or in New York the suit is barred here.

Gumbiner argues that the New York law should determine whether in fact the statute has been tolled. From this premise it asserts that under state law, although National may have been amenable to process in New York, the statute was nevertheless tolled during that period. This argument derives from an analogy to an individual debtor who has hidden out in an obscure part of the state under an assumed name. If a creditor can find him, such a debtor is amenable to process: but while he is thus hiding the statute of limitations is tolled. Gumbiner thus concludes that even if National was amenable to process in New York, its presence was not open and notorious and on that account the statute was tolled during the relevant period.

Even if New York law does determine tolling (a proposition we need not decide in this case), this argument is fallacious. For the tolling statute (C. P. A. § 19) during the relevant period had a subdivision (2), which declared, "Nor does this section apply while a foreign corporation has had or shall have one or more officers in the state on whom a summons for such corporation may be served." On the record in this case

* Section 13 in pertinent part reads as follows: "Where a cause of action arises outside of this state, an action cannot be brought in a court of this state to enforce such cause of action after expiration of the time limited by the laws either of this state or of the state or country where the cause of action arose, for bringing an action upon the cause of action * * *"

 The main paragraph of § 19 in its present form reads:

"If when the cause of action accrues against a person, he is without the state, the action may be commenced, within the time limited therefor, after his coming into or return to the state. If, after a cause of action has accrued against a person, he departs from the state and remains continuously absent therefrom for the space of four months or more, or if, without the knowledge of the person entitled to maintain the action, he resides within the state under a false name, the time of his absence or of such residence within the state under such false name is not a part of the time limited for the commencement of the action."

that section was applicable: National did have officers in the state. Gumbiner would read in a further requirement of open and notorious conduct. But all of the New York cases cited in support of this proposition are concerned with individual defendants, most of whom have just entered the state or have just returned to it. Not one case applies an "open and notorious" requirement to a foreign corporation otherwise amenable to process throughout the statutory period. Indeed, in Mack v. Mendels, 249 N. Y. 356, 164 N. E. 248, Judge Lehman admonishes the courts construing C. P. A. § 19 to read it as the Legislature wrote it and not to imply further requirements.

Gumbiner further urges that National was not amenable to process in New York under either federal or state standards. We disagree. A careful review of the evidence before Judge Galston on the question of whether the New York statute was tolled has convinced us that, if the facts had been heard by a jury, Judge Galston would have been required to set aside a plaintiff's verdict on this issue. Even though the jury might have disbelieved every one of defendant's witnesses, the documentary evidence recited in Judge Galston's findings was overwhelming.* Regardless of which standard is applied it is irrefutable that National was amenable to process in New York during

* The following findings of Judge Galston were based solely on a stipulation and on evidence corroborated by documentary evidence.

"32. National's Board of Directors held all of its meetings in New York and transacted its business there from 1930 to June, 1936. From June, 1936, to January, 1944, the Board met in Jersey City, New Jersey. After January, 1944, corporate meetings were again held in New York. All meetings of National's Executive Committee were held in New York during the existence of such Committee, i.e., from December 5, 1934, to January 3, 1936.

"33. National's agent, Agency, maintained an office from June, 1936, until the date these actions were begun at 444 West 56th Street, N. Y., in space rented from Twentieth Century-Fox. All officers of Agency had their offices at that address from that time until Agency opened an office in Los Angeles in August, 1942. The Board of Directors of Agency met weekly in New York.

"34. From the date of its organization to the date of the institution of these actions, Agency performed substantial and continuous agency services for National and National's subsidiaries in New York. Agency maintained the payroll for its own and National's employees, kept National's books of account and performed in New York extensive supervisory, advisory, operating and managerial activities and services for National and its subsidiaries which it had agreed to perform under its contract of December 2, 1935, with National.

"37. National continuously maintained a bank account or accounts in New York from 1930 throughout the period here involved. Its main account was with The Chase National Bank of the City of New York and that bank was National's principal banker. National also had accounts with the Commercial National Bank and Trust Company, The Marine Midland Trust Company and the Guaranty Trust Company of New York.

"38. National borrowed money from time to time in New York from New York banks. In 1930 National borrowed a total of $19,350,000 from the Chase National Bank in three loans. In 1931 it borrowed $15,000,000 from The Chase National Bank. In 1932 National arranged for substantial loans for its California subsidiaries from The Chase National Bank and unconditionally guaranteed payment of these loans. National hypothecated its assets with the bank in order to borrow money. As a result of those loans The Chase Bank was National's largest creditor until November, 1934, when it acquired 58 per cent of the stock of National in exchange for the indebtedness owed to it by National and National's subsidiaries.

"39. In October, 1934, National, in New York, issued debentures in the amount of $5,270,000 to Fox Film Corporation, dated as of March 4, 1933, to reflect National's indebtedness to Fox Film Corporation. The Empire Trust Company of New York was trustee under the trust indenture. Those debentures were exchanged for stock of National in the reorganization of November 14, 1934.

"40. In 1935 a line of credit in the amount of $750,000 was established with the Commercial National Bank & Trust Company of New York. Loans from that bank were negotiated in 1935 and 1937.

"41. From 1930 throughout the period here involved the dividends which National received from its subsidiaries were received by it in New York and the dividends paid by National were paid in New York. National had substantial assets.

"42. National itself paid no utility charges directly to any utility company. It paid a regular charge, however, to its parent Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation for services such as utilities, office space and the like. From and after June, 1936, payments for these facilities were made by Agency.

"43. National itself did not have a telephone listing prior to the summer of 1935. Thereafter it was listed in the Manhattan telephone directory as "National Theatres Corporation, see National Theatres Agency Corporation." Prior to 1935 it had used the telephone facilities of Twentieth Century-Fox without a listing and all calls came in through the Twentieth Century-Fox switchboard. Charges for the use of these telephone facilities were included in the regular amounts paid by National to Twentieth Century-Fox."

In addition, several contracts are in the record which list 444 W. 56 St., New York City, as National's office address and the address to which notices may be sent. In a "Consent of Guarantor" defendant is stated to have an office and place of business in New York City.

the relevant period. United States v. Scophony Corp. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,238], 333 U. S. 795; Pomeroy v. Hocking Valley R. Co., 218 N. Y. 530, 113 N. E. 504; see also Chaplin v. Selznick, 293 N. Y. 529, 58 N. E. 2d 719.

[Rulings]

We now hold, therefore, that the Gumbiner action, since the New York statute was not tolled by National's absence from New York or by its unpublicized activity in New York, is barred and that the District Court's dismissal of that action must be affirmed.

However, the majority of the court adheres to its holding that since the question of tolling in California presents substantial fact questions the Bertha case must be reversed and remanded for trial by jury on the limitations question.

Petition granted and our previous decision is modified to provide

As to the Gumbiner case, affirmed;

As to the Bertha case, reversed and remanded.

Judge HAND again votes to affirm both judgments for the reasons stated in his earlier opinion and without passing on the opinion now rendered in the Gumbiner appeal.

[¶ 68,861] Standard Oil Company of California, Shell Oil Company, The Texas Company, Richfield Oil Corporation, General Petroleum Corporation, Tide Water Associated Oil Company, and Union Oil Company of California v. George F. Moore.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. No. 14,927. Filed November 6, 1957.

Appeal from the United States District Court, Western District of Washington. Northern Division. JOHN C. BOWEN, District Judge.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Concerted Refusal to Deal—Sufficiency of Evidence as to Refusal to Deal and Concerted Action.—Evidence, assuming that it was properly admitted, was held to be legally sufficient to support a jury (1) finding that a retail gasoline dealer was unable to obtain a supply of petroleum products from producers and distributors which would permit him to remain in business, (2) finding of an agreement, a combination, or a conspiracy by the producers and distributors to control price cutting and curb-sign advertising by refusing to sell to dealers whose severe price cutting and persistent curb-sign advertising brought them into controversy with their suppliers, and (3) finding that the plaintiff dealer became such a dealer, and that, pursuant to and in furtherance of the agreement, combination, or conspiracy, the producers and distributors refused to sell to him. However, exhibits received in evidence as proof of an agreement, a combination, or a conspiracy were found to be improperly admitted, and a judgment in favor of the dealer was reversed and the producers and distributors were granted a new trial.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.785.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Refusal to Deal—Legality.—The act of an individual person or company in refusing to deal with another usually does not, standing alone, have antitrust significance. However, where an act or practice of refusing to deal is shown to be pursuant to, or in furtherance of, an agreement, combination, or conspiracy, Sherman Act liability is encountered. Concerted restraint of this type is illegal, even if intended to meet or overcome an admittedly invidious trade practice. Evidence tending to show that there was a legitimate business reason for the act of an individual merchant in refusing to deal is always admissible in contradiction of a case built upon circumstantial evidence. But, if there is sufficient evidence to support a finding that a merchant entered into such an agreement, combination, or conspiracy, the fact that his individual refusal to deal may be explainable as a reasonable business decision is not excusatory of liability.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.785.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Proof of Unlawful Conspiracy—Declarations of Co-Conspirators—Admissibility.—In a conspiracy action where a considerable part of the evidence concerned the acts of individual companies and of their agents or employees, and the extrajudicial declarations of such agents or employees, a reviewing court noted that, in evaluating evidence of this type, it must be kept in mind that evidence of such acts and extrajudicial declarations are not to be considered as against other alleged members of the conspiracy, unless there is independent evidence establishing, prima facie, that such others were members of the conspiracy. A conspiracy creates an agency relationship; therefore, each member of the conspiracy is authorized by the other members to perform acts in furtherance of the common objective. When evidence of the above kind is received, a cautionary instruction should be given to the jury, to be repeated at the end of the trial, calling attention to the limited effect to be given to such evidence. Among other things, the jury should be instructed that evidence of the acts and extrajudicial declarations of the agents or employees of one of the alleged co-conspirators is not to be considered in determining whether another alleged co-conspirator entered into the alleged conspiracy.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.380.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Proof of Unlawful Conspiracy—Conscious Parallel Business Behavior—Evidence of Conspiracy.—"Consciously parallel business behavior in matters touching prices and competition does not itself constitute a Sherman Act offense. It is, however, admissible circumstantial evidence of an underlying agreement, combination, or conspiracy concerning such matters. The probative value of such evidence is to be determined by the trier of the facts."

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.360.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Proof of Unlawful Conspiracy—Necessity of Express Agreement.—No express agreement is necessary to constitute an unlawful combination or conspiracy. It is sufficient if persons, with knowledge that concerted action was contemplated and invited, "give adherence to and then participate in a scheme."

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.355.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Damages Recoverable —Admissibility of Evidence Relating to Damages.—In reversing a treble damage judgment in favor of a retail gasoline dealer, who charged that he was driven out of business by reason of a conspiracy among producers and distributors to refuse to sell gasoline to him, and in reviewing evidence relating to damages, the reviewing court (1) held that, on retrial, a hypothetical question as to the value of the dealer's good will should be framed to omit an irrelevant factor, (2) noted that a hypothetical question calling for expert opinion must be based upon facts in evidence and should include any undisputed fact which is clearly material and important, (3) held that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in permitting an individual to express an expert opinion as to the value of the dealer's business, (4) noted that it would have been better practice to have an explanation made of the formula used by an expert witness in testifying as to the value of the dealer's business, (5) held that the dealer and his expert witness should not have been permitted to base, in part, their opinions as to the market value of the dealer's business upon certain events and facts which occurred after the date the business was allegedly destroyed, (6) noted that it is for the trial court to determine, in the exercise of its discretion, whether an expert's sources of information are sufficiently reliable to warrant the reception of the opinion, (7) held that federal income tax returns should not have been received in evidence, and (8) held that the trial court did not err in admitting in evidence certain entries in the dealer's ledger which were not made until several months after the transaction recorded.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9011.385.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Evidence Admissible to Prove Antitrust Violations—Circumstantial Evidence—Conspiracy.—The fact that evidence is circumstantial does not necessarily affect its sufficiency to support a finding of agreement, combination, or conspiracy. Such arrangements "are seldom capable of proof by direct testimony, and may be inferred from the things actually done." The fact that evidence tending to prove a fact is wholly circumstantial is not ground for setting aside a finding of such fact unless, as a matter of law, reasonable minds, as triers of fact, must be in agreement that some reasonable hypothesis other than the existence of such fact could be drawn from the evidence. In applying this test, the evidence is to be viewed as a whole and not link by link. Where the circumstantial evidence favorable to a verdict meets this test, an appellate court will not "search the record for conflicting circumstantial evidence in order to take the case away from the jury on a theory that the proof gives equal support to inconsistent and uncertain inferences."

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9012.130, 9015.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Evidence Admissible to Prove Antitrust Violations—Business Records—Extrajudicial Admissions.—A treble damage judgment in favor of a retail gasoline dealer was reversed and the defendants were granted a new trial, where the trial court had admitted in evidence writings and records of the defendants which were not admissible under Section 1732, United States Code, Title 28, which provides for the admissibility of writings and records made in the regular course of business. The reviewing court found that certain writings and records were not admissible because (1) they did not pertain to a matter in which the business was a direct participant, (2) they contained expressions of opinions or conclusions on matters not calling for professional knowledge or skill, (3) they contained information which the writer attributed to unauthorized persons, or (4) they were not made pursuant to an established procedure of the business. The dealer's contention that, even if the writings and records were not admissible under Section 1732, they were properly admitted as extrajudicial admissions, was rejected.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9012.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Appeal and Error—Relief on Appeal—Dismissal of Action or New Trial.—Where a reviewing court reversed a treble damage judgment in favor of a retail gasoline dealer on the ground that certain exhibits were improperly received in evidence, the court held that the attainment of substantial justice required that the action be not dismissed, but that it be remanded for a new trial. If none of the inadmissible exhibits had been received, the evidence would have been insufficient to support a jury finding of an unlawful conspiracy. If it could be said that this evidence would not be admissible on any record which could be made and is irreplaceable, the dismissal of the action would be warranted. On a new trial, however, a proper foundation may be supplied for the admission of some of the exhibits and other admissible evidence may be found in substitution of evidence which had been found to be inadmissible.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9015.90.

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Appeal and Error—Sufficiency of Evidence to Support Jury Findings.—Evidence is legally sufficient to support a jury finding on any question of fact, if it is of such substance and character that reasonable men might reach that conclusion. In determining whether evidence meets this test, all reasonable inferences therefrom, favorable to the verdict, are to be drawn. Likewise, all conflicts between evidence are to be resolved in favor of the verdict. Where testimony submitted by the losing party, although not directly contradicted, is inconsistent with the verdict, it is to be assumed that the jury disbelieved such testimony. In determining the sufficiency of evidence to support a verdict, an appellate court may disregard evidence which has been improperly admitted.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9012.500, 9015.

For the appellants: Marshall P. Madison, Francis R. Kirkham, and William E. Mussman, of Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, San Francisco, Cal.; and Helsell, Paul, Fetterman, Todd & Hekanson, Seattle, Wash., for Standard Oil Co. of California. George W. Jansen, New York, N. Y.; J. Arthur Tucker, Los Angeles, Cal.; and James O. Sullivan, Los Angeles, Cal., for The Texas Co. Milton Handler, New York, N. Y. (Grosscup, Ambler, Stephan & Miller, Seattle, Wash., of counsel). William J. DeMartini, Los Angeles, Cal. (Graham, Green & Dunn, Seattle, Wash., of counsel), for Richfield Oil Corp. Robert W. Graham, Seattle, Wash.; Howard Painter, Los Angeles, Cal.; and Paul E. Bermingham, Los Angeles, Cal. (Bogle, Bogle & Gates, Seattle, Wash., of counsel), for General Petroleum Corp. DeWitt Williams, Seattle, Wash.; William F. Kiessig, San Francisco, Cal.; and Edmund D. Buckley, San Francisco, Cal. (Eggerman, Rosling & Williams, Seattle, Wash., of counsel), for Tide Water Associated Oil Co. L. A. Gibbons, Los Angeles, Cal.; Moses Lasky, San Francisco, Cal.; and Herbert S. Little, Seattle, Wash. (Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, San Francisco, Cal., and Little, LeSourd, Palmer, Scott & Slemmons, Seattle, Wash., of counsel), for Union Oil Co. of Cal. Newman H. Clark, Seattle, Wash.; and S. R. Vandivort, San Francisco, Cal. (Venables, Ballinger & Clark, of counsel), for Shell Oil Co.

For the appellee: Ferguson & Burdell, William H. Ferguson, Charles S. Burdell, William Wesselhoeft, Donald McL. Davidson, and Phil H. DeTurk, Seattle, Wash.

Before: STEPHENS, Chief Judge, and POPE and HAMLEY, Circuit Judges.

[Nature of Action]

HAMLEY, Circuit Judge [In full text]: This is a treble-damage antitrust suit, brought by George F. Moore, a former Seattle gasoline service station owner and operator, against seven major oil compaines.[1] Charging defendants with the destruction of his business, plaintiff sought treble damages in the amount of $285,000. He also asked for a decree requiring defendants to divest themselves of all interest in, or control of, retail service stations in the competitive area. Attorneys' fees in the sum of $40,000 were requested.

[Trial Court]

After a trial which lasted more than three months, the jury returned a verdict of $80,000 trebled, or a total of $240,000. Judgment in this sum, and for attorneys' fees in the amount of $40,000, was entered on June 24, 1955. The prayer for equitable relief was denied.

[Claimed Errors]

Defendants appeal. Under five general specifications of error, they question the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, the manner in which the coconspirator rule was applied, the admissibility of some of the evidence, the failure to give certain instructions, the giving of other instructions, and the failure to set aside the verdict because of asserted extraneous influences upon the jury.

I

Background of the Case

[Defendants' Business]

Each of the appellants is engaged in the business of producing and refining oil, and in transporting and marketing gasoline, oil and other petroleum products, in Washington and other states. The production and (at the times here in question) refining operations take place in California. Transportation to the state of Washington is generally by ship tanker. The gasoline is received by appellants at their respective marine storage terminals, and from there it is distributed to bulk storage plants located at convenient marketing centers.

Distribution from these terminals and plants falls generally into four categories: Sales to independent service station dealers; retail sales at company-operated stations; sales to secondary wholesale distributors or jobbers; and sales to large commercial, agricultural, and industrial consumers. Except for appellants, only one company transports gasoline into the Puget Sound area of Washington, and then only in relatively small amounts. During the period in question, there was no well production of petroleum products in the state of Wisconsin.

[Plaintiff's Business]

In 1939, Moore opened a retail gasoline service station and truck service station at 1961 Fourth Avenue South, in Seattle. Except for eight months in 1944, when he served in the army, Moore operated this station continuously until August, 1952. Thoughout this period, Moore obtained his gasoline and other petroleum products from Tide Water.

Moore was an extremely competitive dealer. While Tide Water required him to post retail gasoline prices on his pumps, it was his practice to give discounts which resulted in a net gasoline price lower than the posted price. Generally speaking, this discount, which he gave to all customers, was three cents a gallon.

[1] Standard Oil Company of California (Standard), Shell Oil Company, Incorporated, a Virginia corporation, The Texas Company (Texas), Richfield Oil Corporation (Richfield), General Petroleum Corporation (General), Tide Water Associated Oil Company (Tide Water), and Union Oil Company (Union). Prior to trial, Shell Oil Company (Shell), a Delaware corporation, which, on September 30, 1949, succeeded Shell Oil Company, Incorporated, was made an additional party defendant. At the close of the trial, the court granted a motion for a directed verdict as to Shell Oil Company, Incorporated, and a judgment of dismissal as to this defendant was entered.

Moore's business was successful from the beginning. This was due to his pricing policy, the excellence of his location, the efficiency of his operation, his ability as a salesman, and perhaps other factors. His business grew steadily, year by year, until he became the largest Tide Water dealer in the state of Washington. Eight employees were required to operate the station. By 1951, his annual gasoline sales exceeded 1,600,000 gallons.

[Refusals To Deal]

Commencing in 1950, however, disagreements developed between Moore and Tide Water. The nature of these disagreements will be discussed at a later point in this opinion. Late in 1951, Moore began looking around for another source of supply. He had conversations with representatives of Standard and General. At that time, however, both of these appellants declined to deal with Moore. Negotiations between Moore and representatives of Union, begun in October or November, 1951, were still in progress in May, 1952.

On May 2, 1952, Moore received a written notice from Tide Water, canceling its contract with him, effective July 30, 1952.[2] He continued his negotiations with representatives of Union during the period from May 2 to July 30, 1952. In June or July, 1952, Moore also had several conversations with representatives of Richfield. Before the end of July, however, Richfield indicated its refusal to deal with Moore on the basis which he proposed.

Tide Water supplied no gasoline or oil to Moore after July 30, 1952. By utilizing the large capacity of his storage tanks and obtaining relatively small quantities of gasoline from independent sources, Moore was able to operate his service station for a few days after that date. During this period, negotiations continued with Union, and were reopened with General. Moore also made a "last-minute" effort to obtain gasoline from each of the other appellants.

As events turned out, Moore did not obtain a continuing supply of gasoline and diesel oil from Union, General, or any other source, following termination of the Tide Water supply on July 30, 1952. When Moore's stored supply became exhausted about the middle of August, 1952, he closed his service station. The complaint in this action was filed on October 4, 1952.

[Theory of Action]

The theory of the action is that Moore was refused a supply of gasoline pursuant to, and in furtherance of, an agreement, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of, or to monopolize, interstate trade and commerce, entered into by two or more of the appellants.[3] Jurisdiction to entertain the action and grant the requested relief is asserted under several sections of the Sherman, Clayton, and Robinson-Patman Acts (15 U. S. C. A. §§ 1, 2, 13, 13a, 14, 15, 18, and 26).

In Moore's first amended complaint, the alleged unlawful agreement, combination, or conspiracy is pictured as one to accomplish a dual purpose through multiple lines of action. It is asserted that the general objectives were to control, fix, and regulate gasoline prices, and to monopolize, control, and channelize the distribution of gasoline.[4] The plans and programs adopted in furtherance of these objectives, Moore alleges, relate both to the refining and to the distribution of gasoline.

Concerning the refining of gasoline, these plans and programs, according to the com-

[2] We use the term "contract" to include the entire contractual arrangement between Tide Water and Moore concerning the supply of petroleum products. Actually, there were five written instruments, including two leases, a petroleum products sales agreement, a merchandise agreement, and a delivery allowance letter, all of which were referred to and canceled in Tide Water's notice to Moore.

[3] The term "conspiracy" is not used in the complaint. The facts therein alleged, however, are comprehensive enough to encompass conspiracy as well as unlawful agreement or combination. A conspiracy is a joint undertaking having an unlawful purpose, arising out of agreement, and usually extending over a period of time. U. S. v. Kissel, 218 U. S. 601; Duplex Printing Press Co. v. Deering, 254 U. S. 443, 465. See, also, Piquett v. United States (7 Cir.), 81 F. (2d) 75, 80. The briefs of all parties deal with the question of "conspiracy" as an issue in the case. Likewise, the trial court instructed fully, and without any objection being interposed, on the meaning of the term "conspiracy," and the application of the law of conspiracy to the facts of this case.

[4] In the complaint, "gasoline" is defined to include diesel fuel.

plaint, called for self-imposed controls and restrictions upon appellants' own activities.[5] With respect to the distribution of gasoline, it is alleged that these plans and programs included not only self-imposed controls and restrictions, but also the imposition of various forms of economic pressure and coercion upon wholesale distributors and retail dealers.[6]

[Issue]

As compared to the sweep of these allegations, the averments concerning the way in which the asserted unlawful agreement, combination, or monopoly injured Moore raise a relatively narrow issue. It is not alleged that during the time he was engaged in business Moore's profits or costs were affected in any manner by reason of the production, refining, transportation, storage, marketing, or pricing policies referred to above. The way in which Moore was damaged, according to the complaint, was in being driven out of business at a time when the business was prospering. This was accomplished, it is alleged, by the practice of one of the forms of economic pressure contemplated by the asserted unlawful agreement, combination, or conspiracy—namely, concerted refusal to deal.[7]

[Answers—Trial]

Appellants filed separate answers in which they denied the allegations of the complaint concerning the alleged agreement, combination, or conspiracy, concerted refusal to deal, and monetary loss. The cause came to trial on the issues raised by these pleadings. As before noted, the jury verdict was for Moore, and the judgment conforms to the verdict.

II

Sufficiency of the Evidence—In General

Before reaching any question as to the amount of damages sustained by Moore, the jury had to find in his favor on two other questions of fact. One of these is whether Moore was unable to obtain a supply of petroleum products which would permit him to remain in business.[8] The other is whether the inability to obtain such a supply, if this was the case, resulted from an agreement, combination, or conspiracy of the kind alleged.

The verdict represents a jury finding for Moore on both of these questions. Appellants' first specification of error challenges the legal sufficiency of the evidence to support either of these findings.

The evidence is legally sufficient to support a jury finding on any question of fact, if

[5] Self-imposed controls and restrictions pertaining to the refining of gasoline included, according to the complaint, the use of private committees to determine and impose quotas of crude oil to be produced; the purchase of gasoline produced by independent refineries and producers; the use of price-posting systems to fix and maintain uniform and noncompetitive prices to be paid for crude oil purchased from independent companies; the exchanging of crude oil among themselves; and the pooling of transportation facilities.

[6] Self-imposed controls and restrictions pertaining to the distribution of gasoline included, according to the complaint, the use of price leadership and price-posting systems for the purpose of manipulating and stabilizing prices; the exchange of gasoline supplies among appellants; and the sale to retail dealers, for resale under their respective brand names, gasoline actually produced and refined by other appellants. The forms of economic pressure and coercion imposed upon wholesale distributors and retail dealers included, it is alleged, the control and limitation of gasoline supplies, or the cutting off of supplies, of independent wholesale distributors and retail dealers who do not conform to appellants' joint price policies; refusal to permit such distributors and dealers to advertise the type or brand of gasoline sold; utilization of contract forms and other devices which permit appellants to control, adjust, and change retail prices; refusal to sell gasoline to wholesale distributors and retail dealers who will not conform to the joint price policies, or who desire to resell under low cost and cheaper methods of distribution, such as self-service gasoline stations; the artificial decreasing or depressing of gasoline prices, and the creation of so-called "price wars"; at times the prohibition of the use of "price signs" by retail dealers, and at other times the insistence that such signs be displayed; the refusal to sell gasoline to dealers who purchase gasoline from any other appellant; the acquisition, operation, and control of retail service stations; and the practice of discriminating between purchasers as to the price of gasoline.

[7] Specifically, it is alleged that appellants concertedly refused to deal with Moore because he would not adhere to appellants' "artificial price fixing and price maintenance programs." Another reason attributed to appellants for their asserted concerted refusal to deal was appellants' desire to prefer and favor service station outlets which they individually owned or controlled.

[8] This was the only damage asserted to have resulted from the alleged agreement, combination, or conspiracy. If Moore did not prove such resulting damage, he would not be entitled to judgment, even assuming the existence of an unlawful agreement, combination, or conspiracy between two or more of the appellants. Wolfe v. National Lead Co. (9 Cir.) [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,094], 225 F. (2d) 427, 432-433, cert. den., 350 U. S. 915.

it is of such substance and character that reasonable men might reach that conclusion. In determining whether the evidence meets this test, all reasonable inferences therefrom, favorable to the verdict, are to be drawn. Likewise, all conflicts between evidence submitted by the prevailing party and the evidence submitted by the losing parties are to be resolved in favor of the verdict. Where testimony submitted by the losing party, although not directly contradicted, is inconsistent with the verdict, it is to be assumed that the jury disbelieved such testimony, as it had the right to do.

In determining the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, there is authority for appellate court disregard of the evidence held to have been improperly admitted. See Oras v. United States (9 Cir.), 67 F. (2d) 463, 465. Here, however, the asserted inadmissibility of evidence is based upon claimed lack of foundation testimony—which might be supplied on a new trial. It will therefore be assumed, in discussing the sufficiency of the evidence, that all evidence favorable to the verdict was properly admitted.

III

The Finding that Moore Was Unable To Obtain Gasoline

[Legal Sufficiency]

We turn first to the question of whether the evidence was legally sufficient to support a jury finding that Moore was unable to obtain a supply of gasoline which would permit him to remain in business. He sought to prove this by showing that no source of supply was available to him after Tide Water ceased deliveries on July 30, 1952.

[Nature of Proof]

There is no dispute between the parties as to the nature of the proof necessary to warrant a finding that any particular source of supply was not available to Moore. As stated in the trial court's instruction No. 35, to which no objection was taken, it could not be found that a particular source of supply was unavailable to Moore unless it were shown that he offered, on a bona fide basis, to purchase gasoline and diesel fuel oil from such source, and that he was ready, willing, and able to pay the current market price of such source applicable to retail gasoline dealers of Moore's classification and category, and that such source refused to sell to him at its current market price applicable to dealers of that classification and category.

[Contested Findings]

Appellants do not question the sufficiency of the evidence to support a jury finding that Moore could not then obtain a supply from appellants Standard, Texas, Richfield, Shell, or Tide Water, or from any source other than appellants. They do, however, question the sufficiency of the evidence to support the finding, inherent in the verdict, that Moore could not then obtain a supply from Union or General.

UNION'S ASSERTED REFUSAL TO DEAL.

Viewing the record in the light most favorable to the verdict, we have examined the evidence bearing upon Union's asserted refusal to deal with Moore.

There were extensive negotiations between Moore and Union, beginning in the fall of 1951 and continuing to about August 20, 1952. Early in these negotiations, Moore indicated that he would like the same price arrangement on gasoline as he then had with Tide Water. This was a discount of 6½ cents off the posted retail price of regular gasoline, and 7 cents off the posted retail price of ethyl or premium gasoline. He was told that these discounts were a half cent more than the discount Union then gave to Fleet Service Station No. 1. The latter was a truck service station two blocks away, which did somewhat less business than Moore.

During the initial meetings, however, the Union representatives did not offer to sell to Moore at the Fleet Service figure. Nor did they state that the figure suggested by Moore was out of the question. Quite to the contrary, on three different occasions late in 1951, W. I. Martin, Union's district sales manager in Seattle, informed Moore that he believed he could get the 6½ and 7-cent price for Moore. The price of diesel oil, Moore was told, would be 10 cents a gallon, as compared to the Tide Water price of 9.2 cents. On each occasion, Moore stated that he would enter into a contract with Union on the 6½ and 7-cent discount basis for gasoline, and 10 cents a gallon for diesel. The third time this price plan was discussed, it was left that Martin would take the matter up with Union's California office.

Late in December, 1951, the Los Angeles office advised Martin that the request to take the account on the suggested basis was denied, but that it was agreeable to take the account "at policy discount." This counter-offer, however, was never communicated to Moore, and he heard nothing more from Union until February, 1952. A company representative, David E. Gray, then went to the station and told Moore that the company was not "taking any accounts like ours right then." There followed some discussion concerning a possible lease of Moore's station to Union. He was later provided with a form of agreement to effectuate such an arrangement. In the middle of March, however, Gray informed Moore that Union was not then leasing any more stations.[9]

Union reopened negotiations with Moore in the late spring of 1952. Martin again told Moore that he believed that a discount of 6½ and 7 cents could be obtained for Moore. At a later meeting, T. G. Wise, Union's territory manager, informed Moore that he had authority from a vice president to take the account on that basis. Moore again agreed to contract on this basis, and Wise had a painting contractor measure the station for painting. Two weeks later, however, Martin told Moore that a Union vice president had ruled that it was not in the company's policy to take the account.

During all of the period referred to above, Moore was being supplied by Tide Water. Hence, Moore's inability to obtain gasoline from the Union during that period bears only indirectly upon the factual question under consideration. As before indicated, that question is whether Moore was unable to obtain a supply after Tide Water terminated deliveries on July 30, 1952. But, as will be seen, Moore's inability to make headway with Union in these earlier negotiations may well have influenced the jury's interpretation of later words and events.

The next contact between Moore and representatives of Union came on the morning of Friday, August 8, 1952, when Martin went to Moore's station. By then, Moore was receiving no gasoline from Tide Water or any other source. Moore's version of this conversation is quoted in the margin.[10]

This, according to Moore, is the first occasion on which a representative of Union proposed to sell gasoline to Moore at its regular truck station discount of 6 and 6½ cents. This is also the first occasion on which a representative of Union had suggested nine cents a gallon as the price for diesel. In all prior negotiations, beginning in the fall of 1951, the price quoted was 10 cents a gallon, the same as it was charging Fleet Service.

The conversation between Moore and Martin just described took place in the morning. About noon of that same day, Martin telephoned Moore. Repeating his previously expressed preference for the 6 and 6½-cent discount proposal involving the "sixty-day paper," Moore asked what Martin was going to do. On direct examination, Moore gave this testimony concerning the conversation which followed:

> "A. . . . He said, "Well, the sixty-day paper, I find out the company doesn't want any accounts like that. They want a five-year account like that.' 'Well,' I said, 'under those circumstances, I will take the other deal that you outlined this morning for the 5½ cents off of the posted retail price and 9 cents for diesel and no paper at all.' And he said, 'I am sorry we can't take that kind of a deal, either.'"

It was thus demonstrated that Martin had been unable to gain company approval of either of the proposals he had advanced earlier in the day. Moore and Martin, continuing with their telephone conversation, then explored other possibilities. Continuing with Moore's testimony:

> "So I said, 'Well, what can you do for me? I need gasoline.' And he said, 'Well,' he says, 'we can give you a five-year contract, and give you 6½ cents a gallon off of the posted price of the regular [9] Gray testified that he then told Moore that the reason Union could not then take on his account was because the company was then in a condition of "tight supply."

[10] "A Mr. Martin came into the service station and said that he would—wanted to talk business about selling me gasoline and I said I was willing to buy gasoline. He said that—he said that they could take the station with 6 cents off of the posted price on the regular grade of gasoline, and 6½ cents off of the posted price of ethyl gasoline, and nine cents on diesel, and that was a sixty-day contract. Then he said, 'We have another plan.' He said, 'We will give you 5½ cents off of the posted price of retail, posted price on regular gasoline, and 6 cents off of the regular posted price on ethyl gasoline, and nine cents on diesel and no paper at all."

"So I told him that I would take the one with the 6 cents off and the sixty-day paper and wanted that deal, and I said, 'Let me know right away, because I am getting low on gas.' I didn't have any deliveries of gas. So he said he would let me know."

gasoline and 6½ cents a gallon off of the posted price, retail posted price, that is, on ethyl gasoline, and 9 cents for the diesel delivered with a five-year contract.' Q. Would you stop there a moment, Mr. Moore? A. Yes. Q. You said 6½ on both regular and ethyl on this transaction; did you mean that? A. No, I meant 6 cents on the regular and 6½ cents on ethyl. Q. All right. A. And that was to be a five-year contract. I told Mr. Martin I would take the deal, and Mr. Martin said, 'Well,' he said, 'I am sorry, but the price of diesel now is 10 cents'; and I said to Mr. Martin, I says, 'What are you doing, trying to find out how much I can pay for the gasoline and still operate?' I said, 'When you know what you want to sell me the gas and diesel for, come down to the station and let me know, because I want to buy it, but quit horsing around like this, because I am desperate for gasoline.'"

As things then stood, Union had rejected Moore's offer to buy gasoline on a basis of a 6½ and 7-cent discount, with a 10-cent price for diesel. In view of Moore's frustrating experience during the long negotations, the jury could also well find that Martin's concluding price quotation was not an authorized, firm counter-offer, and that Moore was therefore justified in disregarding it. Assuming such a finding, it was then definitely Union's next move if it was to escape the charge of refusing to deal.

Whether Union would have initiated further negotiations with Moore can not be known. Before it had much of an opportunity to do so, Moore had his attorney prepare a letter to Union, dated August 11, 1952, and mailed the next day, offering to purchase from that company all of his supply of gasoline, approximating a specified gallonage a month. He expressed a willingness to purchase at Union's regular prices for similar truck stations in the area. This letter was identical with letters which Moore, on that day, sent to all appellants.

Moore might have established his position more positively by ordering a tank wagon of gasoline at Union's prevailing price. The jury, however, was entitled to find that this letter constituted an offer to buy, the disregarding of which would constitute a refusal to deal. But Union did not disregard Moore's letter. In a reply, dated August 15, 1952, and received by Moore on August 18 or 19, Union said: "We acknowledge and thank you for your letter of August 11, 1952, and advise that our representative will call to see you at an early date."

Since this letter failed to indicate acceptance of Moore's offer, or to present a counteroffer, it was not itself sufficient to avoid the thrust of Moore's offer. But, within the next day or so, Martin went to Moore's station. According to Mrs. Moore, only she and a Frank Wilburn were there at the time. She testified that Martin told her he wanted to talk to her husband about a letter he had received. Mrs. Moore told Martin that her husband had gone out for a moment, and that Martin was welcome to wait. She then excused herself and went out to talk to some former customers. Martin waited not over ten minutes, and then departed, not having seen Moore.

Shortly thereafter, Moore returned to the station. Mrs. Moore told him that Martin had been there. Moore asked her if Martin had said anything about selling gasoline. The testimony does not reveal what reply Mrs. Moore made to this inquiry. Moore then asked his wife whether Martin was going to call back. Mrs. Moore replied that Martin did not say. Moore then observed to his wife, "I guess if he wants to get in touch with me, he will call me." However, neither Martin nor any other representative of Union thereafter made an effort to contact Moore.

Moore testified that his wife had told him that Martin had been to the station and had asked to see Moore. Moore made no effort thereafter to contact Martin or any other representative of Union. When asked why he had not called Martin upon learning of the latter's visit to his station, Moore testified:

> "A. All right. The reason I didn't call Mr. Martin was that if he had been willing to sell me gasoline and get a good account like that, he would have been down there waiting for me and I would have been ready to buy. I was ready to buy."

Arnold Johnson, a laborer who was in the employ of Moore from December, 1947, to August, 1952, testified concerning a conversation with Martin at the station shortly before the 20th or 21st of August, 1952. At that time, according to Johnson, the station was not in operation, and United Truck Lines was using some of the pumps for its own purposes. On this occasion, United Truck Lines, according to Johnson, was unloading a tanker of gasoline. Johnson asked Martin, no one else being present, if he had come down "to sell us gasoline." It is Johnson's testimony that Martin replied: "No, I come [sic] down to see if United Truck Lines was using this fuel for their own purpose."

This testimony was at variance with Johnson's testimony, in a deposition, that he had not talked to Martin, other than to say "good morning." It is also in conflict with Mrs. Moore's testimony that no person other than Frank Wilburn was present when Martin called.

If Johnson's testimony is to be given full credence, Martin's last call at the station had nothing to do with the sale of petroleum products. Since Union made no other contract with Moore, the finding would justifiably follow that Union had failed to act affirmatively upon Moore's offer to buy at Union's going prices for such a station. This would spell out refusal to deal.

But, in view of the disparity between Johnson's testimony at the trial, on the one hand, and his deposition and Mrs. Moore's testimony, on the other, perhaps the jury could not reasonably have found that Martin's last visit was unconnected with Moore's letter. Proceeding on this assumption, and bearing in mind that it was Union's next move, the question then presented is whether Martin made a reasonable effort to contact Moore. If Martin, on this occasion, did all that was reasonably required of Union to find Moore, for the purpose of consummating a sale of gasoline, there was no refusal to deal.

In our view, the jury could properly find that something more was required of Union at this late date than Martin's ten-minute and somewhat enigmatic call at a time when Moore was not at his station. A little longer wait at the service station, a telephone call, or a letter stating the basis on which Union would sell gasoline, would have been sufficient. Without anything of this kind, the jury was free to infer that, if Martin really went to the station to discuss the letter, it was to say "no." Union finally said "no," the jury could thus conclude, by discontinuing contact while in possession of Moore's written offer.

It is therefore our conclusion that the evidence was legally sufficient to support the jury finding that Moore was unable to obtain a supply of gasoline from Union.

General's Asserted Refusal to Deal

Again viewing the record in the light most favorable to the verdict, we turn to an examination of the evidence bearing upon General's asserted refusal to deal with Moore.

Arguing that the evidence is legally insufficient in this respect, appellants contend that it is uncontroverted that (1) after Tide Water ceased supplying Moore, General offered to supply him with gasoline at General's current tank wagon price; (2) this price was the current market price at which General was then selling or offering to sell gasoline to other service stations of like size and character; and (3) General's offer was refused by Moore.

Before considering what transpired between Moore and General after Tide Water ceased deliveries, it will be well to review the evidence favorable to Moore concerning their prior negotiations. In September or October, 1951, Moore telephoned to a Mr. Elmore, who was a branch manager for General. Elmore went to Moore's station the next day. Moore advised Elmore that the Tide Water contract could be terminated. Elmore indicated great interest in taking the account, stating that General needed representation in that area. "This is a chance that comes to a branch manager once in a lifetime," he told Moore. Elmore told Moore, however, that it was not in General's policy or program to take the account at that time.

In October, November, or December, 1951, a Mr. Falkner, representing General, went to Moore's station. Falkner tried to interest Moore in leasing a station from General on Boren Avenue, in Seattle. Moore looked over the Boren Avenue station and then told Falkner he would take it if he could also get a supply of gasoline for his Fourth Avenue South station. A week later, Falkner told Moore that General would not supply his Fourth Avenue South station. This concluded Moore's negotiations with General at that time.

Moore's supply contract with Tide Water terminated at the end of July, 1952. On the afternoon of August 11, 1952, Moore, in company with one of his employees, called at the Seattle offices of several of the appellants, including General. At General's office, he talked with Mr. Elmore. Moore stated that he was running out of gasoline, and offered to buy gasoline for cash. He said nothing about prices on that occasion, and did not ask for a supply contract or a commitment for a permanent supply. Elmore told Moore on this occasion that General was short of gasoline and could not sell any to Moore.

Later the same day, Moore sent a letter to General, similar to the letter sent on that day to Union and other appellants, offering to purchase all of this gasoline from General at the latter's "regular" price. General made no written response. Within two or three days, however, Elmore telephoned to Moore. According to Moore, Elmore asked if Moore would pay "tank wagon price" for gasoline.[11] Moore's response was that a station like his could not operate on tank wagon prices, but that he was willing to pay the price which a station similar to his would pay. According to Moore's testimony, Elmore then said that he would see what he could do for Moore about getting gasoline. Moore heard nothing more from Elmore or any other representative of General.

Albert E. Horn, Jr., General's division manager for Washington, testified that, on August 11, 1952, he authorized the supplying of Moore on a temporary basis at tank wagon prices. He further testified that he instructed Elmore to tell Moore that General would sell him gasoline for his service station on a day-to-day basis at General's posted tank wagon price until Moore could arrange for a supply elsewhere. According to Horn, Elmore later reported that these instructions had been carried out. Elmore did not testify.

The jury was entitled to believe Moore's version of what Elmore told him, and to reject the inference arising from Horn's testimony, that Elmore told him something else. If the jury accepted Moore's testimony in this regard, it could have found that General did not accept Moore's offer to buy gasoline, and did not make a counteroffer to sell gasoline to Moore. A seller's inquiry of a prospective buyer as to whether the latter would buy at an indicated price is not necessarily an offer to sell at that price.

Ordinarily, failure to accept, within a reasonable time, an offer to buy, or to make a counteroffer to sell, indicates refusal to deal. This is not always true, however, as the surrounding circumstances may cast such failure in a different light. Thus, if a buyer indicates to the seller in advance that he would not buy at the seller's current prices for similar sales, the seller's failure to offer goods at that price does not evidence a refusal to deal.

Appellants argue, in effect, that the uncontroverted evidence shows that this is what happened here. They produced testimony to the effect that General was in short supply, and was therefore, at the time in question, operating under a sales policy which precluded the taking on of new accounts at less than tank wagon prices.[12] Moore testified that he told Elmore that he could not operate on that price.

Moore testified further, however, that when he told this to Elmore, the latter stated that he would see what he could do. The jury could infer from this that General's price policy was not as inflexible as appellants' testimony would tend to indicate. If such prices were not flexible, then Moore, with his high-gallonage station in a location which Elmore had said was favorable, would be entitled to a discount such as General had previously given other stations, or so the jury could have found.

The jury could also have found that Moore was led to believe, by Elmore's closing remarks during their telephone conversation, that there would be further price negotiations. The jury was warranted in reasoning that, if Moore had been advised that General would, in no event, offer better than tank wagon prices, he might have accepted gasoline on such a basis for purposes of a temporary supply. But there were no further price negotiations, and Moore was never told that General would not offer a lower price. Viewed in this light, the jury was warranted in finding that Moore's offer to buy had, in effect, been rejected, and that no bona fide counteroffer had been made. This is enough to support the ultimate finding that General refused to deal with Moore.

[11] Moore gave this version of how the telephone conversation began:

"... He asked me if I was completely out of gasoline. And I told him I was. He asked me if I had gone to all the companies to try to get gasoline, and I told him that I had, and he said that he didn't like that; that it was a black eye to the industry. . . ."

[12] Moore, of course, strenuously disputes General's position concerning its 1952 shortages and resulting restriction upon the taking of new accounts. The sufficiency of the evidence to support a jury finding in Moore's favor on this point is not relevant to our present inquiry, which concerns refusal to deal regardless of reasons. The reasons for refusal, however, do become relevant on the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to support the jury finding of unlawful agreement, combination, or conspiracy. To avoid the necessity of again discussing this factual situation when we come to a discussion of the latter point, we state now that, in our opinion, the matter of General's 1952 gasoline shortages was sufficiently in dispute to present a jury question.

We therefore conclude that the evidence was legally sufficient to support the jury finding that Moore was unable to obtain a supply of petroleum products which would permit him to remain in business.

IV

PROOF OF AGREEMENT, COMBINATION, OR CONSPIRACY

This brings us to the question of whether the evidence was legally sufficient to support a jury finding that Moore's inability to obtain gasoline resulted from an agreement, combination, or conspiracy among the appellants in restraint of, or to monopolize, interstate trade or commerce.

[Interstate Commerce]

Appellants do not question the sufficiency of the evidence as to the interstate character of the trade or commerce in question.[13] They do, however, contend that the evidence is not legally sufficient to support a jury finding that Moore was refused a supply pursuant to, or in furtherance of, an unlawful agreement, combination, or conspiracy of the kind indicated.

[Purpose]

As foreshadowed by the pleadings, the agreement, combination, or conspiracy which Moore sought to prove was broad in scope. Its total objective, according to Moore, was no less than effective control and regulation of gasoline prices, and the monopolization, domination, and channelization of gasoline distribution in the Seattle area.

[Practices]

In proof of an arrangement between appellants having this breadth of purpose and complexity of design, evidence was submitted concerning a wide variety of asserted supply, marketing, and pricing practices. Included among these were practices relating to the discontinuance of split-pump accounts,[14] public posting of wholesale, or so-called "tank wagon" prices, granting of discounts from posted prices, withdrawal of discounts and allowances, exchange of price information, exchange of petroleum products between appellants, resale price directives, consignment sales, the so-called "clearance" program,[15] suppression of curb signs, and refusal to sell to price cutters.

[Evidence Insufficient]

An examination of the voluminous record of testimony and exhibits [16] brings us to the view that the evidence does not provide substantial support for a jury finding that all or any of the appellants entered into and carried out an agreement, combination, or conspiracy having the magnitude and ramifications pictured in the complaint.

Were this view concerning the sufficiency of the evidence dispositive of the appeal, it would be necessary to here set forth, at least in summary form, a resume of the evidence and our analysis of its deficiencies.

Failure to establish, prima facie, the broadly-alleged agreement, combination, or conspiracy does not, however, compel the conclusion that Moore did not make out a case. Concerted refusal to deal is the particular act or practice which is claimed to have damaged Moore. If there is substantial [13] In any event, the evidence was sufficient to support a jury finding that interstate trade and commerce was involved. See Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,746], 340 U. S. 231.

[14] A "split-pump" account is one in which the service station operator is permitted to sell the gasoline of two or more oil companies.

[15] Where a service station operator desired to change from one oil company to the other, the latter company's inquiry of the former as to whether the operator was contractually free to deal with the new company was called a request for "clearance."

[16] The trial lasted over three months. There were 72 witnesses, whose testimony required 20 volumes of printed record comprising 7,701 pages. There are 1,088 exhibits. According to the clerk of the district court, the record is the longest in any civil case ever appealed to this court from the Western District of Washington. It required more trial days than four of the five big antitrust cases brought by the United States in 1949 (13 F. R. D. 64). Including exhibits, the record compares in size with the government's famous Standard Oil case in 1911, which involved every phase of virtually the entire petroleum industry of the United States. Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1. One and a half days were alloted for oral argument before this court.

evidence to support a finding that for any reason touching the matter of prices or competition appellants agreed, combined, or conspired to deny gasoline to Moore, or to a class of dealers of which he was a member, and that Moore was damaged by a resulting act or practice of that kind, the verdict withstands appellants' factual challenge.

[Control of Price Cutting]

The trend of the evidence favorable to Moore suggests the nature of the limited agreement, combination, or conspiracy of this kind which the jury may have found to exist. It would be an agreement, combination, or conspiracy to control price cutting and curb-sign advertising by refusing gasoline to dealers whose severe price cutting and persistent curb-sign advertising bring them into controversy with their present suppliers.

There is substantial evidence that Moore was in this class of dealers. He was not content to hold his price-cutting practices within the limits generally adhered to by other price cutters. During a so-called "price war" in the spring of 1951, the other dealers dropped their prices from 27 cents a gallon for regular gasoline to 24.9 cents. Moore, however, first lowered his price to 24 cents, and later to 22.9 cents, both times over the strenuous objections of his supplier, Tide Water. Nor did he, for a considerable time, heed Tide Water's insistent request that his curb price signs, advertising this low price, be removed.

Moore finally agreed to remove the curb signs, and did so in August, 1951, in consideration of Tide Water agreement to release him from his contract so that he could obtain a supply elsewhere. Moore did not sign the termination papers which were later submitted, however, since Tide Water promised him only a ten-day supply of gasoline. Business relations between Moore and Tide Water deteriorated rapidly from this time on. A half cent of his 2½ cent a gallon discount on gasoline was taken away, and restored only after Moore's attorney negotiated with Tide Water. Moore was put on a C. O. D. basis, and later his Tide Water distributorship on batteries and tires was taken away. In November and December, 1951, according to Moore, Tide Water began delivering poor ethyl gasoline, and continued this for four months.

In resisting Tide Water's asserted pressure on him, Moore stopped payment on certain checks (paying them shortly afterwards), and, on occasion, paid for gasoline with small change. On two occasions, he ordered Tide Water employees off his premises.[17] Finally, on May 2, 1952, Tide Water served upon Moore a notice that his contract was being canceled effective July 30, 1952. As before stated, Tide Water's supply to Moore ended on the latter date.

There is also substantial evidence that the other appellants refused to deal with Moore after this controversy arose between him and Tide Water. This point has been fully discussed in a preceding section of this opinion.

[Reasons for Refusals To Deal]

The crucial inquiry, then, is whether there is substantial evidence to support a finding that these other appellants denied service to Moore pursuant to an agreement, combination, or conspiracy of the kind alleged, rather than as a result of a legitimate business decision, independently arrived at, unassociated with any such mutual arrangement or deliberate concert of action.

Each such appellant (except Union and General, which deny that they refused to deal) asserts that its individual refusal to deal with Moore, following the development of his controversy with Tide Water, was the result of a legitimate, independent business decision. The principal reasons advanced by individual appellants as to why they were unable to do business with Moore are that the company had a limited supply, which made it impracticable to take on new accounts, or that the company already had a retail outlet very close to Moore's station.

On the other hand, evidence favorable to Moore, and reasonable inferences which could be drawn therefrom, present a somewhat different picture.

Standard refused to do business with Moore in August, 1952, asserting that its supply position was critical. Considering the record as a whole, however, the jury was not required to accept this explanation.

[17] After 1947, Moore had refused to give Tide Water a financial statement. Moore testified that he refused to give Tide Water such statements because it would jeopardize his bargaining position when it came time to renew his contract if Tide Water knew how well he had been doing.

Moreover, there is evidence to indicate that in the previous year, after Moore's controversy with Tide Water arose, and at a time when Standard had no supply problem, it refused to deal with Moore because "it isn't our policy to take you." This decision was made after a period of negotiation, during which the parties seemed to reach agreement on prices. During the early part of these negotiations, the Standard representative had appeared anxious to take on Moore's account.

Union did not claim lack of gasoline or presence of an adjacent Union station as a reason for not dealing with Moore. Indeed, the position of that appellant is that it was always willing to deal. Yet, the evidence reviewed in a preceding section of this opinion indicates that Union several times rejected Moore's offer, and never quite got around to making a firm counteroffer. This in spite of the fact that representatives of Union who called upon Moore seemed to want his account.

General, like Union, claims that it was willing to deal with Moore after Tide Water discontinued, and asserts that Moore rejected its offer to sell at its prevailing market price. In a preceding section of this opinion, however, we have referred to evidence from which the jury could have concluded that Moore's written offer to buy at General's regular prices, communicated to General on August 12 or 13, 1952, was not acted upon. On August 11, 1952, General had orally refused to deal, asserting, as a reason, short supply of gasoline. Yet, as in the case of Standard, the evidence was such that the jury was not required to credit this assertion.

In the previous September or October, after Moore's controversy with Tide Water arose, his attempt then to obtain gasoline from General was likewise futile. The company representative who then negotiated with Moore had appeared elated to have the opportunity of taking his account, but wound up by telling Moore it was not in General's policy or program to do so. General's policy or program appeared not to stand in the way of leasing a Boren Avenue station to Moore, but only to delivering gasoline to the Fourth Avenue South station where he had had difficulty with Tide Water.

In June or July, 1952, a Richfield representative, answering Moore's request to open negotiations, gave several reasons why it would be to Moore's advantage to deal with Richfield. He was told that, while Moore's contract with Tide Water was a "longer deal" than Richfield was accustomed to, it was believed the Tide Water price could be matched. Moore was also told that it would make no difference that Richfield then had a station across the street. Richfield's Los Angeles office, however, rejected Moore's business for the asserted reasons that he was a price cutter and his discount practices would be "upsetting" to other Richfield accounts. Moore was not given this reason, but was told only that the deal was off.[18]

Moore made no attempt to purchase gasoline from Shell until 2:30 p.m., on August 11, 1952. This was twelve days after his Tide Water source had been terminated. On this occasion, Moore was told that Shell would not sell gasoline to him because there was a service station across the street. The representative who told this to Moore, however, stated that Shell would have solicited Moore's business had not Tide Water told Shell that Tide Water owned the 10,000-gallon tank on Moore's premises. This tank actually belonged to Moore. Replying to Moore's letter of August 11, 1952, offering to buy all of his gasoline from Shell, the company gave two reasons for refusing his business. One of these was that it would be a violation of antitrust laws to enter into an exclusive dealership arrangement. The second reason was that Shell products were then being marketed at the nearby Flajole Bros. Shell station.

[18] Richfield, Union, and, to some extent, Tide Water had fair trade clauses in their respective contracts with retail dealers. Under the 1937 Miller-Tydings amendment of the Sherman Act (15 U. S. C. A. § 1), and under chapter 19.88 of the Revised Code of Washington, a manufacturer may fix the minimum resale price of a trade-marked article. The practice is called "fair trading." Except for the period between the decision in Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert Distilleries Corp. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,823], 341 U. S. 384, on May 21, 1951, and the enactment of the McGuire Act on July 14, 1952 (66 Stat. 631, 632; 15 U. S. C. A. § 45), this minimum price is and was binding on dealers whether or not they signed an agreement to observe it. There may be circumstances, however, under which such agreements are illegal because of the existence of competition between the supplier and the retail dealer it supplies, for the business of certain ultimate consumers, (see Esso Standard Oil Co., v. Secatore's Inc., (1 Cir.) [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,695, 68,746] 246 F. (2d) 17, cert. den., — U. S. —, October 14, 1957) or for other reasons. See Report of the Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws, March 31, 1955, 152-153.

Moore made no effort to purchase gasoline from Texas until August 11, 1952. On the afternoon of that day, he went to the Texas office in Seattle and offered to buy gasoline for cash. He was denied a supply, on the ground that Texas had a company-owned station two blocks down the street. The company representative told Moore: "The Texas Company has lots of gasoline and is actively soliciting business but you are too close to us and we won't sell you." The same position was taken in that company's reply to Moore's letter of August 11, 1952.

The refusal of all of these appellants to deal with Moore, after the disagreement arose between him and Tide Water, was prophetic fulfillment of statements made to him by Tide Water representatives. While they were trying to bring him into line on prices and use of curb signs, officials of that company told him, "We can break a service station operator like you if you don't do what you are told on these price signs"; "If you don't take the price sign down, when I get through with you no company in town will sell you gas"; "You are being foolish to get the companies mad at you like this for not taking the price sign down." This sort of threat could well lead the jury to infer that Tide Water felt assured that its pressure on Moore would find support from the other appellants.

[Experiences of Other Dealers]

Moore was not alone in finding that severe price-cutting practices seemed to close the gates to all sources of supply.[19] Extensive evidence was presented concerning the difficulties experienced by seven aggressive price cutters in obtaining a supply of gasoline. The two instances of this kind most favorable to Moore involved a "Gasoteria" operation by one John Brady, and a General dealer named Victor W. Markov.

All appellants except Shell (but including Shell's predecessor) either rejected in writing Brady's offer to buy gasoline, or failed to respond to his offer. In making this solicitation, Brady had advised each of these companies that he operated a self-service "Gasoteria" station, and that it was his policy to sell gasoline at a discount of three or four cents a gallon off the general retail price. When this solicitation was made, his current source of supply, Clipper Oil Company (which then obtained its gasoline from Texas), had been cut off, due to a controversy which had nothing to do with prices. This quarrel with Clipper was soon settled, and Brady resumed operations. Between 1949 and 1952, Brady endeavored to obtain his gasoline from Texas, General, and Standard, but without success. In 1952, however, he did obtain a substantial amount of gasoline from Signal Oil Company. Signal was then an operating division of Standard.

Markov got into difficulties with his then supplier, General, during the 1951 "price war," when he dropped his prices and thereby substantially increased his sales. General tried to get Markov to raise his prices, but he refused. General then discontinued sales to Markov, but leased his station and continued to deliver gasoline on a consignment basis. This required Markov to sell at prices fixed by General. When Markov demanded permission to lower his prices, General canceled his consignment contract. It then raised his wholesale price to the tank wagon level. Sales continued on this basis to the time of the trial.

In September, 1952, Markov, who then had a reputation as a price cutter, attempted to obtain gasoline from each of the other appellants except Tide Water. Standard turned him down on the ground that it was experiencing a shortage of supply. Shell and Union advised Markov that they were not interested because they were selling to other service stations in the vicinity.[20] Texas told Markov that it was not interested in taking on new business. Richfield declined to sell to Markov because of its "fair trading" policy.

There is in the record other evidence tending to indicate concert of action among appellants in suppressing curb price signs. In the case of General, there was testimony

[19] The evidence favorable to Moore would not support a finding that it was the general practice of appellants to deny petroleum products to all price-cutting service stations. In the Seattle area, there have always been price-cutting service stations supplied by appellants. Moore, who was himself a price cutter for thirteen years, was supplied by Tide Water until July 30, 1952. Tide Water at all times knew of Moore's price-cutting activities.

[20] When Markov first commenced business in November, 1949, however, Shell attempted to obtain his account despite the existence of its adjacent station.

that the action of Markov in displaying price signs was reported by Union, Richfield, and General employees to their respective Los Angeles offices.

A former Richfield employee testified that he was under instructions to report to his office when signs were displayed at the service stations of other dealers. When he reported the presence of such signs displayed by competitive dealers, "the signs usually came down."

Moore, who was a Tide Water dealer, testified that a salesman for Texas, in urging Moore to take down his price sign, stated: "It is in the program to get the price signs down on the Avenue and clean up the Avenue." Moore also testified that, during a 1950 "price war," a representative of his supplier, Tide Water, told him that the company would not sell Moore any more gasoline until he took his price sign down. A Shell station across the street was also displaying such a sign at that time. The Tide Water representative told Moore, "I will have that sign down in five minutes from the time yours is down." Moore took his sign down. The Tide Water man then went to a telephone and made some calls. The Shell sign came down within five minutes.

A retail dealer of Chevron (Standard) products was told by a Standard salesman that if he took his sign down, the signs of other dealers "would be down as soon as possible." This dealer testified that stations in his area representing three or four major oil companies took their signs down about the same time that he did. Some of the exhibits show that Seattle representatives of Tide Water made surveys of the price sign situation in Seattle, determining the name, address, and oil company represented, for use by its San Francisco office.

[Favorable Evidence—Summary]

The foregoing resume deals with what we regard as the most significant evidence favorable to Moore bearing directly upon appellants' apparent unanimity of action and possible contact with each other concerning severe price cutters and persistent displayers of curb price signs. There is a great deal of additional evidence, however, tending to show parallel action by appellants, or actual contacts and communications between them, concerning other supply, storage, marketing, and pricing practices. The significance of evidence of this kind lies in its tendency to picture a business setting and relationship which invites inferences favorable to Moore's position.

Among the matters dealt with in the evidence of this character are (1) the apparently concurrent and uniform act of all appellants, in 1936 (excluding Shell but including its predecessor) in discontinuing "split-pump" accounts in the Seattle area, and requiring each retail dealer to obtain his supply exclusively from one oil company;[21] (2) the practice of all appellants in posting their respective tank wagon prices in conspicuous public places, with the resulting tendency towards uniformity as to the wholesale prices of all appellants;[22] (3) the uniform practice of all appellants in allowing unpublished discounts from the posted prices to selected dealers; (4) the practice of all appellants in exchanging petroleum products with each other to meet special supply or storage problems as they developed; and (5) the uniform practice of all appellants whereby they would not undertake to serve a retail dealer already in business without contacting his present supplier and obtaining "clearance."

The summary of the evidence, as set out in this section of the opinion, is necessarily fragmentary, as compared to the bulk of the entire record. Moore will be able to point to items of evidence in his favor which have not been mentioned. Appellants will be able to show that a more complete review of the evidence here adverted to would suggest weaknesses in Moore's case not apparent from a reading of this opinion. Our purpose has been only to indicate, in [21] In attempting to prove the existence of a combination or conspiracy during a particular span of years, it is permissible to show the relationship existing and practices followed during earlier years. American Tobacco Co v. United States, [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,468], 328 U. S. 781, 790.

[22] In achieving this uniformity, an appellant whose prices were high would frequently lower its prices to accord with the posted price schedule of other appellants. But with respect to at least one appellant (Texas), "meeting competition" meant not only lowering prices to parallel a lower price posted by others, but also the raising of prices to produce such uniformity. In the case of Richfield, Texas, and Union, supervising officers sometimes requested local representatives to check the posted price schedule of competition. As to each such company, local representatives were also occasionally advised of information gained by the supervising office as a result of its own check of posted price schedules.

a general way, the lines of evidence which have a tendency to lead in the direction of the jury verdict.

[Circumstantial Evidence]

This evidence, of course, is largely circumstantial. The fact that the evidence is circumstantial, however, does not necessarily affect its sufficiency to support a finding of agreement, combination, or conspiracy. Such arrangements, as the Supreme Court has said, "are seldom capable of proof by direct testimony, and may be inferred from the things actually done. . . ." Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' Ass'n v. United States, 234 U. S. 611, 612.[23]

That the evidence tending to prove a fact is wholly circumstantial is not ground for setting aside a finding of such fact unless, as a matter of law, reasonable minds, as triers of fact, must be in agreement that some reasonable hypothesis other than the existence of such fact could be drawn from the evidence. Elwert v. United States (9 Cir.), 231 F. (2d) 928, 935. In applying this test, the evidence is to be viewed as a whole and not link by link. C-O-Two Fire Equipment Co. v. United States (9 Cir.) [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,290], 197 F. (2d) 489, 494, cert. den., 344 U. S. 892.

Where the circumstantial evidence favorable to the verdict meets this test, an appellate court will not "search the record for conflicting circumstantial evidence in order to take the case away from the jury on a theory that the proof gives equal support to inconsistent and uncertain inferences." Tennant v. Peoria & P. U. Ry. Co., 321 U. S. 29, 35.

[Extrajudicial Declarations]

A considerable part of the evidence reviewed above concerned the acts of individual appellants and of their agents or employees, and the extrajudicial declarations of such agents or employees. In evaluating evidence of this kind, it must be kept in mind that evidence of such acts and extrajudicial declarations are not to be considered as against other alleged members, unless there is independent evidence establishing, prima facie, that such others were members of the conspiracy. Glasser v. United States, 315 U. S. 60, 74-75.[24]

[Parallel Business Behavior]

Part of the evidence, as previously noted, concerned asserted instances of parallel action knowingly taken, rather than actual contracts and communications between appellants. Consciously parallel business behavior in matters touching prices and competition does not itself constitute a Sherman Act offense. It is, however, admissible circumstantial evidence of an underlying agreement, combination, or conspiracy concerning such matters. The probative value of such evidence is to be determined by the trier of the facts. Theatre Enterprises, Inc. v. Paramount Film Distributing Corp. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,640], 346 U. S. 537, 540-541.[25]

[Refusal to Deal]

A merchant is ordinarily entitled to develop business relationships with whom he pleases. United States v. Colgate Co., 250 U. S. 300. Accordingly, the act of an individual person or company in refusing to deal with another usually does not, standing alone, have antitrust significance. There are some exceptions to what has just been said, as noted in the Report of the Attorney General's National Committee, supra, 134-136. We need not determine whether the record contains a factual basis for applying any of these exceptions against Tide Water or any other appellant. This is true, because the theory of this action, as set out in the pleadings and unchallenged instructions, and as argued to the jury, does not admit of a verdict based upon individual refusal to deal. The only injury for which Moore sought damages was that said to have resulted from an unlawful agreement, combination, or conspiracy.[26]

[23] See, also, Interstate Circuit v. United States, [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,205], 306 U. S. 208, 221; Flintkote Co. v. Lysfjord (9 Cir.) [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,674], 246 F. (2d) 368, cert. den. — U. S. —, October 14, 1957.

[24] This rule does not deal with the testimony of members of such an arrangement, or of their agents and employees, but only with independent evidence of facts and extrajudicial declarations. Where such a member, agent, or employee does testify, independent evidence of acts and extrajudicial declarations is admissible for purposes of contradiction. See 2 Restatement, Agency, 642, § 285, comment a.

[25] See, also, Report of the Attorney General's National Committee, supra, 36-40.

[26] For the same reasons, the verdict is not sustainable as against Tide Water on the theory (which may or may not have factual support in the record) that Tide Water participated in an agreement, combination, or conspiracy with other service station operators who were in competition with Moore.

Where an act or practice of refusing to deal is shown to be pursuant to, or in furtherance of, an agreement, combination, or conspiracy, Sherman Act liability is encountered. It is now well established, and is not here questioned, that an agreement, combination, or conspiracy between two or more persons engaged in interstate commerce, to withdraw or withhold custom from another, or with a class of others, is violative of the antitrust laws.[27] Concerted restraint of this kind is illegal, even if intended to meet or overcome an admittedly invidious trade practice.[28]

Evidence tending to show that there was a legitimate business reason for the act of an individual merchant in refusing to deal is always admissible in contradiction of a case built upon circumstantial evidence. But, if there is sufficient evidence to support a finding that a merchant entered into such an agreement, combination, or conspiracy, the fact that his individual refusal to deal may be explainable as a reasonable business decision is not excusatory of liability. He will be deemed to have set in motion an illegal undertaking, and will be held accountable for damage caused by the overt act of any member, pursuant to or in furtherance of the plan.

[Conspiracy]

This is but an application of the general law of conspiracy. See Marron v. United States (9 Cir.), 8 F. (2d) 251, 258. It is based upon the principle that a conspiracy creates an agency relationship, and that therefore each member is authorized by the other members to perform acts in furtherance of the common objective. Las Vegas Merchant Plumbers' Ass'n v. United States (9 Cir.) [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,673], 210 F. (2d) 732, cert. denied, 348 U. S. 817.

No express agreement, of course, is necessary to constitute an unlawful combination or conspiracy. American Tobacco Co. v. United States [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,468], 328 U. S. 781, 809. It is sufficient if persons, with knowledge that concerted action was contemplated and invited, "give adherence to and then participate in a scheme." Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,237], 333 U. S. 683, 716.

[Evidence Sufficient]

Viewing this evidence, as we are required to, in the light most favorable to Moore, and having in mind the applicable rules and principles to which reference has been made, we hold that the jury finding of agreement, combination, or conspiracy, and resulting overt act, is supportable as against all appellants.

As to all appellants, the evidence is sufficient to support a jury finding of agreement, combination, or conspiracy to control price cutting and curb-sign advertising by refusing gasoline to dealers whose severe price cutting and persistent curb-sign advertising bring them into controversy with their present suppliers. The evidence, is sufficient to support a jury finding, that, in 1951 and 1952, Moore became such a dealer, and that, pursuant to and in furtherance of the agreement, combination, or conspiracy, the appellants withheld their custom.

V

Admissibility of Exhibits Received in Proof of Agreement, Combination, or Conspiracy

[Nature of Exhibits]

Hundreds of exhibits were offered and received in evidence in proof of the alleged unlawful agreement, combination, or conspiracy. Most of these consist of photostatic copies of documents found in the Seattle and California files and records of appellants. These documents had been made available in response to orders to produce. They consist largely of the originals or copies of letters, telegrams, memoranda, and reports. Some were handwritten, some were typewritten, and others were mimeographed or printed.

[Trial Court—Objections]

It is not questioned on this appeal that the photostatic copies are accurate reproductions of the documents in question, or

[27] Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc., [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62.737], 340 U. S. 211; Associated Press v. United States, [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57.384], 326 U. S. 1; United States v. Frankfort Distilleries, Inc., [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,338], 324 U. S. 293; Millinery Creators' Guild, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56.102], 312 U. S. 469; Fashion Originators' Guild v. Federal Trade Commission, [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56.101], 312 U. S. 457.

[28] Fashion Originators' Guild v. Federal Trade Commission, supra; Report of the Attorney General's National Committee, supra, 133.

that the documents came from appellants' files and records. Appellants objected to the introduction of most of these exhibits, however, on the ground, among others, that they constitute hearsay, and that no foundation had been laid for their admission under any exception to the hearsay rule.

In nearly every instance where such an objection was made, it was overruled and the exhibit was admitted in evidence. The trial court held that exhibits of this kind which were received in evidence were admissible under the exception to the hearsay rule which applies to business records.[29] In the federal courts, this exception is sanctioned by statute.[30]

Appellants argue that the admission of these exhibits on this ground and over appellants' objection constituted prejudicial error. While several hundred exhibits of this kind are said to have been improperly admitted, our attention is specifically directed to 119 such exhibits. In their specifications of error, appellants provide detailed record references and arguments as to 46 of these exhibits, contending that they exemplify both the impropriety of what was done and the prejudice which resulted. Six exhibits or series of exhibits, selected for illustrative purposes, are dealt with at length in the briefs.

[Types of Exhibits]

Most of the memoranda, letters, and telegrams introduced in evidence in this fashion consisted of interoffice communications between officials of the same company. Many of these communications dealt with such matters as the marketing and pricing policies and activities of the company, of other oil companies, or of customer or competing service station operators. Others dealt with problems of supply, plant and service station facilities, or competition. Some of the communications provided factual information. Others contained expressions of opinion, suggestions, instructions, or requests for information.

In addition to these interoffice communications, there were many memoranda from salesmen or other field representatives to their superiors. These memoranda were largely used to report the observations of the writer, or information supplied by others, concerning the marketing and pricing policies and practices of other oil companies and of customer or competing service station operators. These field memoranda were sometimes handwritten on printed memo forms supplied for the purpose.

A number of the exhibits were reproductions of weekly reports or surveys of highest, lowest, and average prices posted at retail outlets in specified areas.

Admissibility as Business Records

[Statute]

To be admissible under 28 U. S. C. A. § 1732, the writing must have been made "as a memorandum or record" of some "act, transaction, occurrence, or event." The memorandum or record must have been made in the "regular course" of the business. It must also have been in the regular course of such business to make the memorandum or record "at the time of such act, transaction, occurrence, or event, or within a reasonable time thereafter."

The probability of trustworthiness of memoranda and records made and maintained as provided in § 1732 lies in the fact that they are routine reflections of the day-to-day operations of the business in whose files the memoranda and reports are found. Palmer v. Hoffman, supra, pages 113-114. The matters which reflect the day-to-day operations of a commercial enterprise are those in which it is directly concerned as a participant. Illustrative of these [29] As apparently recognized by all concerned, most of these exhibits constituted hearsay, since substantially all of them were offered to prove the truth of the contents, and were not subject to the test of cross-examination. See Palmer v. Hoffman, 318 U. S. 109, 112; 5 Wigmore, Evidence (3d ed., 1940) 3, 376, §§ 1367, 1530.

[30] 28 U. S. C. A. § 1732, subd. (a) of which reads as follows:

"(a) In any court of the United States and in any court established by Act of Congress, any writing or record, whether in the form of an entry in a book or otherwise, made as a memorandum or record of any act, transaction, occurrence, or event, shall be admissible as evidence of such act, transaction, occurrence, or event, if made in regular course of any business, and if it was the regular course of such business to make such memorandum or record at the time of such act, transaction, occurrence, or event or within a reasonable time thereafter.

"All other circumstances of the making of such writing or record, including lack of personal knowledge by the entrant or maker, may be shown to affect its weight, but such circumstances shall not affect its admissibility.

"The term 'business,' as used in this section, includes business, profession, occupation, and calling of every kind."

are such matters as bids, offers, purchases, sales, deliveries, price quotations, credit extensions, loans, rentals, salary and wage payments and deductions, inventory changes, and bank deposits.

[Matters Outside of Business]

It follows that a writing which does not pertain to a matter in which the business was a direct participant, but to some incident, circumstance, or activity outside that business, is not a memorandum or record of an "act, transaction, occurrence, or event" within the meaning of the statute. In this event, the writing is not admissible under § 1732, notwithstanding it may have been made in keeping with systematic and routine procedures, and concerns a matter of importance to the business. See Palmer v. Hoffman, supra; Clainos v. United States (D. C. Cir.), 163 F. (2d) 593.

A great many of the exhibits in question consist of memoranda, letters, and reports dealing with the pricing and marketing policies of oil companies other than the one in whose files the writing was found. Other such exhibits deal with the like policies and practices of service station operators who were not customers of the company in whose files the writing was found. For the reasons just stated, such writings are not business records, and should not have been admitted under § 1732.

[Opinions or Conclusions]

The considerations discussed above and the context of § 1732, read as a whole, also indicate that a writing cannot ordinarily be considered a "memorandum or record" of an "act, transaction, occurrence, or event," unless the recitals in such writing are factual in nature. There are special circumstances under which writings containing expressions of opinion or conclusions, as distinguished from factual statements, may be admissible under the statute. This may be done, however, only where the subject matter is such that the expression of an opinion or conclusion calls for professional or scientific knowledge or skill, and where the opinion or conclusion is expressed by one having the required special competence and authorized to do so by the person or company maintaining the memorandum or record.[31]

A good many of the exhibits in question contain expressions of opinion, or conclusions, concerning the reason why another oil company or a noncustomer service station operator took, or failed to take, certain action, or concerning the probable course such companies or persons would follow in the future. Expressions of opinions or conclusions on such matters do not call for professional or scientific knowledge or skill It follows that exhibits containing such recitals were not admissible under § 1732.

[Information—Unauthorized Persons]

A memorandum or record cannot be considered as having been made in the "regular course" of business, within the meaning of § 1732, unless it was made by an authorized person, to record information known to him or supplied by another authorized person. The second paragraph of § 1732(a) expressly provides that the entrant or maker need not have personal knowledge of the matters recited in the memorandum or record. Wheeler v. United States (D. C. Cir.), 211 F. (2d) 19, 23, cert. denied 347 U. S. 1019. But where the entrant or maker records information supplied by others, it must appear that "it was part of their regular course of business to report to him what the declarants themselves knew, as it was part of his business to record what they said." United States v. Grayson (2 Cir.), 106 F. (2d) 863, 869.[32] Where the information comes to the entrant or maker from unauthorized persons, the memorandum or record is therefore inadmissible, not because it contains hearsay, but because it was not made in the regular course of business.

With regard to some, but not all, of these exhibits, there was evidence to indicate that the writing had been prepared in the course of the writer's duties as an employee of the [31] See, for example, Medina v. Erickson (9 Cir.), 226 F. (2d) 475, 482, cert. denied 351 U. S. 912 (doctors' consultation reports, made in accordance with hospital regulations); Moran v. Pittsburgh-Des Moines Steel Co. (3 Cir.), 183 F. (2d) 467, 473 (report of U. S. Bureau of Mines concerning explosion); Pekelis v. Transcontinental & Western Air (2 Cir.), 187 F. (2d) 122, cert. denied, 341 U. S. 951 (report of company accident investigation board). But see Chapman v. United States (5 Cir.), 194 F. (2d) 974, 978, cert. denied, 344 U. S. 821, criticizing the Pekelis and Moran decisions.

[32] See, also, Gencarella v. Fyfe (1 Cir.), 171 F. (2d) 419; Clanios v. United States (D. C. Cir), 163 F. (2d) 593. Contra: Pollack v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. (3 Cir.), 138 F. (2d) 123, 129; United States v. General Motors Corp. (7 Cir.) [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,120], 121 F. (2d) 376, 409, cert. denied, 314 U. S. 618.

company maintaining the record. In many of these exhibits, however, there is information which the writer attributed to others. This is particularly true with respect to memoranda from the field. In few, if any, of these instances was any showing made that the person supplying such information to the writer had the duty to do so. In most cases, the lack of such authority is self-evident, for the information was attributed to a service station operator or other person having no relationship with the company which could give rise to such a duty.[33] Exhibits falling in this category were not admissible under § 1732.

[Regular Course of Business]

A memorandum or record cannot be considered as having been made in the "regular course" of business, within the meaning of § 1732, unless it was made pursuant to established company procedures for the systematic or routine and timely making and preserving of company records.[34]

As before noted, it was established with regard to some, but not all, of these exhibits that the writing had been prepared in the course of the writer's duties as an employee of the company. On a good many of the papers, there were initials or other marks to indicate that the communication, after being transmitted, had come to the notice of one or more of the company's officials. In most instances, however, it was not established that the internal procedures of the company required that such writings be prepared, transmitted, and filed systematically, or as a matter of routine.

Concerning almost all of the items comprising the grist of interoffice memoranda and letters which were introduced, the nonexistence of any such company procedure seems almost self-evident. They were patently intended as communications between employees, and not as records of company activity. Many of them were casual and informal in nature, seeking or providing information of a kind which could be, and no doubt often was, communicated by telephone or in conference. Most of them were apparently written as a result of the exercise of individual judgment and discretion.

If there was any systematic or routine procedure being followed in the preparation and filing of such writings, the burden was upon appellee to prove it. He failed to do so, at least with regard to most such exhibits. Where this foundation was lacking, the exhibit was not admissible under § 1732.[35]

With regard to few, if any, of these exhibits was there testimony indicating that it was a regularly established business procedure to make such memoranda or records at the time of the act, transaction, occurrence, or event therein described, or within a reasonable time thereafter. In numerous instances, the writings themselves reveal that they had not been prepared with any particular or general time limit in mind. Some of the documents contain references to acts which occurred or policies which [33] Perhaps the most extreme example of this kind is plaintiff's exhibit 6-B. It is a report by an unidentified salesman named "Art" to Union's local manager, about a Tide Water dealer. Received as a business record of Union, it reads in part:

"Mr. Chris Pieren, Associated dealer at 7120 East Marginal Way told me today that Associated has removed off policy discounts from their self-serve dealers and has discontinued selling to them unless they raise their posted price to the regular retail level.

"Bill Scholdt, operator of Bill's Gas Well at 10300 East Marginal Way, said the Harris Petroleum had been approached by two Associated Self-Serve dealers formerly supplied by them for their further supply since Associated was going to take away their discount. . . ."

[34] The existence of a document or its presence in the file of a corporation does not, without more, render it admissible under § 1732. National Labor Relations Bd. v. Sharples Chemicals, Inc. (6 Cir.), 209 F. (2d) 645. That the company procedures must provide for systematic or routine entry of such records, see Palmer v. Hoffman, supra; New York Life Ins. Co. v. Taylor (D. C. Cir.), 147 F. (2d) 297, 303; Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Co. v. Norwich Pharmacal Co. (2 Cir.), 18 F. (2d) 934; 5 Wigmore, Evidence (3d ed. 1940) 373, § 1525. The requirement that the procedure call for timely entry of such records is expressly spelled out in § 1732(a) in these words: ". . . and if it was the regular course of such business to make such memorandum or record at the time of such act, transaction, occurrence, or event or within a reasonable time thereafter."

[35] It is not suggested that the writings were inadmissible because they were in the form of memoranda or letters. It is expressly provided in § 1732 that writings which meet the requirements of that statute are admissible "whether in the form of an entry in a book or otherwise." Thus, informal memoranda, prepared for the purpose of recording company acts, transactions, occurrences, or events, dictated as a regular company practice within a reasonable time afterwards, would be admissible as records made in the regular order of business. See Smith v. Bear (2 Cir.), 237 F. (2d) 79.

were established a considerable time before the writing was prepared. Others do not refer to past acts and events at all, but contain predictions as to what would or should occur in the future. Exhibits unsupported by foundation evidence showing adherence to company procedures calling for prompt preparation of the writing were not admissible under § 1732.

[Decisions]

In reaching the conclusions stated above, concerning the lack of adequate foundation to warrant the admission of these exhibits under § 1732, we have not overlooked the decisions relied upon by appellee. For the reasons stated below, we believe that they do not support appellee's position.

Southard v. United States (9 Cir.), 218 F. (2d) 943, involves § 1733, not § 1732. In Sheehan v. Municipal Light & Power Co. (2 Cir.), 151 F. (2d) 65, it was held that copies of certain letters were admissible under the predecessor statute (28 U. S. C. A. § 695). These copies, however, did not constitute hearsay. They were not admitted to prove the truth of the contents, but only to show that notice of certain action had been given. In Waters v. Kings County Trust Co. (2 Cir.), 144 F. (2d) 680, cert. denied, 323 U. S. 769, the question was whether the administration of a trust is a "business," within the meaning of the business records act. It was not questioned that the writings, consisting of a bank's history sheet or diary of events, were otherwise admissible under the act.

Landay v. United States (6 Cir.), 108 F. (2d) 698, 704, cert. denied, 309 U. S. 681, concerned the admissibility of corporate books to prove certain stock transactions between corporations. They were identified by the one who superintended the making of the records, and the entries were, the court said, "prepared in the ordinary routine, which warrants their reliability." In Stillman v. United States (9 Cir.), 177 F. (2d) 607, it was held only that a proper foundation had been laid for the introduction of certain business records, where a partner had admitted that they were "the books" of the partnership.

United States v. General Motors Corporation (7 Cir.) [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,120], 121 F. (2d) 376, 409, cert. denied, 314 U. S. 618, comes the closest to supporting appellee's position. It is stated in that opinion that intracompany reports are admissible, under the predecessor business records act, "as recorded acts or transactions made in the regular course of business." The court went on to say, however, that most of the errors assigned in connection with this class of evidence were not argued, and that the appellants admitted that none of such evidence was prejudicial in and of itself, though its cumulative weight might influence the jury. The court expressly stated that the appellants "could not possibly have been prejudiced or injured" by the reception of such evidence, either in isolation or in its entirety.

[Outline of Factors]

In discussing the admissibility, under § 1732, of the exhibits introduced in the case before us, it has not been practicable to deal individually with the hundreds of items which were offered and received. It has been our purpose, however, to outline the factors to be considered in ruling upon these or other like exhibits offered on a different record at a new trial.

[Inadequate Foundation]

In our view, there was an inadequate foundation for the admission, as business records, of most of these exhibits.

The objections which appellants voiced to the introduction under § 1732, of the exhibits in question were sufficient to present all of the considerations which have been discussed above.

[Prejudicial Error]

That the introduction of these exhibits was prejudicial to appellants is not denied. All of the 46 exhibits mentioned in the specifications of error were referred to, and many were quoted, in the argument to the jury made on behalf of appellee. A great many additional exhibits of this kind are referred to in appellee's brief as providing evidence of an unlawful agreement, combination, or conspiracy.

[New Trial]

If none of these inadmissible exhibits had been received, the evidence would have been insufficient to support the jury finding that there was such an unlawful agreement, combination, or conspiracy. If we were able to say that this evidence would not be admissible on any record which could be made, and is irreplaceable, we would be warranted in directing dismissal of the action.

On a new trial, however, a proper foundation may be supplied for the admission of some of these documents, and other admissible evidence may be found in substitution of evidence here found to be inadmissible.[36] The attainment of substantial justice therefore requires that the action be not dismissed, but that it be remanded for a new trial. See 28 U. S. C. A., § 2106; Rule 61, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, 28 U. S. C. A.

Admissibility as Extrajudicial Admissions of a Party-Opponent.

[Contentions]

Appellee, however, argues that, if these exhibits were inadmissible under § 1732, they were, in any event, properly received as extrajudicial admissions of a party-opponent (herein referred to as admissions). To this contention, appellants reply that (1) the course of the trial precludes sustaining the introduction of the documents as admissions; and (2) there was no foundation for introduction of the documents as admissions.

[Foundation Evidence]

Turning to the first of these points, it is appellants' position that the challenged exhibits were offered and received only on the ground that they were business records admissible under § 1732. The possible admissibility of these exhibits as admissions having assertedly not been raised and inquired into at the trial, they should not now, appellants argue, be held admissible on the latter ground.

Examination of the record indicates that appellants are correct in stating that these exhibits were admitted as business records, and not as admissions. Counsel for Moore, on two or three occasions, sought to admit documents of this kind as admissions. Each time, the trial court rejected this contention, and made it clear that the writings were receivable, if at all, only as records made in the regular course of business. Conforming to this ruling, the foundation evidence was directed only to the requirements of § 1732 as a ground for admission.[37]

All of the discussion and argument of counsel concerning the admissibility of individual exhibits, with the possible exception noted in the last footnote, were directed to that inquiry. Likewise, the comments of the court regarding the ground of admissibility concerned only that line of inquiry. As a result, the challenged exhibits were received only on the basis that they constituted memoranda or records made in the regular course of business.

In view of what has been said, it would be manifestly unfair for us to now hold these exhibits admissible on a different ground, assuming that the evidence in the record would support such a ruling. Appellants have had no trial court opportunity to inquire into the factual basis for admission of the exhibits on any ground other than that they were business records.[38]

Upon a new trial of this action, Moore may seek introduction of some or all of these documents as admissions. We therefore consider it appropriate to state the principles to be applied in the event this effort is made. We speak here not of the foundation which must be laid to establish the authenticity and genuineness of such writings.[39] Our purpose is to indicate what showing Moore must make to warrant a determination that a properly authenticated [36] Some of these exhibits which were admitted to establish the truth of the recitals therein contained (and so were hearsay) may also be admissible on a new trial for limited and non-hearsay purposes, such as to show the orders of a superior, pattern of business conduct, contemporary explanations of ambiguous conduct, notice, or motive. In this event, it would not be necessary to qualify them as business records, extrajudicial admissions, or under any other exception to the hearsay rule.

[37] There is one possible exception to what has just been said. This concerns Plaintiff's Exhibits 28-A, 28-C, 29-E, and 32-A. The witness who gave the additional testimony concerning these exhibits testified that they had been prepared in Associated's San Francisco office, and that he had no knowledge of the procedure followed. Conceding that, as to these exhibits, a foundation for their admission as business records had not been established, counsel for appellee reoffered them only as against Associated, and on the theory that they were admissions. We have failed to find, in this voluminous record, where this reoffer of these exhibits was acted upon.

[38] See Shepard v. United States, 290 U. S. 96, 103; 1 Wigmore, Evidence (3d ed. 1940), 320, note 14.

[39] Where a document is not admissible as a memorandum or record made in the regular course of business, its authenticity and genuineness must be established in accordance with familiar rules pertaining to the authentication of private writings in general. See the cases cited in 32 C. J. S., Evidence, pages 606 et seq., § 706.

document may be received, as an admission, to prove the truth of the statements therein made.

[Extrajudicial Admissions]

Extrajudicial admissions of a party-opponent are receivable as exceptions to the hearsay rule. [40] In our case, the documents consist of the writings of employees and agents of the companies against which, at a new trial, they would be produced. To obtain their reception as admissions, it must therefore be made to appear that the statements in question were made or acted upon under circumstances which require appellant corporations to accept responsibility for them as admissions.

The writings here in question were, for the most part, prepared and transmitted by employees and agents of the appellant company in whose files the documents were found. However, they were not, with a few exceptions, communications to persons outside such company. They were interoffice memoranda, letters, telegrams, reports, and the like. It follows that there is here no room for application of the rule [41] that the statement is the principal's if the agent or employee was authorized to make it to a third person. A report made by an employee or agent to his principal, and not to a third person, is not, as such, the principal's statement or extrajudicial admission.[42]

If, however, a corporation, through its shareholders, board of directors, or authorized management officials, vouches for part or all of an employee's or agent's statement, then the part vouched for is receivable against the corporation as an adoptive admission. It is not necessary, in such case, to show that the statement was expressly vouched for. If authorized management officials direct that business be conducted in reliance upon a particular intramural statement or report, and it is so conducted without reservation, the company has, by implication, adopted the statement or report, and is chargeable with it as an extrajudicial admission.

VI

Cautionary Instructions Concerning Acts or Extrajudicial Declarations of Coconspirators

As stated in a preceding section of this opinion, evidence concerning the acts and extrajudicial declarations of one member of an asserted agreement, combination, or conspiracy are not to be considered as against other alleged members unless there is independent evidence establishing, prima facie, that such others were members of the conspiracy.

When evidence of this kind is received, a cautionary instruction should be given to the jury, to be repeated at the end of the trial, calling attention to the limited effect to be given to such evidence.

Appellants complain of the cautionary instruction here given, asserting that the jury was not clearly told that, in order to impose liability upon any individual appellant, Moore had to connect that appellant with the alleged agreement, combination, or conspiracy, by evidence apart from the acts and declarations of any other appellant. Instead, according to appellants, the court permitted the jury to determine the complicity of one appellant from evidence of the acts and declarations of others.

Appellee argues that appellants are giving the trial court's cautionary instructions a strained construction, and that appellants did not, during the trial, point to the asserted defect they now rely upon.

Since the case must now be returned for a new trial, it is sufficient for us to say that the cautionary instruction dealing with this matter should clearly indicate that evidence of the acts and extrajudicial declarations of the agents and employees of one appellant is not to be considered in determining whether another appellant entered into the asserted agreement, combination, or conspiracy. However, if the jury finds, from substantial evidence independent of the acts and extrajudicial declarations of the agents and employees of other appellants, that a particular appellant entered into such an arrangement, then the evidence of such acts [40] For a discussion of the distinction between extrajudicial admissions and statements of fact against interest, see 4 Wigmore, Evidence (3d ed. 1940) 6, § 1049; McCormick, Evidence (1954) 502, § 239, 546, § 253.

[41] Restatement, Agency, § 286.

[42] Lever Bros. Co. v. Atlas Assurance Co. (7 Cir.), 131 F. (2d) 770; Restatement, Agency, § 287; Morgan, The Law of Evidence, 1941-1945, 59 Harv. L. Rev. 481, 559; Morgan, The Rationale of Vicarious Admissions, 42 Harv. L. Rev. 461, et seq.; Mechem, Agency (2d ed. 1914) § 1784.

and declarations may be considered on the question of whether an overt act was committed pursuant to, or in furtherance of, the agreement, combination, or conspiracy.[43]

VII

Admissibility of Evidence Relating to Damages

Appellants question, in several particulars, the admissibility of certain evidence adduced by Moore on the question of damages. Since these questions may again arise on a new trial of this action, we here state our views.

The Hypothetical Question as to Good Will Value.

It was Moore's contention that his business had been totally destroyed on August 15, 1952, when he could no longer obtain gasoline. He therefore asked the jury to measure his damages by the market value of the business on that date. Moore owned the land and the other capital assets of the business, and retained them when he went out of business. It follows that the only value which his business had before it was closed that it did not have afterwards was its "going concern" or "good will" value.

As one means of proving going concern or good will value, Moore produced the opinion testimony of an expert witness. The hypothetical question asked of this witness included, as one of its assumptions, that in August, 1952, Moore was forty-one years of age, was in reasonably good health, and wanted to continue the management of the service station. Appellants argue that the question, as so framed, was irrelevant to the issue.

We agree. In measuring the value of the good will of such a business, appropriate factors to be considered are: (1) What profit has the business made over and above an amount fairly attributable to the return on the capital investment and to the labor of the owner? (2) What is the reasonable prospect that this additional profit will continue into the future, considering all circumstances existing and known as of the date of the valuation? See Kimball Laundry Co. v. United States, 338 U. S. 1, 16-17. These are the factors which would influence a prospective purchaser. The special value which the business might have to Moore, or the profit potential of the business beyond that which would be transferable to a purchaser, would have no effect on market value of the business.[44] Upon the retrial, the question should be framed to omit this irrelevant factor.

Appellants also contend that the hypothetical question, as asked, omitted the recital of many fundamental facts which were in evidence, and assumed basic facts contrary to the uncontradicted record.

We have no way of knowing what evidence will be in the record upon a retrial, on the basis of which a new hypothetical question may be asked. It will therefore serve no useful purpose to express an opinion as to whether the hypothetical question now before us, measured by the evidence in this record, is subject to the criticism leveled at it by appellants.

In general, it may be said that a hypothetical question should include any undisputed fact which is clearly material and important.[45] The parties, however, are often not in agreement as to what facts are undisputed, material, and important. If it is objected that certain facts should be included, it is for the trial judge, in the exercise of his discretion, to determine whether the question should be reframed to add such facts. Pasadena Research Laboratories v. United States (9 Cir.), 169 F. (2d) 375, 384, cert. denied, 335 U. S. 853.

If the trial judge does not require this to be done, it is seldom that prejudicial error can be said to result. This is because the objecting party can, through cross-examination, expose to the jury the asserted deficiencies of the hypothetical question as asked. Dunagan v. Appalachian Power Co. (4 Cir.), 33 F. (2d) 876, cert, denied, 280 U. S. 606. It is for this reason that it is usually held that defects in such a question go not to the competency of the evidence, but merely affect its weight. Permanente Metals Corp. v. Pista (9 Cir.), 154 F. (2d) 568, 569.

[43] See Mayola v. United States (9 Cir.), 71 F. (2d) 65, 67; Oras v. United States (9 Cir.), 67 F. (2d) 463, 466. See, also, the general discussion of the order of proof and the so-called "rule of convenience," in Flintkote Company v. Lysfjord, supra.

[44] Moore retains his life expectancy and business acumen. Assuming that he is entitled to, and so receives, the market value of the destroyed good will of his business, he can, at least theoretically, do as well with it as he could have done by continuing in business at his Fourth Avenue South location.

[45] Berndt v. Dept. of Labor & Industries, 44 Wn. (2d) 138, 148, 265 P. (2d) 1037, 1043; Starr v. Oriole Cafeterias, 182 Md. 214, 34 A. (2d) 335. Conversely, such a question need not include every fact in the case. Rowe v. Pennsylvania Greyhound Lines (2 Cir.), 231 F. (2d) 922, 925, cert. denied, 351 U. S. 984.

A hypothetical question calling for expert opinion must be based upon facts in evidence. Hupp Motor Car Corp. v. Wadsworth (6 Cir.), 113 F. (2d) 827. There is here less leeway for the exercise of discretion, since the determination of whether certain facts are in evidence is not so dependent upon judgment factors as the determination of whether certain facts are undisputed, material, and important. Even where it is found that facts assumed in the hypothetical question are not in evidence, however, it is not often that prejudice results. This, again, is because the exercise of the right of cross-examination makes it possible to illuminate any false assumptions contained in the hypothetical question.[46]

Qualifications of Expert Witness

The witness from whom Moore's counsel sought an expert opinion as to value of the business was Dr. Henry Burd. Dr. Burd taught marketing at the University of Washington from 1924 to 1954. Since then, and until the trial, he was engaged in business as a consultant in marketing fields. Appellants concede that Dr. Burd was eminently qualified in many phases of marketing, but argue that he was not qualified by study, training, or experience to state an opinion on the salable value of Moore's service station.

In determining whether a particular witness is qualified to express an expert opinion, the trial court is called upon to exercise a sound discretion. Pollard v. Hawfield (D. C. Cir.), 170 F. (2d) 170, cert. denied, 336 U. S. 909. Whether the witness has had occupational experience in the particular field embraced by the hypothetical question is a factor to be considered in determining his qualifications. But it is not controlling. The court may find that it is sufficient that such witness is qualified by study, research, and general background, to express an opinion. Empire Oil & Refining Co. v. Hoyt (6 Cir.), 112 F. (2d) 356; 2 Wigmore, Evidence (3d ed. 1940) § 556

Our examination of the record convinces us that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in permitting Dr. Burd to express an expert opinion as to the value of Moore's gasoline service station business.

Formula Used to Measure Going-Concern Value

In expressing an opinion as to the going-concern value of Moore's business, Dr. Burd used a formula which allocated average profit to (1) capital investment, (2) value of personal services, and (3) "good will," and which capitalized the latter derived figure at various postulated percentages.

Appellants state that nowhere did Dr. Burd explain why the formula which he used was reasonable under the circumstances. Thus, it is contended, his testimony is subject to the same objection which was upheld in Emich Motors Corp. v. General Motors Corp. (7 Cir.) [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,577], 181 F. (2d) 70, 83, modified on another ground, [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,778] 340 U. S. 558.

Without undertaking to say that the lack of background testimony explaining the formula used by Dr. Burd was a fatal defect, we express the view that it would have been better practice to have such an explanation from the witness. The outline of Dr. Burd's formula seemed to follow rather closely the prime factors mentioned in Kimball Laundry Co. v. United States, supra. But the jury should have had his reasons for adopting the particular formula and its component factors and assumptions. This deficiency can be supplied upon the retrial.

Opinion Based upon Developments Subsequent to Valuation Date

The measure of damages which Moore sought to establish was the market value of Moore's good will as of August 15, 1952. In testifying as to such market value, however, Moore and Dr. Burd were permitted to base their respective opinions in part upon certain events, facts, and business developments occurring subsequent to that date. Appellants contend that this should not have been permitted.

[46] It should not be understood, from the foregoing discussion, that it is always necessary to propound a hypothetical question in eliciting the opinion of an expert. The present trend of thinking is that the use of hypothetical questions is not required except in the discretion of the trial judge. See Uniform Rules of Evidence, Rule 58; Uniform Act on Expert Testimony, § 9; McCormick on Evidence (1954) 34, § 16.

We agree. See Ithaca Trust Co. v. United States, 279 U. S. 151; New York v. Sage, 239 U. S. 57.

Opinion Testimony Based on Facts Not in Evidence

We have discussed above the contention that the hypothetical question asked of Dr. Burd was defective, in that it assumed facts not in evidence. Appellants also argue, quite apart from the asserted improper form of the hypothetical question, that Dr. Burd should not have been permitted to premise his answer upon facts which were not in evidence, and many of which were based on hearsay.

Dr. Burd testified that, in preparing himself to express an opinion as to market value, he made certain studies and gathered background information from a number of sources. He indicated the nature of these studies and the sources drawn upon.[47] The information gained or findings arrived at in the course of this research were not revealed, however, nor were the source materials which Dr. Burd consulted offered in evidence. On at least one occasion, counsel for Moore sought to have Dr. Burd testify as to the information gained in these pretrial studies. Appellants' objection was sustained, the court instructing the witness: "You can state if you considered things as a reason for this, but you cannot say what the things are as a factual basis."

It is common practice for a prospective witness, in preparing himself to express an expert opinion, to pursue pretrial studies and investigations of one kind or another. Frequently, the information so gained is hearsay or double hearsay, in so far as the trier of the facts is concerned. This, however, does not necessarily stand in the way of receiving such expert opinion in evidence. It is for the trial court to determine, in the exercise of its discretion, whether the expert's sources of information are sufficiently reliable to warrant reception of the opinion. If the court so finds, the opinion may be expressed. If the opinion is received, the court may, in its discretion, allow the expert to reveal to the jury the information gained during such investigations and studies. Wide latitude in cross-examination should be allowed.[48]

Admissibility of Income Tax Returns

Copies of Moore's original income tax returns covering the period 1940 to 1952 were admitted in evidence over appellants' objections.

These tax returns, being offered in proof of the facts therein recited, were concededly hearsay. They were not admissible as admissions, because they were offered by the party for whom they were prepared. Nor does the fact that these returns were "public records" under the internal revenue laws render them admissible. Greenbaum v. United States (9 Cir.), 80 F. (2d) 113. They are not "business records," within the meaning of 28 U. S. C. A. § 1732, since not made in furtherance of Moore's business, but at the behest of the Director of Internal Revenue, under sanction of a federal statute. Matthews v. United States (5 Cir.), 217 F. (2d) 409, 413-414.

Moore, however, asserts that they were admissible as summaries of the details of his loose-leaf ledger which was admitted in evidence as Plaintiff's Exhibit 207.

Summaries of voluminous records may, in the discretion of the trial judge, be received in evidence. Board of County Commissioners

---

[47] (1) History of Moore's station from 1940 to July, 1952, the information being supplied by Moore; (2) retail gasoline business in Seattle as disclosed in published data for the nation as a whole; (3) general economic and business conditions, as reported in materials available in public library; (4) general business conditions from July, 1952, to 1955, based on Dr. Burd's personal study; (5) flow of traffic on Fourth Avenue South, shown by Seattle traffic surveys; (6) business performance of other gasoline stations in area since Moore went out of business, shown by Dr. Burd's personal observations; (7) data concerning gasoline stations in Seattle, taken from United States Census of Business; (8) gasoline prices from 1952 to 1955, revealed by Dr. Burd's research; (9) competitive conditions in the area of Moore's station from 1952 to 1955, as determined by investigations made by Dr. Burd; (10) service station operating problems learned by Dr. Burd as a result of discussions with a representative of Time Oil Company, and with a Richfield and a Standard dealer; and (11) business conditions in the Fourth Avenue South area, known to Dr. Burd because of his familiarity with the area.

[48] See District of Columbia Redevelopment Land Agency v. 61 Parcels of Land (D. C. Cir.), 235 F. (2d) 864; Gwathmey v. United States (5 Cir.), 215 F. (2d) 148; United States v. 5139.5 Acres of Land (4 Cir.), 200 F. (2d) 659. Some of the sources drawn upon by Dr. Burd, as summarized in the last footnote, are objectionable because they pertain to events occurring since the critical date of August 15, 1952. The witness should have been directed to exclude such considerations in arriving at his opinion.

v. William J. Howard, Inc. (10 Cir.), 230 F. (2d) 561, 564, cert. denied, 351 U. S. 926. No case has been cited, however, in which it has been held that income tax returns are admissible on such a theory. While the returns in question undoubtedly contain information drawn from Moore's ledger, they also contain computations which are not reflections of ledger entries. Moreover, the returns were actually offered as primary proof of the income from Moore's business. No testimony was offered, nor statement made, that these returns were being submitted as summaries of Moore's accounting records. In our view, the income tax returns should not have been received in evidence.

Admissibility of Ledger and Summary Sheets

Certain of the entries in Moore's ledger, introduced as Plaintiff's Exhibit 207, were not made until several months after the transaction recorded. Mrs. Moore, who kept the ledger, was unable to recall the lapse of time involved in making certain other entries. The business records act provides that memoranda or records, to be admissible, must have been made at the time of the act, transaction, occurrence, or event recorded, or within a reasonable time thereafter. 28 U. S. C. A. § 1732. Appellants argue that, in view of this provision, portions of Plaintiff's Exhibit 207 which were not made shortly after the transactions recorded should have been excluded.

The entries were based upon cash register tapes, and, in most cases, were posted shortly after the end of each month. There were occasional time lags of several months in posting these entries. There was no evidence to show that this lag introduced inaccuracies or uncertainty as to the reliability of the ledger. The lapse of time was less than involved in United States v. Potson (7 Cir.), 171 F. (2d) 495, 499, where annual summary sheets were held to be admissible as business records. In our view, the trial court did not err in admitting Plaintiff's Exhibit 207.

Certain summary sheets, admitted as separate exhibits, were based upon Moore's income tax returns. Since we have found such returns to be inadmissible, summaries based thereon should not be received at the new trial.

[Other Claimed Error]

Appellants remaining specification of error relates to asserted prejudicial extraneous and coercive influences exerted upon the jury. The circumstances upon which this specification of error is based are not likely to recur at the new trial. It is therefore unnecessary to discuss the point in this opinion.

[Reversed]

Reversed and remanded with directions to grant appellants a new trial.

[¶ 68,862] C. C. Stanton, trading and doing business as Stanton Oil Company v. The Texas Company.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. No. 16436. Dated November 18, 1957.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida. Bryan Simpson, District Judge.

Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act

Price Discrimination—Section 2(a) of Clayton Act and Section 3 of Robinson-Patman Act—Sufficiency of Complaint—Punitive Damages.—A trial court ruling striking from a complaint a reference to the Robinson-Patman Act and a claim for punitive damages was affirmed. The reviewing court noted that it was "impossible to read the pleadings and the evidence without reaching the fixed conviction that what was really in controversy below was not whether there had been a violation of the Robinson-Patman Act" but whether a competing distributor of petroleum products had "unlawfully interfered with the contract rights of the plaintiff without justification." The trial court had ruled that Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended, is a civil statute enforceable exclusively by suits for treble damages and injunctive relief; and that Section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act does not prohibit injuries to competing sellers, and that the plaintiff could not recover punitive damages for a claimed violation of this section because such damages, where recoverable at all, are recoverable only by the party against whom the criminal violation is directed.

See Price Discrimination, Vol. 1, ¶ 3505, 3551; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9011.

For the appellant: Rhyden C. Latham, Jacksonville, Fla.

For the appellee: Cyril C. Copp, Jacksonville, Fla.; William S. Clarke, Houston, Tex.; and Amzy B. Steed, New York, N. Y.

For a prior opinion of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of Florida, Jacksonville Division, see 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,496.

Before HUTCHESON, Chief Judge, and TUTTLE and WISDOM, Circuit Judges.

[Inducing Breach of Contract]

HUTCHESON, Chief Judge [In full text]: Brought by plaintiff, a wholesale distributor of Shell Oil products, against defendant, the Texas Company, another marketer of petroleum products, the suit was for allegedly inducing a breach of contract between plaintiff and Horne's of Bayard, Inc., the operator of a gasoline service station and candy store in Bayard, Florida, which plaintiff had previously supplied.

[Robinson-Patman Act]

In addition to compensatory damages, plaintiff, alleging that the interference with the contract rights of the plaintiff was without justification and malicious, and in violaion of the Robinson-Patman Act, claimed $1,000,000.00.

[Pre-Trial Motions]

Defendant moved to dismiss the complaint, to strike from it the reference to the Robinson-Patman Act, and for summary judgment, arguing in support (1) that plaintiff was not entitled to any relief whatever because no valid contract or lease existed between plaintiff and the Hornes; and (2) that there had been no violation of the Robinson-Patman Act on which to ground a claim for punitive damages.

Granting the motions to the extent of striking the reference to the Robinson-Patman Act and the claim for punitive damages, the district judge denied defendant's motion to dismiss and for summary judgment except as to the claim of punitive damages.

[Amended Complaint]

Thereafter plaintiff moving for leave to file an amended complaint which it tendered with the motion and the district judge denying the motion on the ground that the amended complaint presented no essential difference in fact or in law from the original complaint, the cause went to trial before the court without a jury on the issue of compensatory damages.

[Trial Court Ruling]

The trial concluded, the district judge made findings of fact and conclusions of law [1] and entered judgment accordingly, and

[1] Findings of Fact:

1. The plaintiff is a citizen and resident of Florida, the defendant is a Delaware corporation, and the amount in controversy exceeds Three Thousand Dollars, exclusive of interest and costs.

2. The plaintiff, C. C. Stanton, trading and doing business as Stanton Oil Co., is, and was at all times material hereto, a contract distributor of petroleum products manufactured and sold by Shell Oil Co., a corporation, with exclusive rights within his contract designated territory to sell such products in bulk to retailers. Such designated territory includes Bayard, Duval County, Florida.

3. Beginning in 1935, plaintiff had continuously as a customer, first Alton I. Horne, then Alton I. Horne and Robert Horne (Alton I. Horne's son) who owned and operated a gasoline filling station at Bayard, Florida. The Hornes handled plaintiff's Shell products exclusively.

4. About Oct. 4, 1948, the Hornes moved their location a short distance (still in Bayard, and in plaintiff's exclusive sales territory). The Hornes needed money to construct a paved driveway at the new establishment, and plaintiff advanced them $2000.00 to use for this purpose. This was paid by check, which had the following language typed upon the reverse side, "In full payment of lease on property at Bayard, Florida, known as (Retail Outlet) Horne's Candy Shoppe, for Gasoline Filling Station Rights for Five Year Period with Five Year Option." The check was payable to "Alton I. and Robert Horne" who indorsed it directly below the above quoted language and negotiated it. Stanton's pumps and underground equipment were installed at the new location.

plaintiff has appealed, assigning four specifications of error.[2]

[Plaintiff's Contentions]

Recognizing the controlling effect of the findings of fact of the district court, that on the tendered issue, whether defendant induced the breach of plaintiff's contract with Hornes, plaintiff devotes the larger portion of his brief to the task of overcoming the effect of these findings. Setting out some of the oral testimony and stating, "So we come into a direct conflict in the testimony", appellant goes on to say:

"If we had only this oral testimony, the Court would be faced with the impossible task of determining who's lying. However, you don't have to rely on oral testimony to so decide, to resolve this case. There is in this record documentary evidence in the form of correspondence between officials of Texas on this subject which sets it all out in full and gives us the true picture."

Thus premising, appellant, setting out the correspondence he relies on, argues vigorously that these writings completely refute and thus make clearly erroneous the court's finding of fact No. 9:

5. The Hornes, with their respective wives and themselves as sole stockholders, incorporated the Bayard business as "Horne's of Bayard, Inc., a Florida corporation," on May 7, 1953. The business continued exactly as before with the corporation operating in lieu of the partnership and carrying on the sale of Shell products supplied by Stanton.

6. By letter of May 15, 1953, the defendant, Texas Company, wrote Shell Oil Co. that Mr. Horne had decided to change over to Texas products at this location. This letter was forwarded by Shell to Stanton, Shell advising Texas that the station was serviced by its distributor, Stanton. By letter of May 25, 1953, Stanton advised Texas Company that he held a five year lease with option to renew, and requested that the account be not disturbed by Texas as long as the lease was in force. No further dealings between the Hornes and Texas took place until after the first of the calendar year 1954.

7. Relations between the Hornes and Stanton became more strained. The Hornes were handling Texas products in similar enterprises at various locations in Florida and Georgia, and considered Texas products more saleable than Shell's. Shortly after the first of the calendar year 1954, Stanton began making a 1 cent per gallon rebate from tank wagon prices to the Hornes.

8. By letter of April 2, 1954, after additional negotiations between the Hornes and Texas Co., the Hornes notified the plaintiff Stanton they would no longer handle his Shell products, and gave him until April 10, 1954, to remove his equipment. The Hornes commenced using Texas products at Bayard April 12, 1954, and continued so doing until another company, Gulf Oil Co., commenced supplying the station in Dec., 1955.

9. The plaintiff contends (a) that the change over to Texas products by the Hornes was induced by the solicitation and invitation of Texas Co., and (b) that this occurred at a time when he had either (1) a valid lease with the Hornes, (2) a valid extension thereof, or (3) a satisfied customer who would have continued to deal with him (to Stanton's profit) throughout an implied extension of the lease for the second five years, absent the interference of Texas Company. I am inclined to view the language typed on the reverse of the $2,000 check as an exclusive sales agreement, or marketing agreement for five years, with a right to renew for five years, which right to renew was never exercised. However, I do not consider that this agreement requires legal construction or exact definition. Nor do I consider it material whether the agreement was or was not effectively renewed, so as to be in effect when Texas took over the supplying of the station on April 12, 1954.

I find that nothing was done by Texas to solicit the Horne's business at Bayard at any time material hereto. All the negotiations between the Hornes and Texas were at the Hornes' instigation, and Texas did nothing more than accept the business when it was offered. Hence, regardless of the nature of the legal relation between the Hornes and Stanton, no breach of that relation is shown to have been induced by Texas Company.

10. The parties stipulated that Stanton's recovery for loss of net profits, if allowed by the Court, should be in the amount of $11,071.30. As indicated above, no right to such recovery is established. Additionally, it was agreed that the plaintiff should recover $600 for the use of his underground equipment by Texas Company before its removal. The plaintiff is entitled to judgment in this amount, and for no other amount claimed.

Conclusions of Law:

1. This Court has jurisdiction of this cause, and of the parties.

2. The plaintiff is entitled to judgment against the defendant, The Texas Company, a corporation, in the amount of $600.00, as compensation for the use by defendant of plaintiff's underground tanks and equipment at Horne's of Bayard, Inc., station, Bayard, Florida, from April 12, 1954, to the time such equipment was removed.

3. The plaintiff is denied recovery for every other claim mentioned in his complaint.

[2] (1) The Court erred in striking from the complaint reference to the Robinson-Patman Act and allegations supporting punitive damages.

(2) The Court erred in denying leave to file amended complaint.

(3) The Court erred in finding that the actions of Texas did not constitute unlawful interference with Stanton's rights to service Hornes of Bayard.

(4) The Court erred in refusing to allow plaintiff to recover punitive and compensatory damages.

"I find that nothing was done by Texas to solicit the Hornes' business at Bayard, at any time material hereto. All the negotiations between the Hornes and Texas were at the Hornes' instigation and Texas did nothing more than accept the business when it was offered. Hence, regardless of the nature of the legal relation between the Hornes and Stanton, no breach of that relation is shown to have been induced by Texas Company."

Insisting that the court should have found to the contrary on this issue, appellant then proceeds to a discussion of the other issue which the court declined to decide, whether he had an enforceable contract with the Hornes. Further insisting that even though a contract is unenforceable, because of the statute of frauds or of some other defect which could be raised by the other party to the contract, such defect cannot be availed of by a person in the position of Texas as a defense to a suit for causing the breach of it, he cites and discusses cases which he claims support his view.

Leaving to the last page of his brief, and without citing any authority or putting forward any argument in support, appellant contents himself with the dictum that there can be no doubt that Texas willfully and knowingly violated the Robinson-Patman Act.

Finally, in a single paragraph dealing with the question of damages and completely disregarding the finding that defendant had not committed the acts charged against it, appellant concludes his brief with the didactic assertion that he should be here awarded the compensatory damages which the parties agreed should be awarded as due if there was a breach, and the cause should be remanded for a jury trial on the issue of punitive damages.

[Defendant's Contentions]

The appellee squarely meeting the contentions and arguments of appellant on the issue which was decided by the district judge, presents as its counter point one, "The trial court's finding of fact, that Texas did nothing to induce or support any breach of contract, is amply supported by the evidence and is dispositive of the entire appeal," and supports it by full reference to excerpts from and discussions of the record facts.

Proceeding then, as the appellant has done, though the district judge did not decide the question, to argue that there was no valid contract to breach, appellee puts forward and vigorously argues its counter point, "Plaintiff's action for inducing breach of contract will not lie because there was no valid contract to breach". Citing in support Chipley v. Atkinson, 1 S. 934; Pokress v. Southern Hotel Co., 42 S. 2d, 166; Behrman v. Max, 137 S. 120; Camichos v. Diana Stores Corp., 25 S. 2d 864; Baker v. Coleman, 34 S. 2d 538; Minsky's Follies of Florida v. Sennes, 206 F. 2d 1, appellee stoutly disputes appellant's contentions both as to the validity of the contract and as to his right to recover for interference with his business relations, even though there was no valid contract. Pointing out that the evidence completely fails to show: (1) that there was an agreement on the essential terms of the option; (2) that the option was exercised; and (3) that the statute of frauds was satisfied; appellee insists that the evidence establishes as a matter of law that the alleged breach sued for did not occur and could not have occurred because plaintiff had no contract to breach.

Finally, meeting appellant's claim, that he pleaded and proved a case entitling him to punitive damages, by pointing out that on the facts of record and under the findings of the court, plaintiff failed to establish that he was entitled to any recovery whatever and his claim for punitive damages inevitably fails,[3] appellee insists that appellant's claim, that this is a case for punitive damages, is hardly to be taken seriously.

[Findings Supported]

We find ouselves in complete agreement with appellee's position that the findings of fact and the rulings and judgment of the district court are well supported by the record.

It is impossible to read the pleadings and the evidence without reaching the fixed conviction that what was really in controversy below was not whether there had been a violation of the Robinson-Patman Act or whether Texas had interfered with the general business relations between plaintiff and the Hornes, but whether, as charged by plaintiff, "The Texas Company unlawfully interfered with the contract rights of the plaintiff without justification, as hereinabove shown, and operated to the detriment of the plaintiff, C. C. Stanton and to its own profit and advantage."

[3] Winn & Lovett Gro. Co. v. Archer, 171 So. 214, 221; and McLain v. Pensacola Coach Corp., 13 So. (2d) 221.

When, therefore, the district judge found, as he did in Par. 9:

> "I find nothing was done by Texas to solicit the Hornes' business at Bayard at any time material hereto. All the negotiations between the Hornes and Texas were at the Hornes' instigation and Texas did nothing more than accept the business when it was offered.", if his finding is supported by the record, he completely and effectively disposed of the case before him. Recognizing that this is so, appellant undertakes by a strong and earnest attack on the finding to set it aside as erroneous, while the appellee, with the same recognition, as vigorously defends it as amply supported by the record.

We are not persuaded by appellant's arguments that the correspondence on which he relies refutes the oral testimony which the court accepted as correct and establishes that the finding was erroneous. On the contrary, after considering the whole record in the light of the finding and the arguments, we agree with appellee that we ought not, indeed may not, interfere with it. Because we do and because this finding is dispositive of the appeal, we find it unnecessary to discuss or consider the other matters so vigorously and interestingly discussed in both briefs.

[Affirmed]

The judgment was right. It is affirmed.

[¶ 68,863] Youngs Rubber Corp. v. Sirbel Sales Corp.

In the New York Supreme Court, New York County, Special Term, Part III. 138 N. Y. L. J., No. 102, page 6. Dated November 25, 1957.

New York Fair Trade (Feld-Crawford) Act

Fair Trade—Enforcement of Fair Trade Prices—Temporary Injunction—Necessary Proof—Defenses.—A motion for a temporary fair trade injunction was denied where the claimed offending sales were vigorously denied and not identified except by a statement of a shopper. Also, the defendant claimed to be a wholesaler, and it was entitled to a fair and full investigation into one or more of its proposed defenses.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3354.34.

[Temporary Injunction Denied]

STREIT, Justice [In full text]: Plaintiff moves for a temporary injunction in enforcement of the Feld-Crawford Act. The claimed offending sales are vigorously denied. They are not identified by sales slip, description of the seller or otherwise save the mere statement of the shopper. Defendant claims to be a wholesaler and denies the claimed sales at retail. Plaintiff has failed to make proof of sales in such degree as to warrant temporary injunctive relief. In addition, defendant is entitled prior to injunction to a fair and full investigation into one or more of its proposed defenses. The motion is denied. Order signed.

[¶ 68,864] Oceanus Beverages, Inc. v. Van Munching & Co., Inc., and Harry Boening and Philip Boening, Jr., co-partners doing business as Boening Bros.

In the New York Supreme Court, Appellate Division, Second Judicial Department. Dated November 18, 1957.

New York Antitrust (Donnelly) Act

Combinations and Conspiracies Under State Antitrust Laws—Procedure—Sufficiency of Complaint—Injury.—An order granting motions to dismiss an amended complaint (filed in an action brought under the New York antitrust laws for an injunction and other relief) for failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action was affirmed.

Discontinuance of business relationships and elimination of competition are not actionable unless the elimination is complete, or unless there is other injury to the public, or ruination of a competitor's business.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2425.34.

For the appellant: Blum and Levin, Lawrence, N. Y.

For the respondents: Goldstein, Judd and Gurfein, New York, N. Y.; and Salvatore M. Milano, Lynbrook, N. Y.

Present: BELDOCK, Acting P. J., MURPHY, UGHETTA, HALLINAN and KLEINFELD, JJ.

[Dismissal Affirmed]

[In full text]: In an action pursuant to section 340 of the General Business Law for an injunction and other relief, the appeal is from an order granting respondents' motions to dismiss the amended complaint for failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

Order unanimously affirmed, with $10 costs and disbursements.

Discontinuance of business relationships and elimination of competition are not actionable unless the elimination is complete, or unless there is other injury to the public, or ruination of a competitor's business. (Locker v. American Tobacco Co., 121 App. Div. 443, affd. 195 N. Y. 565; cf. Peekskill Theatre v. Advance Theat. Co., 206 App. Div. 138; cf. Alexander's Dept. Stores v. Ohrbach's, Inc. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,285], 266 App. Div. 535, appeal dismissed, 291 N. Y. 707.)

[¶ 68,865] Paper Mate Manufacturing Company v. R. H. Macy & Company, Incorporated.[*]

In the New York Supreme Court, New York County, Special Term, Part III. 138 N. Y. L. J., No. 94, page 7. Dated November 13, 1957.

New York Fair Trade (Feld-Crawford) Act

Fair Trade—Enforcement of Fair Trade Prices—Defenses—Enforcement Activity.—A fair trader was granted a temporary injunction where the defendant admitted fair trade violations and stated that it intended to continue such violations. The fair trader had adequately showed a vigorous and serious attempt to enforce its fair trade prices, even though initially there was some laxity in enforcement.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3440.34.

[Injunction Granted]

GREENBERG, Justice [In full text]: This motion for an injunction pendente lite is granted. The facts not only are not in dispute, but the defendant at the oral argument and in its opposing affidavits admits violation of the Fair Trade Act and sets forth it intends to go on selling plaintiff's products at less than Fair Trade prices. The sole basis of the defendant's opposition to the motion is its contention that plaintiff's program of enforcement is insufficient and that, therefore, in equity plaintiff ought not to receive the protection of the Fair Trade Act. The papers adequately sustain the position of the plaintiff and show a vigorous and serious attempt to enforce the Fair Trade Act even though initially there was some laxity in the enforcement of the act (see General Electric Co. v. Macy & Co. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,764], 199 Misc., 87). There the court said:

> "* * * The precise elements of an adequate enforcement program are not prescribed by law. Enforcement activities may take such form as is called for by the nature of the product, the industry, and the violations by the retailers, providing they add up to a reasonable and diligent effort in the light of all the facts."

[* The case of Paper Mate Mfg. Co. v. E. J. Korvette, Inc., 138 N. Y. L. J., No. 94, page 7, was decided on the authority of the instant case by Justice Greenberg on the same date. CCH.]

Here plaintiff has made out such a case. Defendant, upon its stipulation, may obtain an early trial. Settle order which will provide for the fixation of a bond, and in that connection the court will receive suggestions from the various parties.

[¶ 68,866] Olin Mathieson Chemical Corporation v. World Merchandise Exchange & Trading Company, Incorporated.[*]

In the New York Supreme Court, New York County, Special Term, Part 1. 138 N. Y. L. J., No. 93, page 6. Dated November 12, 1957.

New York Fair Trade (Feld-Crawford) Act

Fair Trade—Enforcement of Fair Trade Prices—Violation of Temporary Injunction—Contempt—Proof of Violation—Failure To Prosecute.—A fair trader's motion to punish a defendant for violating a temporary fair trade injunction was denied. The defendant's answer contained defenses under the antitrust laws which apparently had not been urged on the motion for the temporary injunction. The court commented that it did not appear proper that a temporary injunction should serve the purpose of a permanent injunction, and that contempt would not lie had the action been tried and the defendant prevailed. In any event, the two sales claimed to have been made in violation of the injunction were not so conclusively established as to warrant relief without a hearing. Also, the defendant's motion to dismiss for failure of the fair trader to prosecute was to be granted, unless the fair trader served and filed notice of trial, at which trial the issues of claimed contemptuous violation could be determined.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3380.34.

[Contempt Motion]

GOLD, Justice [In full text]: Plaintiff moves to punish for contempt. This action in enforcement of the Feld-Crawford Act was commenced on May 10, 1956. Defendant is charged with contempt for violation of the temporary injunction order made August 22, 1956. Answer was served on August 21, 1956, containing defenses under the Robinson-Patman and Sherman Acts (15 U. S. C., sec. 13, and sec. 1 et seq.) which apparently were not urged on the motion for temporary injunction. It does not appear meet that a temporary injunction should serve the purpose of a permanent injunction and contempt would not lie had the action been tried and defendant prevailed. In any event, the two sales claimed to have been made on May 5, 1957, and June 18, 1957, and denied, are not so conclusively established as to warrant relief without hearing. However, defendant cross-moves for dismissal for failure to prosecute. The cross-motion is granted unless plaintiff serves and files a note of issue for the December, 1957, term and upon the trial of the cause the issues of claimed contemptuous violation may also be heard and determined. In the event the cause is not noticed for trial accordingly the cross-motion is granted and the motion is denied. Settle order.

[¶ 68,867] Dictograph Products, Inc. v. Empire State Hearing Aid Bureau, Inc., and William Barth.

In the New York Supreme Court, Appellate Division, First Department. October, 1957. Nos. 11380 and 11381. Dated November 6, 1957.

Appeal by defendants from order of the Supreme Court at Special Term (BENVENGA, J.) entered May 1, 1956 in the New York County Clerk's office denying defendants' motion to modify decree dated November 6, 1953; plaintiff appeals from order entered October 26, 1956 denying plaintiff's cross-motion to punish defendants for contempt.

[* The following cases were decided on the authority of the instant action by Justice Gold on the same date: Olin Mathieson Chemical Corp. v. Polovsky, Olin Mathieson Chemical Corp. v. Jacobson, and Olin Mathieson Chemical Corp. v. Weiss, 138 N. Y. L. J., No. 93, page 6. CCH.]

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—State Court Action—Federal Antitrust Law Violation as a Defense—Exclusive Dealing.—A hearing aid manufacturer and one of its former employees entered into a decree which prohibited the employee from engaging in the hearing aid business. The former employee had admitted that he had in his possession customer lists of the manufacturer. Subsequently, the manufacturer entered into a distributorship agreement with such employee. The agreement suspended the enforcement of the decree. However, the manufacturer cancelled the agreement allegedly because such employee promoted the sale of products competitive to the manufacturer's products. A court, in affirming an order denying the manufacturer's motion to punish the employee for subsequently violating the decree and in granting the employee's motion to modify the decree, noted, among other things, that the practice of the manufacturer in making contracts with exclusive dealing clauses with independent distributors had been condemned by the Federal Trade Commission as in violation of the Clayton Act, and that the Commission's order directing that such clauses be eliminated from its contracts had been sustained in Dictograph Products, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 67,932.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9041.145.

For the plaintiff-appellant-respondent: Theodore F. Tonkonogy, New York, N. Y.

For the defendants-respondents-appellants: George F. Halperin, of counsel (Leonard C. Shalleck with him on the brief; Edwin B. Wolchok, attorney).

[Motion to Modify Decree]

Valente, Justice [In full text]: Defendants appeal from an order denying their motion to vacate or modify a consent decree entered on November 6, 1953. That decree enjoins defendants from disparaging or interfering with plaintiff's business or good name; restrains them from engaging in, or being employed or interested in, any hearing aid business in the Boroughs of Brooklyn and Manhattan in the City of New York for a period of five years; forbids the use of plaintiff's customers lists by defendants; and restrains the direct or indirect transfer of the ownership of defendants' business to one Ethel Murray (a former employee of plaintiff) or to any third party except on condition that said Ethel Murray be not employed by it. Additionally, the decree directs the surrender of all customers lists to plaintiff, and provides for liquidated damages for violation of the injunctive provisions.

[Cross-Motion—Contempt]

Plaintiff appeals from a separate order denying its cross-motion to punish defendants for contempt for violating the decree of November 6, 1953.

[Background]

Plaintiff manufactures hearing aids, conducting a nation-wide business mainly through distributor agencies. Defendant Barth, for a long time before December, 1952, was employed by plaintiff, and was in charge of its store on 49th Street, in New York City. Barth resigned in December, 1952. After working for a hearing aid company in Chicago, he returned to New York in 1953, formed the defendant corporation and commenced doing business in Manhattan.

Not long thereafter, plaintiff discovered that defendants were soliciting its customers and were deprecating its products in order to sell their own. Following an investigation, plaintiff concluded that certain missing records, containing the names and addresses of customers, as well as file cards, were in the possession of defendants. Upon execution of a search warrant which plaintiff obtained from the Court of General Sessions, the missing records, as well as certain used hearing aid transmitters, were found in defendants' premises. At a hearing before a judge of that Court on October 1, 1953, defendant Barth admitted that all the property seized under the search warrant belonged to the plaintiff, and consented to its return to plaintiff.

[Consent Decree]

On November 4, 1953, Barth and his attorney signed a stipulation consenting to the decree of November 6, 1953. Special Term correctly found that the stipulation was not signed under threats of criminal prosecution. Moreover, it is evident that the decree, entered on consent, was justified by the facts then existing.

[Equity Powers]

However, a Court of Equity has inherent power to change its decrees where there has been a "change of circumstances which would make continued enforcement of the injunctive process inequitable, oppressive and unjust or in contravention of the policy of the law." U. S. v. Swift & Co., 286 U. S. 106; Enterprise Window Cleaning Co. v. Slowuta, 273 App. Div. 662, affd. 299 N. Y. 286; Manufacturers Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Hopson, 176 Misc. 220, 227; affd. 262 App. Div. 731; affd. 288 N. Y. 668. In 1 Freeman-Judgments, § 253, p. 511, it is said:

> "And where the further enforcement of a final decree of perpetual injunction has, by reason of subsequent events, become inequitable, the court may vacate or modify it, though even here the court's action on the motion is more in the nature of a stay of the process of enforcement than a vacation of the decree."

[Public Policy]

We have concluded that although the decree herein was adapted to the needs that existed at the time of its entry, its continuance is no longer warranted, and that its enforcement, in view of the change of circumstances, will effect an injustice and will contravene public policy.

It appears that on December 9, 1953, defendant Barth signed an agreement with plaintiff whereby he was appointed as a non-exclusive agent for plaintiff in New York City, and in connection therewith, a stipulation was executed suspending enforcement of the injunctive provisions of the decree of November 6, 1953 during the existence of the agreement. In February, 1954, the agency agreement was supplanted by a distributor agreement containing the same provision for suspension of the injunction decree. On August 26, 1955, plaintiff cancelled the distributor agreement. The affidavits are in dispute as to the cause for cancellation, defendant Barth averring that it was because of his failure to accede to plaintiff's demand to desist from promoting the sale of any other company's product. It should be noted here that the practice of plaintiff in making contracts with exclusive-dealing clauses with independent distributors was condemned by the Federal Trade Commission as in violation of the Clayton Act. The Commission's order directing that such provisions be eliminated from contracts with independent distributors was sustained in Dictograph Products v. Federal Trade Commission [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,932], 217 F. 2d 821 (2 Cir., 1954).

[Ruling]

The Court below in disposing of the motion to punish defendants for contempt, aptly said:

> "It goes without saying that a court has a right to assume that its decrees are sought for legitimate purposes, and that they will not be used to effect a contractual relationship, or to police such relationship when brought into existence, or for any ulterior purpose. The parties cannot, by agreement between themselves, modify or suspend a decree of the court (Encyclopedia Britannica v. Warner, 172 F. 1012, 1014-16) or permit it to become dormant, and then, without the sanction of the court (30 C. J. S., Equity, Sec. 621), reinstate or revive its provisions."

Agreeing as we do with this statement of the law, we are in accord with the denial of the motion to punish the defendants for contempt; but it also impels us to grant defendant's motion to vacate the decree of injunction. We cannot view with equanimity trafficking in an injunction decree of the court. The drastic remedy it affords must not be perverted by the parties into an adjunct to their commercial affairs. Where the equity power of the court is invoked to prevent a threatened wrong, the recipient of the court's favor will not be permitted to engage in a course of conduct incompatible with his antecedent pleas for relief. When plaintiff herein resumed its business relationship with defendant Barth after it had obtained the decree, that conduct was so inconsistent with the spirit of the decree as to call for its vacatur, notwithstanding the ineffectual agreement to suspend its operation. Therefore, the motion to vacate the decree should have been granted.

The order denying defendants' motion to modify the decree should be reversed and the motion granted, with costs. The order denying plaintiff's motion to punish for contempt should be affirmed.

All concur.

[¶ 68,868] Dale Hilton, Inc. v. Triangle Publications, Inc., et al.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil 125-17. Filed November 6, 1957.

Clayton and Sherman Antitrust Acts

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Pretrial Procedures—Motion for Production of Documents.—In an action said to raise the issue of the existence of an alleged monopoly on the part of the defendant and an alleged conspiracy between the defendant and others, where the defendant apparently contended that the loss of business by the plaintiff was due to causes other than those alleged in the complaint, the defendant's motion for the production of documents was granted in part and denied in part. The affidavit upon which the production of documents was sought was not adequate in some respects, with the result that good cause had not been shown for the production of all of the items demanded.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9013.825.

For the plaintiff: Robert C. Weiss, New York, N. Y.

For the defendants: Wm. B. Jaffee, and Proskauer, Rose, Goetz & Mendelsohn, New York, N. Y.

Memoranda

[Production of Documents]

LEVET, District Judge [In full text]: Defendant Triangle Publications, Inc. (hereinafter called Triangle) has moved for the production of certain documents by plaintiff. The action was brought under the Clayton and Sherman Acts. The complaint is said to raise the issue of the existence of an alleged monopoly on the part of defendant Triangle and an alleged conspiracy between Triangle and others. Apparently, defendant Triangle contends that the loss of business by plaintiff was due to other causes than the acts complained of in the complaint. The affidavit upon which production of documents is sought under Rule 34 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure is not adequate in some respects, with the result that good cause has not been shown for the production of all the items demanded.

[Documents To Be Produced]

Accordingly, the motion is disposed of as follows:

Plaintiff is directed to produce the following records:

1. Plaintiff's minute books, articles of incorporation, certificates of registration to do business, certificates of dissolution and other records showing termination of business since the year 1951;

2. Records of the receipts and disbursements and records showing plaintiff's profit and losses, profit and loss statements, balance sheets and income tax returns since January 1, 1953;

3. All correspondence and memoranda by and between the plaintiff and the magazine known as "Seventeen" since May, 1954;

4. All contracts, correspondence and memoranda of conversations between plaintiff and its advertising agency since September, 1953;

5. All correspondence to and from purchasers responding to advertisements placed by the plaintiff in "Seventeen" magazine, including but not limited to correspondence relating to the placing of orders, returns of merchandise, complaints and requests for refunds;

6. All correspondence between plaintiff and manufacturers whose merchandise was referred to in advertisements placed by plaintiff in "Seventeen" magazine or other advertising media since September, 1953;

7. Advertisements placed by plaintiff with every advertising medium other than "Seventeen" magazine from September, 1953 to 1957;

8. All correspondence to and from persons responding to advertisements placed by plaintiff in every advertising medium other than "Seventeen" magazine, limited, however, to the complaints and requests for refunds;

9. All documents and correspondence to and from representatives of the United States Post Office relating to plaintiff's mail order activity from September, 1953 to date.

Otherwise the motion is denied since no good cause is shown.

So ordered.

[¶ 68,869] Orbo Theatre Corporation v. Loew's Incorporated, et al.

In the United States District Court for the District of Columbia. Civil Action No. 840-56. Dated December 4, 1957.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Section 3 of Sherman Act—Motion Picture Clearances—Conspiracy—Parallel Action.—An operator of a motion picture theatre failed to establish that motion picture producers and distributors conspired in refusing the operator's request that pictures be licensed to him on a 14-day clearance, with preference over a drive-in theatre, and in instituting a system of competitive bidding between the drive-in theatre and the operator's indoor theatre on the basis of a 21-day clearance. There was no evidence from which an inference of even remote cooperation among the producers and distributors could be derived. Also, the operator failed to establish a conspiracy between the producers and distributors and first run exhibitors to impose an unreasonable restraint against neighborhood theatres.

The fact that parallel action is taken by alleged conspirators may, under certain circumstances, justify a court in drawing the conclusion that the parallel action is concerted action. While parallel action may be concerted action, it may also be due to the fact that the persons concerned arrived at the same solution of a common business problem. Under the circumstances in the instant case, the parallel action of the producers and distributors did not constitute concerted action.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2051.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Section 3 of Sherman Act—Motion Picture Clearances—Legality.—Producers and distributors of motion pictures did not impose illegal restrictions on an operator of a motion picture theatre when they licensed pictures to the operator on a system of competitive bidding between his theatre and a drive-in theatre on the basis of a 21-day clearance. Clearances contained in contracts for the rental of motion pictures, that is, negative covenants not to lease the same picture to potential competitors until the lapse of a certain period of time after the termination of the prior showing, are valid if reasonably limited as to time and area. The court ruled that the restrictions imposed in the instant action were valid, and that it may not substitute its own judgment for the business judgment of the parties in determining the reasonableness of such restrictions. Also, the defendants had a right to refuse to lease any pictures to the operator; therefore, they had a right to refuse to rent to the operator except after the expiration of certain waiting periods. No conspiracy between the producers and distributors had been established.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2051.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Section 3 of Sherman Act—Transactions Within Section—Commerce.—Motion picture producers and distributors, in licensing their pictures for exhibition, were engaged in commerce in the District of Columbia as well as in commerce between the District of Columbia and a state or states; therefore, their transactions were within the cognizance of Section 3 of the Sherman Act.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2051.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Section 3 of Sherman Act—Scope of Section.—"The objective of the Sherman Act was, in large part, to enact into a statute the principles of the common law relating to restraints and monopolies; to render them applicable to transactions in interstate and foreign commerce; and to implement them by effective remedies. The common law, however, did not ban all restraints of trade. It proscribed only unreasonable restraints. Consequently, the Sherman Act has been construed as being applicable only to unreasonable restraints of trade, even though the word 'unreasonable' is not found in the statute. In effect, the word 'unreasonable' has been inserted by judicial construction."

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2051.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages and Injunctive Relief—Evidence Admissible To Prove Violations of Antitrust Laws—Prior Government Actions—Identity of Issues.—Findings of fact, conclusions of law, and decrees entered in a Government antitrust action against producers and distributors of motion pictures were not admissible as prima facie evidence of a conspiracy alleged in a private antitrust action brought against motion picture producers and distributors. The conspiracy alleged in the private action was not the same conspiracy as that found to exist in the Government action. Under Section 5 of the Clayton Act, a Government decree is prima facie evidence only of a conspiracy covering the same area and existing during the same time as that involved in the instant action.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9012.410.

For the plaintiff: Joseph G. Dooley and Joseph A. Lynott, Washington, D. C.

For the defendants: John F. Caskey, New York, N. Y.; William R. Glendon, Washington, D. C.; and Joseph Childs, Washington, D. C.

Opinion

[Trial on Liability Issue]

ALEXANDER HOLTZOFF, District Judge [In full text]: This is the trial of a private civil action for an injunction and triple damages based on an alleged violation of the antitrust laws. Since no jury was demanded, the trial was by the Court alone. Accordingly, at the opening of the trial, the Court directed that the issue of liability be heard first and announced that if the plaintiff prevailed the trial would be resumed for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of damages, if any. The trial on the issue of liability having been concluded, this opinion deals with that subject.

[Nature of Action]

This action is brought by the lessee and operator of a motion picture theater in Rockville, Maryland, against a number of motion picture producers and distributors. The plaintiff complains that it is the practice of the defendants to withhold the release of motion pictures to the plaintiff's theater until after the expiration of a waiting period of twenty-one days following the completion of their premiere showing in Washinging, D. C. It is contended that this course is illegal as a violation of the Sherman Act. The complaint prays for an injunction against the continuation of the alleged conspiracy and for triple damages.

[Sherman Act]

Section 3 of the Sherman Act, 15 U. S. C. § 3, under which this action was brought, provides as follows:

> "Every contract, . . . or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce in . . . the District of Columbia, or in restraint of trade or commerce between . . . the District of Columbia and any State or States, . . . is declared illegal."

[Clayton Act]

Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 15, which permits a suit to be maintained by any person who has been injured by a violation of the Sherman Act, reads as follows:

> "Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee."

[Distribution of Motion Pictures]

The following facts appear from the evidence. All of the defendants, with the exception of United Artists Corporation, are producers and distributors of motion picture films. The defendant, United Artists Corporation, is a distributor of pictures originated by various producers. Distributors are engaged in the business of renting motion picture films for public showing on specified dates by exhibitors, who own or operate motion picture theaters. It would be manifestly impracticable, and even tend to create chaos, to throw the product on the market for contemporaneous use in all theaters in the country or even in the same vicinity. The general usage of distributors is, therefore, to begin the circulation of a new picture by first renting it to a large centrally situated theater in several selected localities, and then after its showing is completed in that theater and after the lapse of a specified waiting period, to rent the film to smaller theaters in the same general area. The practice is not to show a picture simultaneously at two competing theaters. Frequently competing houses are accorded an opportunity to bid for an available picture, which is then awarded to the exhibitor submitting the most favorable proposal.

In the District of Columbia the exhibition of a new motion picture is commenced by renting it to one of the big theaters in a congested spot in the city of Washington. Most of these theaters are located on F Street in the downtown business district. Then after the "first run," as it is colloquially called in the industry, is finished, the picture is rented to exhibitors operating other theaters in the greater Metropolitan area, which includes nearby Maryland and Virginia as well as Washington.

[Clearance System]

Ordinarily, a separate contract is drawn for the showing of each individual picture. Contracts with the so-called "first run" theaters commonly contain a negative covenant to the effect that the picture is not to be released for exhibition to any other theater until after the expiration of a specified waiting period subsequent to the close of the first showing. In the jargon of the trade this waiting period is known as a "clearance." In Washington and surrounding areas in Maryland the clearance period generally adopted is three weeks after the end of the first showing. In Alexandria, Virginia, which is close to Washington, on the south bank of the Potomac River, the period commonly used is fourteen days after the close of the first exhibition in Washington. It is contended by the defendants that such negative covenants are indispensable for the protection of the first exhibitors against undue inroads by competition. It is claimed that if a film were released to neighborhood theaters either simultaneously or immediately following its first showing, many potential customers, who would otherwise view the picture at the first run theater, would wait until it reached their neighborhood houses. It is customary for theaters to publicize a picture at least a few days before its exhibition commences and unless there were an interval such as has been described above, neighborhood theaters would be advertising the picture while it was still being shown at a centrally located, large theater and thereby adversely affect the patronage of the latter. By the same token, it is to the best interests of distributors to cooperate with the first run houses in obtaining as large an attendance as possible at the first exhibition. The rental charged for a picture is ordinarily not a flat sum, except for old films, but a percentage of the gross receipts. The percentage exacted is generally higher on the first display than it is on the subsequent neighborhood exhibitions. Moreover, the theaters utilized for premiere showings usually have a greater seating capacity and charge higher admission prices than the others. Consequently, a large proportion of the income of distributors is derived from first run displays, and a relatively smaller percentage from later local exhibitions. These are legitimate business considerations.

[Commerce Involved]

Each of the defendants has a head office in New York, and also maintains a regional or branch office in Washington, to serve the District of Columbia, Maryland, Virginia, and parts of West Virginia and Delaware. All contracts for the exhibition of films in this territory are negotiated through the Washington office and the films are shipped from there to the various theaters. Apparently the business is conducted in a highly centralized manner, because all contracts are approved or confirmed in New York, and all clearance periods are ratified by the head office. Unquestionably, therefore, the defendants are engaged in commerce in the District of Columbia, as well as in commerce between the District of Columbia and a State or States, and, therefore, their transactions are within the cognizance of the Sherman Act.

[Geographic Locations]

It is desirable to visualize the relative geographic locations and distances of the places involved in this action. Rockville is a small town with a population of between twenty and twenty-five thousand and is the county seat of Montgomery County, Maryland. It is situated about fifteen miles north of F Street, Washington,

D. C., and about nine miles north of the northern boundary line between the District of Columbia and Maryland. The town of Bethesda is situated to the northwest of Washington, immediately adjoining the boundary between the District of Columbia and Maryland. Rockville lies seven miles in a general northerly direction from Bethesda. Immediately northeast of Washington and likewise adjacent to the northern boundary of the city, is Silver Spring. Bethesda and Silver Spring each have two motion picture theaters. North of Silver Spring and about on the same latitude as Rockville, lies the town of Wheaton, on the western outskirts of which is located the Viers Mill Theater. Alexandria, Virginia, lies southeast of Washington on the south bank of the Potomac, about seven or eight miles away. Several theaters are found in Alexandria, which is a city of considerable size. A twenty-one day clearance has been maintained between the first run theaters in Washington and all other theaters in the District of Columbia, as well as those in Bethesda, Silver Spring, Wheaton and Rockville. A fourteen-day clearance has been applied to Alexandria.

[Plaintiff's Theater]

Prior to the time involved in this action, there had been established in Rockville a motion picture theater known as the Rockville Drive-In which, as its name indicates, is a theater catering to motorists. There was also a small deteriorated theater in Rockville, known as the Milo Theater. In the fall of 1955, the plaintiff purchased the Milo Theater, and renovated and remodeled it at considerable expense. New seats and new sound and projection apparatus were installed. Its name was changed to the Villa Theater. It opened for operation under the new management on December 1, 1955.

[Requests for Pictures]

About a month previously to the opening of the Villa Theater, the plaintiff wrote similar letters to all of the defendants, requesting that pictures be furnished to the Villa on a fourteen-day clearance. It was contended that the new theater was entitled to clearance and "protection" over the Drive-In Theater, since the latter operated only during nine months of the year, while the Villa planned to be open the year round. None of the letters gave any indication that an identical demand was being made on any one else. This request posed a problem for the distributors. The Drive-In Theater is commodious, has a considerable capacity, and was in successful operation. To have yielded to the demand, would have been to discriminate against the Drive-In Theater. Moreover, pressure on the part of theaters in Bethesda, Silver Spring and Wheaton for similar treatment and, therefore, a reduction of the twenty-one day clearance to a fourteen-day clearance could reasonably be anticipated in the event that the request of the Villa were granted. In turn, there was a possibility of repercussion from neighborhood houses in Washington.

Each of the defendants, with the exception of Warner Brothers, in the course of the ensuing two or three weeks replied to the plaintiff pointing out some of the above-mentioned considerations and declining the request. Each of these distributors, however, offered to institute a system of competitive bidding as between the Rockville Drive-In Theater and the Villa Theater during the parts of the year when the Drive-In Theater was in operation, and to supply pictures to the Villa on a twenty-one day clearance during other periods. The defendant Warner Brothers replied by a note offering to discuss the matter orally with the plaintiff's representative at his convenience. A system of competitive bids on the basis of a twenty-one day clearance was actually initiated and put in operation as between the Villa and the Rockville Drive-In Theater on the part of all of the distributors except Universal. The latter had no dealings with the Villa.

[Complaint—Charges]

On February 25, 1956, — less than three months after the Villa Theater opened —, this suit was filed. The amended complaint alleges that by concerted action and agreement among themselves, the defendants restricted the release of motion pictures to the plaintiff for unreasonable periods of time, and that this course of action constituted a conspiracy in restraint of trade. It is further averred that the plaintiff suffered a loss of substantial profits, which it otherwise would have gained execpt for the alleged unlawful conduct of the defendants. The amended complaint prays for an injunction against the continuance of the conspiracy, for judgment directing the defendants to rent motion pictures to the plaintiff simultaneously with the premiere exhibitions in Washington, and for damages in the sum of $660,000, representing actual damages in the sum of $220,000, trebled as provided in the Sherman Act. It will be observed that while the original demand prior to the institution of suit was for a release of pictures fourteen days after the termination of the first showing in Washington, the relief sought in the complaint comprises a judgment that would direct the defendants to furnish pictures to the plaintiff simultaneously with the first run houses in Washington. On March 28, 1956, the defendant Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., wrote a somewhat brusque letter to the plaintiff protesting against the filing of the suit and stating that Universal would not do business with the Villa.

[No Evidence of Conspiracy]

We must now revert to a further discussion of the replies received by the plaintiff to its original demand. At the trial the plaintiff called as witnesses the Washington branch managers of all of the defendants. The defendants then called as witnesses those of their officials at their home offices, who participated in the decision to reject the plaintiff's demand. Several of the defendants had consulted their house counsel before responding, and each of these house counsel was also called as a witness by them. All of these witnesses, whether called by the plaintiff or the defendants, testified in reply to appropriate questions that they acted without consultations or communication, direct or indirect, with any of the co-defendants. They were subjected to a searching and skillful interrogation on the part of able counsel for the plaintiff, but their testimony was not weakened and their credibility was not impeached. Their testimony remained uncontradicted. There was no evidence, direct or circumstantial, oral or documentary, from which an inference of even remote cooperation among the defendants in this matter could be derived.

[Parallel Action]

The fact that parallel action was taken by alleged conspirators may under certain circumstances justify the Court in drawing the conclusion that the parallel action was concerted action. Such an inference is permissible, but is not compelled.[1] Whether to reach it in any particular case depends on the remainder of the evidence and the surrounding circumstances. Parallel action may indeed be concerted action, but it may also be due to the fact that the persons concerned arrived at the same simple solution of a common business problem. Here the problem was a comparatively simple one, and the solution reached was more or less obvious. If the various officers and employees involved in the decision refrained from testifying on this point, the court might well draw an adverse inference. On the other hand, considering the fact that there was absolutely no evidence of the alleged conspiracy, beyond the taking of parallel action; that each of the participants denied any communication or consultation with any of the co-defendants; and that none of the witnesses was in any way impeached or gave any testimony that was inherently incredible, several of them being members of the bar, the Court is not justified in finding that the actions were jointly planned or concerted. In fact, the Court cannot do so without also reaching the conclusion that some of these witnesses testified falsely. There is, however, no basis

[1] Theatre Enterprises v. Paramount Film Dist. Corp. (4 C. A.) [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,413], 201 F. (2d) 306, 314, aff. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,640], 346 U. S. 537, 541.

Robbinsdale Amusement Corp. v. Warner Bros. P. Dist. Corp. (D. Minn.) [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,233], 141 F. Supp. 134.

G. & P. Amusement Co. v. Regent Theater Co. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,360], 107 F. Supp. 453, aff. (6 C. A.) [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,888], 216 F. (2d) 749.

Windsor Theatre Co. v. Walbrook Amusement Co. (D. Md.) [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,721], 94 F. Supp. 388.

Fanchon & Marco v. Paramount Pictures, Inc. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,909], 100 F. Supp. 84, aff. (9 C. A.) [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,843], 215 F. (2d) 167.

The case of Milgram v. Loew's Inc. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,733], 94 F. Supp. 416, aff. (3 C. A.) [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,938], 192 F. (2d) 579, on which the plaintiff relies, is distinguishable. In that case the trial judge, after hearing all of the evidence, reached a conclusion as a matter of fact that there was concerted action. The Court of Appeals in affirming the judgment pointed out, however, that mere parallel business practices of themselves are not necessarily sufficient evidence of concerted action (p. 583). Moreover, in that case the conspiracy charged a refusal to treat Drive-In Theaters on the same basis as other theaters for purely arbitrary reasons.

for ascribing such reprehensible action to any of them. The Court, therefore, concludes that the plaintiff did not establish by a preponderance of the evidence that there had been a conspiracy on the part of the defendants to exercise an undue or illegal restraint against the operations of the Villa Theater.

[General Conspiracy]

In its endeavors to sustain its claim, the plaintiff sought first to establish a conspiracy, that is an agreement or concerted action on the part of the defendants. Naturally, a conspiracy need not be proved by direct evidence, but may be shown by circumstantial evidence. As indicated above, however, this Court finds as a matter of fact that a conspiracy has not been proved. In addition it is necessary for the plaintiff to establish that the restraint of which it complains was unreasonable. The findings that there was no concerted action among the defendants does not necessarily dispose of the issues, because it is also essential to consider whether there was a conspiracy between the defendants and the first run exhibitors to impose an unreasonable restraint as against neighborhood houses.

[Government Suit]

As part of its proof to establish a conspiracy, the plaintiff offered in evidence and relied on the findings of fact and conclusions of law and a series of final decrees in the case of United States of America v. Paramount Pictures, Inc.,[2] pending in the Southern District of New York. In this connection the plaintiff invoked the provisions of Section 5 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. A. § 16, the pertinent provisions of which read as follows:

> "A final judgment or decree rendered in any criminal prosecution or in any suit or proceeding in equity brought by or on behalf of the United States under the antitrust laws to the effect that a defendant has violated said laws shall be prima facie evidence against such defendant in any suit or proceeding brought by any other party against such defendant under said laws as to all matters respecting which said judgment or decree would be an estoppel as between the parties thereto: Provided, This section shall not apply to consent judgments or decrees entered before any testimony has been taken."

The purpose of this enactment was to enable the plaintiff in a private antitrust suit to rely on a prior judgment in a criminal proceeding, or in a civil suit brought by the Government, as proof of a conspiracy. In that event, the plaintiff is merely required to show that the conspiracy affected him and that he was injured by it. The object of this salutary legislation was not only to save the time of the courts, for proof of conspiracy in antitrust cases is sometimes very lengthy, but also to assist injured parties by freeing them from the burden of proving a conspiracy, since the cost of such proof may be prohibitive.[3] Such a decree, however, is prima facie evidence only as to matters actually determined and does not extend to all issues that might have been adjudicated.[4]

[Different Conspiracies]

The defendants in the Paramount case, were producers and distributors of motion pictures. The findings of fact, conclusions of law and a series of decrees adjudicated that the defendants had entered into a nationwide conspiracy in restraint of trade effectuated by fixing admission fees of individual theaters, by a practice known as block booking, by pooling agreements, by so-called "formula deals," as well as by clearances. In other words, clearances were only one feature of the conspiracy. The Court found also, however, that in the distribution of motion pictures it was essential to lease them for exhibition on different dates. The decrees in the Paramount case were made in 1950. The alleged conspiracy, of which the plaintiff complains, to deprive him of pictures except after an unreasonable period of delay, is said to have originated in the fall of 1955. Consequently, it is not the same conspiracy as that found to exist in the Paramount case. It should be emphasized that under the above quoted statute the decree is prima facie evidence only of a conspiracy covering the same area and existing during the same time as that involved in the case on trial.

---

[2] [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,470] 66 F. Supp. 323, modified [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,244], 334 U. S. 131.

[3] Emich Motors Co. v. General Motors Corp. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,778], 340 U. S. 558, 571. Partmar Corp. v. Paramount Pictures Theatres Corp. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,674], 347 U. S. 89, 90, 91, 102-103.

[4] Theatre Enterprises v. Paramount Film Dist. Corp. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,640], 346 U. S. 537, 541.

Thus, it was held in Theatre Enterprises v. Paramount Film Dist. Corp. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,640], 346 U. S. 537, 541, which involved an alleged conspiracy to impose undue clearances on a theater located in Baltimore, Maryland, that the decree in the Paramount case did not relate to that particular conspiracy and that, therefore, the decree was not prima facie evidence in support of the plaintiff's case.[5]

[Restrictions]

As indicated above, while the Court finds that no conspiracy has been established, it nevertheless must proceed to determine whether the clearance system of which the plaintiff complains constitutes a series of illegal restrictions. We are, therefore, brought to a consideration of the basic principles of the law relating to restraints of trade and specifically to the construction of the Sherman Act.

[Sherman Act Prohibition]

The objective of the Sherman Act was, in large part, to enact into a statute the principles of the common law relating to restraints and monopolies; to render them applicable to transactions in interstate and foreign commerce and to implement them by effective remedies. The common law, however, did not ban all restraints of trade. It proscribed only unreasonable restraints. Consequently, the Sherman Act has been construed as being applicable only to unreasonable restraints of trade, even though the word "unreasonable" is not found in the statute. In effect, the word "unreasonable" has been inserted by judicial construction.[6]

Negative covenants, auxiliary to contracts of sale and employment, were well known and were permitted at common law, provided they were partial in their nature and were reasonably limited in time and place. The test of their validity was whether the restraint was any greater than was necessary to afford fair protection to the party in whose favor they were made, and not so extensive as to interfere with the interests of the public. Such covenants could be included in a contract solely to protect one of the parties from the injury that he might suffer from unrestrained competition. The very purpose of the contract and the surrounding circumstances suggest the measure of protection needed and furnished a standard by which the legality of the restraint may be tested. This entire subject is elaborately discussed in the classic opinion of Taft, as Circuit Judge, in United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 Fed. 271, 281, 282, affirmed, 175 U. S. 211.

[Legality of Clearances]

These basic principles are applicable to so-called clearances in the distribution of motion pictures. Clearances are nothing more than a modern form of a negative covenant to refrain for a limited period and in a circumscribed territory from selling or leasing to any one else the same property as that sold or leased to the other party to the contract, in order to protect the latter against unrestricted competition. Consequently, clearances contained in contracts for the rental of motion picture films, i.e., negative covenants not to lease the same picture to potential competitors until the lapse of a certain period after the termination of the prior showing, are valid if reasonably limited as to time and area.

Thus, in the leading case of United States v. Paramount Pictures [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,470], 66 F. Supp. 323, modified, [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,244] 334 U. S. 131, on which plaintiff relies and which has been discussed above, it was said (p. 341):

> "Such provisions are no more than safeguards against concurrent or subsequent licenses in the same area until the exhibitor whose theatre is involved has had a chance to exhibit the pictures licensed without invasion by a subsequent exhibitor at a lower price. It seems nothing more than an adoption of the common law rule to restrict subsequent exhibitions for a reasonable time within a reasonable area."

This view was approved by the Supreme Court in its opinion, which modified the decree as to some other features. Reasonable clearance or waiting periods in the distribution of motion pictures have been upheld in numerous cases.[7] For example, in [5] See also Robbinsdale Amusement Corp. v. Warner Bros. P. Dist. Corp. (D. Minn.) [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,233], 141 F. Supp. 134.

[6] Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1. United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106.

[7] Theatre Enterprises v. Paramount Film Dist. Corp. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,413], 201 F. (2d) 306, 314 (4 C. A.) aff. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,640], 346 U. S. 537.

Dipson Theatres v. Buffalo Theatres (2 C. A.) [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,896], 190 F. (2d) 951.

Theatre Enterprises v. Paramount Film Dist. Corp., supra, a twenty-one day waiting period in favor of downtown theaters in Baltimore, as against a neighborhood theater in a residential section of the city, was held valid. A similar clearance period used in Los Angeles, was upheld in Fanchon & Marco v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., supra.

The case of Gary Theatre Co. v. Columbia Pictures [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,135], 120 F. (2d) 891, involved a practice of according the privilege of a first run to Loop Theaters in Chicago, followed by a three-week waiting period as to other theaters in that city, and then releasing the pictures to theaters in Gary, Indiana, only after the second series of exhibitions in Chicago were concluded. These restraints were held reasonable and valid as against theaters located in Gary. Numerous other examples of this kind might be adduced, but it seems an unnecessary multiplication of authorities to do so.

[Business Judgment]

It may be argued with some degree of cogency that a fourteen-day waiting period would be sufficient in the case at bar, because that is the limitation invoked as against theaters located in Alexandria, Virginia. The Court may not, however, substitute its own judgment for the business judgment of the parties. All that it may determine is whether the negative covenants actually used are beyond the bounds of reasonable restrictions. It may not decide whether a lesser restraint might possibly be sufficient. The Court may not undertake to dictate to the management of business concerns how to conduct and operate their enterprises, but is confined to deciding whether what they are actually doing transcends the law.

The following apt remarks made on a similar point in Robbinsdale Amusement Corp. v. Warner Bros. P. Dist. Corp. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,233], 141 F. Supp. 134, 141, are applicable to the instant case:

"The distribution and allocation of motion pictures to theaters will always present a difficult and delicate problem. Courts should be hesitant to disrupt an established system of runs and clearances in absence of convincing proof that its genesis is the result of conspiratorial connivance, and that it is unreasonable."

Under the circumstances, the Court concludes that the restraints imposed in the case at bar are valid.

[Right to Select Customers]

There is still another approach to the fundamental issues in this case. A person engaged in the manufacture or sale of goods, or in rendering services, is under no obligation to sell to everyone who applies, or to serve everyone who desires to deal with him. The only exception relates to callings coupled with a public interest. Dealers and manufacturers may use their own judgment and discretion and select persons with whom they choose to do business as well as the time when they will enter into transactions with them. Thus, in United States v. Colgate and Co., 250 U. S. 300, it was stated that in the absence of any purpose to create or maintain a monopoly, the Sherman Act does not restrict the long-recognized right of a trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he will deal. A business concern may sell its product to one customer in preference to others, when acting without ulterior motives and free from compulsion. No person is required to sell to all comers, unless he is engaged in a business coupled with a public interest.[8]

In Paramount Pictures Theatres Corp. v. Partmar Corp., 97 F. Supp. 552, aff. (C. A. 9) 200 F. (2d) 561; affirmed [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,674], 347 U. S. 89, it was said (p. 559):

"We are not of the opinion that any theatre has the right, as a matter of law,

---

G. & P. Amusement Co. v. Regent Theater Co. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,360], 107 F. Supp. 453, 459, aff. (6 C. A.) [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,888], 216 F. (2d) 749.

Windsor Theatre Co. v. Walbrook Amusement Co. (D. Md.) [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,721], 94 F. Supp. 388.

Fanchon & Marco v. Paramount Pictures, Inc. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,909], 100 F. Supp. 84, aff. (9 C. A.) [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,843], 215 F. (2d) 167.

Westway Theatre v. 20th Century Fox (D. Md.) 30 F. Supp. 830.

Gary Theatre Co. v. Columbia Pictures (C. A. 7) [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,135], 120 F. (2d) 891.

[8] G. & P. Amusement Co. v. Regent Theater Co. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,360], 107 F. Supp. 453, aff. (C. A. 6) [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,888], 216 F. (2d) 749.

to demand from a motion picture producer the right of prior runs, any more than the seller of automobiles has the right to demand of the manufacturer an agency within a restricted territory. If the automobile manufacturer has the right to establish an exclusive agency within a restricted area for the sale of its product and to refuse to license any other agency within that restricted area, it would seem to the Court that the motion picture distributor should have the same right and privilege."

The illustration suggested in this quotation is an apt analogy to the situation presented in the case at bar. No automobile dealer may come forward and demand that any particular manufacturer sell its vehicles to him for resale at retail. The practice of automobile manufacturers to designate specified distributors and agents, in some communities on an exclusive basis and in others in a limited number, and of refusing to sell to any other dealer, is well established and is sanctioned by law.[9]

It follows hence that the defendants had a right to refuse to lease any pictures to the plaintiff at all. A fortiori they had a right to refuse to rent to the plaintiff except after the expiration of certain waiting periods. The only limitation on this general principle is that the defendants may not conspire among themselves not to deal with the plaintiff. As previously indicated, the Court finds that no conspiracy has been established in this case.

[Judgment for Defendants]

Accordingly, the Court concludes that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover. Judgment will be rendered for the defendants dismissing the complaint on the merits. This opinion will constitute the findings of fact and conclusions of law, but counsel, if they so desire, may submit additional proposed findings and conclusions.

[¶ 68,870] Farmington Dowel Products Co., Inc. v. Forster Manufacturing Co., Inc.

In the Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Dated November 21, 1957.

Maine Unfair Sales Act

Sales Below Cost—Maine Sales Below Cost Law—Applicability to Manufacturers or Producers.—The Maine Unfair Sales Act is not applicable to manufacturers or producers; it is applicable only to the distributive trades. Wholesalers and retailers are expressly mentioned in the Act, but manufacturers and producers are not mentioned. While, in a limited sense, a manufacturer or a producer is a wholesaler or a retailer, because every manufacturer or producer must sell his product (usually at wholesale and less commonly at retail), a manufacturer or a producer is not a wholesaler or a retailer in the business world. The definitions of "cost" contained in the Act support the conclusion that only distributive trades are subject to the Act. Furthermore, manufacturers and producers do not come within the definitions of "wholesaler" or "retailer" set forth in the Act. While the phrase "which is the product of his or its own manufacture," contained in Section 1, subsection VIII, of the Act, suggests that the Act was intended to apply to manufacturers and producers, the phrase is meaningless when read in context with the entire Act.

See Sales Below Cost, Vol. 2, ¶ 7131, 7145.

Sales Below Cost—Computation of Cost—Good Faith in Determining Cost.—Although the Supreme Judicial Court of Maine ruled that it was not necessary, in a case before it, to decide whether it would or would not adopt the rule that the cost definition contained in a sales below cost law should be interpreted as meaning only the approximate cost arrived at by a reasonable rule (or otherwise stated, the cost arrived at by the dealer in "good faith"), the Court noted that, "Consideration would most certainly have to be given to the possible danger that when two different cost accounting theories are advanced, the preference felt by the fact-finder for one theory may too readily lead to a finding of bad faith on the part of a merchant who adopts the other."

See Sales Below Cost, Vol. 2, ¶ 7141.

---

[9] Packard Motor Car Co. v. Webster Motor Car Co., (C. A. D. C.) [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,682], 243 F. (2d) 418. Schwing Motor Co. v. Hudson Sales Corp. (C. A. 4) [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,564], 239 F. (2d) 176.

For the plaintiff: Berman, Berman & Wernick, Portland, Me.

For the defendant: Locke, Campbell, Reid & Hebert, Augusta, Me.

[Unfair Sales Act]

WEBBER, Justice [In full text]: This case involves a construction of the statute entitled "Unfair Sales Act," R. S. 1954, Ch. 184. Plaintiff here has brought an action at law seeking treble damages resulting from alleged advertising, offers to sell, and sales below cost with intent to injure competitors, including the plaintiff, and to destroy competition. The defendant is a manufacturer and producer alleged to be selling its product at wholesale and retail. By special demurrer the defendant raises several legal issues, perhaps the most important of which is the vital question as to whether the statue under consideration has application to manufacturers and producers.

We have had only one previous occasion to examine this statute. In Wiley v. Sampson-Ripley Co. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,254], 151 Me. 400, we held that the provision therein that proof of sales below cost constitutes prima facie evidence of an intent to injure competitors and destroy competition was unconstitutional. By dictum we indicated our acceptance of the legal principle that legislative prohibition of sales below cost made with proven intent to injure competitors or destroy competition was within the police power. That opinion, however, has not of course in any way diminished our obligation to scrutinize each set of facts as presented and determine whether or not the statute is in other respects constitutional as applied to those facts.

[Statute Strictly Construed]

This statute, being in derogation of the common law, must be strictly construed. Wiley v. Sampson-Ripley Co., supra. In Loughran Co. v. Lord Baltimore Candy & T Co. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,024], (1940) 178 Md. 38, 12 A. 2d 201, 204, the court said: "In other words, we are not to infer that the Legislature intended to change common law principles beyond what is clearly expressed by the statute." Conduct which was lawful at common law is by the statute made wrongful. The statute has newly created what may be termed a business crime. The offending merchant may find himself faced with either criminal prosecution, the threat of injuction, or an action at law for damages. In either case he is entitled to be informed by the statute in explicit and unambiguous language what acts and conduct are prohibited.

[Unfair Sales—Essential Factors]

Many states have taken legislative action to prevent so-called "unfair sales." Courts which have construed these enactments have generally agreed that two essential factors must be shown to co-exist, the wrongful intent and the sales below cost. (For the sake of simplicity we refer to sales rather than to advertising or offers to sell). Absent either factor, the prosecution for violation must fail. Since from the earliest days of trade, merchants, whether starting a new enterprise or engaging in an established business, have entertained the not unnatural inclination to attract as many customers as possible away from their competitors, it must be expected that the intent to injure competitors will often be present. So long as the intent is not implemented by the unlawful act, however, the statute may not be invoked. The merchant who seeks by "building the better mousetrap" or by some lawful competitive inducement to corner the market for himself, but without resort to any conduct prohibited by law, may possess the requisite intent to injure or destroy competition and yet not be in violation of the statute. In short, proof of either of the essential factors without proof of the other will not suffice. Thus the public is assured of the lowest prices which can be produced by fair and lawful competition. It becomes apparent, therefore, that it is most important that the language of the statute inform the business man of ordinary intelligence whether his particular business operations are covered by the statute, and if so, what conduct on his part is specifically prohibited. If the statute is so vague and uncertain with respect to these matters as to leave him to guess as to its application, it is unenforceable as to him. This basic rule applies alike to criminal prosecution and injunctive relief. As was stated in Loughran Co. v. Lord Baltimore C. & T. Co., supra, at page 205: "The right of injunctive remedy and the application of penal statutes should not be susceptible of doubt or conjecture."[1]

[Other State Statutes]

We note at the outset that the Maine statute contains language unlike that found in the statutes of other states. In a majority of the states, the statutes are made applicable only to those who are engaged in the distributive trades. A relatively small group of states have extended the restrictions against "unfair sales" to producers and manufacturers. Quite significantly, we think, those statutes which are recognized as applying to producers and manufacturers include a definition of production cost. The definition found in the California law (Ann. Cal. Code, Sec. 17026) is reasonably representative. "The term 'cost' as applied to production is hereby defined as including the cost of raw materials, labor and all overhead expenses of the producer; and as applied to distribution 'cost' shall mean the invoice or replacement cost, whichever is lower, of the article or product to the distributor and vendor plus the cost of doing business by said distributor or vendor." It is apparent that students of the subject have regarded Maine as one of the states regulating only the distributive trades. In 1948 an article in 57 Yale Law Journal 391 at 412 contained the following: "Nine of the statutes,[2] not confining themselves to distributive trades, deal also with producers and define their costs as 'the costs of raw materials, labor and all overhead expenses.' The remainder refer only to costs of wholesalers and retailers, and state the minimum level to be invoice cost plus the 'cost of doing business.'" In a footnote the author includes Maine as one of the states falling into the latter group (page 413). Were these writers justified in assuming as they apparently did that the Maine law is intended to apply only to the distributive trades, and not to producers and manufacturers? What does the statute say?

[Applicability to Manufacturers]

Sec. 1, Subsections I and II define "cost to the retailer" and "cost to the wholesaler." It is true of course that every producer and manufacturer must sell his product. This he does usually at wholesale and less commonly at retail. In this limited sense a manufacturer is a wholesaler or a retailer. But in ordinary and accepted business parlance the terms have distinct meaning and do not overlap. In the business world the producer or manufacturer is considered to be one who makes or assembles the merchandise he sells. The wholesaler and reailer are thought of as buying merchandise for resale, the essential distinction between them being ordinarily in the relative quantities purchased and sold. We do not think that the terms "wholesaler" and "retailer," without more, would be understood by busines men of ordinary intelligence and possessed of reasonable familiarity with the common and accepted meaning of the terms as having any application to producers or manufacturers. Moreover, the cost definition only serves to support the assumption that only the distributive trades are affected. The "cost to the retailer" is defined as "the invoice cost of the merchandise to the retailer within 30 days prior to the date of sale, or the replacement cost of the merchandise to the retailer within 30 days prior to the date of sale, in the quantity last purchased, whichever is the lower." (To this is added freight, cartage and the cost of doing business as defined.) For purposes of this discussion, the "cost to the wholesaler" is essentially the same. We note at the outset that these cost definitions are in every material respect similar to those employed in the statutes of other states which seek to regulate only the distributive trades. The term "invoice cost" would be understood in the business world to import a purchase of the very merchandise now being sold. It is a term ordinarily employed to designate the cost of merchandise bought in the ordinary channels of trade, It would be inconceivable, we think, that the term would be understood to embrace the cost of raw materials and labor, the two primary costs of manufacturer. Surely there is no "invoice cost" of labor in any recognized sense.

[1] As a result of the Loughran case, the Maryland Act relating to "unfair sales" was redrafted in 1941 and all the features noted by Loughran as objectionable, some of which appear in the Maine statute, were removed. In its new form the Maryland law was approved in Blum v. Engleman (1948) [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,232], 190 Md. 109, 57 A. 2d 421.

[2] Callmann, Unfair Competition and Trade Marks, 2d Ed. (1950) page 537, lists ten states which define production cost. They are Arkansas, California, Colorado, Kentucky, Montana, Oregon, Utah, Washington, Wyoming and South Carolina.

Our view is further strengthened when we turn to the alternative "replacement cost." For here the phrase is added, "in the quantity last purchased." Here is a clear indication that the Legislature, in defining cost, contemplated a "purchase" of the very goods now being sold. This phrase can in our judgment only relate to the distributive trades.

[Amendment to Statute]

We note with interest that in 1953 the Legislature amended the Act by adding to Subsection II of Sec. 1 thereof a new paragraph numbered D which reads:

> "D. Sales made by a cigaret distributor to a licensed wholesale dealer or to the operator of 15 or more vending machines shall not be subject to a markup of 2% as stated in the provisions of the preceding paragraph, but such sales shall be subject to full trade discount only." (Italics supplied) (P. L. 1953, Ch. 308, Sec. 112)

This new paragraph was incorporated into the section dealing with the "cost to the wholesaler." Rather significantly the word "distributor" was used. We would be reluctant, in the absence of concise and specific language, to conclude that the Legislature intended its definition of "cost to the wholesaler" to apply to producers and manufacturers or all other products if sold by them at wholesale, but only to distributors of cigarettes. We think it more reasonable to conclude that only persons engaged in the distributive trades were contemplated, whether of cigarettes or other merchandise. Moreover, the term "wholesale dealer" appears in the context in such a manner as to exclude the possibility that it was meant to include manufacturers and producers of cigarettes. Rather it is suggested that the term as used has a well understood connotation which does not embrace manufacturers and producers and is synonymous with the word "wholesaler" used elsewhere in the statute.

[Retailer Defined]

Subsection VI defines "retailer" as follows:

> "The term 'retailer' shall mean and include every person, co-partnership, corporation or association engaged in the business of making sales at retail within this state; provided that in the case of a retailer engaged in the business of making sales both at retail and at wholesale, such term shall be applied only to the retail portion of such business."

Is a producer or a manufacturer engaged in the business of making sales at retail within the meaning of the statute? We think not. His busines is manufacturing and his sales are in aid of and incidental to that operation. On the contrary, one who buys at wholesale and sells in smaller quantity at retail is obviously in the business, the primary business if you will, of making retail sales. A similar distinction was noted in J. H. Allison & Co. v. Killough et al., (1927) (Tenn.) 300 S. W. 5. The result is the same when we consider the definition of "wholesaler" found in Subsection VII.

[Meaningless Phrase]

There is but one phrase in the entire Act which suggests that it was intended to apply to producers and manufacturers as well as to the distributive trades. In Sec. 1, Subsec. VIII we find the following:

> "VIII. Where a retailer sells at retail any merchandise which is the product of his or its own manufacture or which has been purchased by him or it at the purchase price or prices available to wholesalers, in the absence of proof of a lesser cost, both the wholesale markup of 2% and the retail markup of 6% to cover in part the cost of doing business, as provided in subsections I and II, shall be added in determining the 'cost to the retailer' of such merchandise." (Emphasis supplied)

Plaintiff sees in the italicized phrase a clear indication that the Act as a whole is intended to regulate producers and manufacturers. We are not persuaded that this is necessarily so. So construed, the statute remains obscure. The markups referred to are to be added, but to what? If to the "cost to the wholesaler" defined in Subsec. II, that "cost" is meaningless as we have already indicated when applied to a producer or manufacturer. If we were compelled to hold that the Act applies to producers and manufacturers, we would feel equally compelled to hold that the cost definition is too vague, uncertain and conjectural when so applied to satisfy the constitutional requirements of due process of law. We prefer to give to the statute that meaning which we think from a reading of the whole Act it was intended to have, and which will obviate the necessity of passing on the constitutional question. In so saying, we follow a well recognized rule of construction. State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 80 Me.

57, 62; Hamilton v. District, 120 Me. 15, 20. In Rust v. Griggs, (1938) (Tenn.) 113 S. W. 2d 733, an "unfair sales" case, the court supplied the word "not" omitted by inadvertence from the statute to save it from being "senseless and ineffective" and "to carry out the plain legislative intent." We conclude that the phrase in Subsec. VIII which we have italicized is meaningless when read in context with the entire Act. We assume the phrase crept into the law by some inadvertence when it was originally drafted. This is more readily understandable when we consider the history of "unfair sales" legislation here and elsewhere. These statutes had their origin during the economic depression which beset our nation during the thirties. No doubt it was hoped that the imposition of a minimum price base might serve to alleviate some of the economic ills of the moment. State after state enacted "unfair sales" acts in one form or another. Maine followed suit in 1939 (P. L. 1939, Ch. 240). No uniform law has ever been adopted and it is not surprising that in the framing of legislation in a new field, a phrase was inserted which was inconsistent with the manifest intent, purpose and scope of the new law. The Legislative Record indicates that the Act was passed without debate. The issue as to whether the Act was ever intended to apply to producers and manufacturers seems not to have arisen heretofore. The answer must be found within the four corners of the Act itself.

[State Court Decisions]

We are not greatly aided by the decisions of other courts. The precise question which confronts us does not appear to have been raised or decided elsewhere. The voluminous and painstaking research of learned counsel has brought to our attention practically every decided case on the subject and we have examined these authorities with interest and attention. We note that in not one of these cases was a manufacturer or a producer involved. All have been concerned with wholesalers and retailers (giving these terms their ordinary and accepted meaning) engaged in the distributive trades.

[Cost Definition]

A line of cases following the lead of State v. Langley, (1938) 53 Wyo. 332, 84 P. 2d 767, has determined (1) that legislative control is justifiable where there is present an intent to injure or destroy competition coupled with sales below cost, and (2) that the cost definition spelled out by the statute should be interpreted as meaning only "the approximate cost arrived at by a reasonable rule," or stated otherwise, the cost arrived at by the dealer "in good faith." Assoc. Merchants of Montana v. Ormesher, (1939) 107 Mont. 530, 86 P. 2d 1031; State v. Sears [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,043], (1940) 4 Wash. 2d 200, 103 P. 2d 337; Dikeou v. Food Distributors Ass'n [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,069], (1940) 107 Colo. 38, 108 P. 2d 529; McIntire v. Borofsky [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,266], (1948) 95 N. H. 174, 59 A. 2d 471. On our view of the case before us, it is not necessary here to decide whether in an appropriate case we would or would not adopt the "good faith" cost rule. Consideration would most certainly have to be given to the possible danger that when two different cost accounting theories are advanced, the preference felt by the fact-finder for one theory may too readily lead to a finding of bad faith on the part of a merchant who adopts the other. Although a violation was perhaps clearly shown in Dikeou v. Food Distributors Ass'n. supra, the facts would only need to be altered slightly to present the precise issue as to choice of conflicting cost accounting theories. When applied to the problems of manufacture, especially in the allocation of overhead to unit costs, the difficulties would be complex, if not insurmountable.[3] Suffice it to say in disposition of the case at bar that when a statute uses a cost definition which is manifestly applicable only to distributors, that is a sufficient indication that the Act was not designed to apply to manufacturers.

[Other Issues]

We neither intimate nor suggest what our holding would be as to the constitutionality of certain portions of this Act when applied to a distributor. That would depend upon the particular facts presented.

There are other reasons why the declaration here is vulnerable to demurrer, but in view of our holding that this action against a producer and manufacturer has no foundation either at common law or by statute, it is unnecessary to consider them here.

The entry will be Exceptions sustained.

[3] 57 Yale Law Journal 391, 394. "For the theory to operate successfully, there must be agreement on what constitutes 'cost'. 'Accounting principles' do not answer this problem; accountants themselves differ widely as to proper methods of valuing assets, of assigning general expenses to particular products and periods, and of computing other elements of cost."

[¶ 68,871] United States v. Safeway Stores, Incorporated.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas, Fort Worth Division. Civil No. 3173. Filed December 7, 1957.

Case No. 1264 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Establishment of Arbitrary Sales Quotas by Grocery Chain—Food Products.—A retail grocery chain was prohibited by a consent decree from setting or establishing arbitrary quotas of the total available business in retailing food products for any city, county, or other area of its operations to be attained in any such area, or requiring its personnel to meet any such quota.

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.

Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Sales at Unreasonably Low Prices and Sales Below Cost.—A retail grocery chain was prohibited by a consent decree from selling any item in any of its retail stores at an unreasonably low price or at a price that is below cost for the purpose of monopolizing the sale of food products at retail in any part of the United States, or for the purpose or with the natural and probable effect of destroying competition or eliminating a competitor engaged in the sale of food products at retail.

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.680.

Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Operation of Stores Below Cost of Doing Business.—A retail grocery chain was prohibited by a consent decree from (1) operating any store or department thereof below the cost of doing business for the purpose of monopolizing the sale of food products at retail in any part of the United States, or for the purpose or with the natural or probable effect of destroying competition or eliminating a competitor engaged in the sale of food products at retail, or (2) setting or maintaining a low gross profit rate for any of its retail stores or any department thereof or establishing or maintaining low retail prices in such retail store or department knowing that such gross profit rate or retail prices, with reasonably anticipated volume, will cause such store or department to operate below the cost of doing business.

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610, 2610.620.

Monopolies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Price Variations.—A retail grocery chain was prohibited by a consent decree from selling at retail any food products in any store at lower prices than the prices at which identical products are then sold in any other retail store of the chain for the purpose or with the intent of monopolizing the sale of food products at retail in any part of the United States, or for the purpose of destroying competition or eliminating a competitor engaged in the sale of food products at retail.

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.620.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Enforcement —Proof of Violation of Decree.—A consent decree entered against a retail grocery chain set forth the acts of the chain which, if established by the Government, would constitute a violation of certain provisions of the decree by the chain. The decree provided that the establishment of such acts would constitute a violation of the decree, unless the chain established to the satisfaction of the court that the acts alleged were not done for the purpose prohibited in the decree.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8401, 8421.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Enforcement —Retention of Business Records.—For the purpose of securing compliance with a consent decree, a retail grocery chain was required to retain for a period of at least three years sufficient business records to reflect the cost of food products to it, the prices at which its retail stores were directed to sell and did sell such products, and the accounting records that show the details of the profit and loss results of the retail operations of individual stores or sales districts or divisions.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8401.20.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Specific Relief—Sale of Store or Cessation of Operations.—A consent decree entered against a retail grocery chain provided that in the event the chain is found to have violated any provision of the decree, the court may, in an appropriate case, direct the chain to sell or close for a reasonable period the store or stores in which the practices complained of took place and to cease doing business, for a reasonable period, in the trading areas of such stores.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8301.50, 8401.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Specific Relief—Notice of Decree.—A retail grocery chain was required by a consent decree entered against it to notify its personnel, engaged in pricing or selling food products, of the terms of the decree insofar as they relate to the retail sale of such products.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8301.60.

For the plaintiff: Victor R. Hansen, Assistant Attorney General, and William D. Kilgore, Jr., Charles F. B. McAleer, George D. Reycraft, Jr., Margaret H. Brass, and Paul A. Owens, Attorneys, Department of Justice.

For the defendant: Robert L. Clark, Elton L. Marshall, and Carl E. Enggas.

Final Judgment

Joe E. Estes, District Judge [In full text]: Plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on November 1, 1955; the defendant having appeared and filed its answer to such complaint denying the substantive allegations thereof; and the plaintiff and the defendant having severally consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issues of fact or law herein;

Now, Therefore, before any testimony has been taken herein, and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and upon the consent of all parties hereto, it is hereby:

Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed as follows:

I

[Sherman Act]

This Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter herein and of all parties hereto. The complaint states a claim against the defendant under Section 2 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Act, as amended.

II

[Definitions]

As used in this Final Judgment:

(A) "Person" shall mean any individual, partnership, firm, association, corporation or other legal entity;

(B) "Defendant" shall mean Safeway Stores, Incorporated, a Maryland corporation;

(C) "Food or food products" means any manufactured or processed food, fresh fruits, fresh vegetables, dairy products, poultry or meat and other commodities customarily stocked in retail grocery stores;

(D) "Item" means any product or brand of a product, sold in defendant's retail stores (except fresh meat, fish and poultry, and any other products for which the defendant in the future is unable to determine the unit cost of the product sold, and which, when offered for sale or sold by the defendant, are in forms, shapes or sizes materially different from those in which they were when first acquired by the defendant); each different size, brand or pack of a product shall be considered a separate item;

(E) "Safeway District" shall mean a number of retail stores operated as a group by the defendant as a District under the supervision of a District Manager. The defendant presently operates one hundred seventeen (117) Districts in the United States;

(F) "Safeway Division" means a number of Safeway Districts operated as a group by the defendant from a Division Office. The defendant presently operates nineteen (19) Retail Divisions in the United States;

(G) "Cost" shall mean invoice cost or replacement cost, whichever is lower, or the cost of production and processing of items produced or processed by defendant or a subsidiary;

(1) "Invoice cost" means the price at which an item is invoiced by a seller to the defendant or one of its subsidiaries, less all trade discounts, customary discounts for cash, and all other price reductions recognized in the trade, to which shall be added freight charges and cartage to the retail store not otherwise included in the invoice price. When cartage is to be added, it may be computed by the defendant on a mileage zone, ton-mile, pro rata or actual basis;

(2) "Replacement cost" means the price at which an item could be obtained by the defendant or one of its subsidiaries at the time it is offered for sale or sold at retail, less all trade discounts, customary discounts for cash, and all other price reductions recognized in the trade, to which shall be added freight charges and cartage to the retail store not otherwise included in the invoice cost. When cartage is to be added, it may be computed by the defendant on a mileage zone, ton-mile, pro rata or actual basis;

(3) "Cost of production and processing" means the cost (or replacement cost), whichever is lower, of all raw materials and ingredients plus all costs incurred by the defendant or any of its subsidiaries or supply divisions in producing, manufacturing or processing any item produced, manufactured or processed by the defendant or any of its subsidiaries for subsequent sale in the defendant's retail stores. The cost of production and processing shall include overhead and indirect expenses as well as the handling and transportation costs of such items to the defendant's retail stores.

(H) "Cost of doing business," as to a retail store, means (1) all direct costs and expenses incurred in the operation of the store, and (2) such store's proper share of the indirect, overhead and administrative expenses of Safeway, as determined by generally accepted cost accounting practices.

III

[Applicability of Judgment]

The provisions of this Final Judgment applicable to the defendant shall also apply to its officers, agents, servants, employees, subsidiaries, successors and assigns, and to all other persons in active concert or participation with the defendant who shall have received actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise.

IV

[Establishment of Quotas]

Defendant is enjoined and restrained from setting or otherwise establishing arbitrary quotas, either in dollar sales volume or percentages, of the total available business in retailing food or food products for any city, county, Safeway District, Division or other area of the defendant's operations to be attained by the defendant in any such area, or requiring the personnel of the defendant to meet any such quota or percentage.

V

[Unreasonably Low Prices]

Defendant is enjoined and restrained from offering to sell or selling any items in any of its retail stores at an unreasonably low price or at a price that is below cost for the purpose of attempting to monopolize or monopolizing the sale of food or food products at retail in any part of the United States, or for the purpose or with the natural and probable effect of destroying competition or eliminating a competitor engaged in the sale of food or food products at retail.

VI

[Price Variations]

Defendant is enjoined and restrained from offering to sell or selling at retail any food or food products in any store at lower prices than the prices at which identical products are then offered for sale or sold in any other retail store of the defendant for the purpose or with the intent of attempting to monopolize or monopolizing the sale of food or food products at retail in any part of the United States, or for the purpose of destroying competition or eliminating a competitor engaged in the sale of food or food products at retail.

VII

Defendant is enjoined and restrained from:

[Operations—Below Cost]

(A) Operating any store or department thereof below the cost of doing business for the purpose of attempting to monopolize or monopolizing the sale of food or food products at retail in any part of the United States or for the purpose of or with the natural and probable effect of destroying competition or eliminating a competitor engaged in the sale of food or food products at retail.

(B) Setting, assigning or maintaining a low gross profit rate for any of its retail stores or any department thereof or establishing or maintaining low retail prices in such retail store or department knowing that such gross profit rate or retail prices, with reasonably anticipated volume, will cause such store or department to operate below the cost of doing business.

VIII

[Violation of Provisions—Proof]

In any proceeding brought to enforce Section V or VII of this Final Judgment, wherein it is charged that the defendant has done any of the following for the purpose of attempting to monopolize or monopolizing, or destroying competition or eliminating a competitor, and upon the plaintiff establishing that the defendant:

(A) Has offered to sell or sold continuously or for a substantially continuous period of 60 days or more a daily total of 50 or more items below cost or at unreasonably low prices in any retail store; or

(B) Has sold in any store any number of items below cost whose total dollar sales volume in any four-week period constitutes more than 10% of total dollar volume of sale in that store during the same period; or

(C) Has operated any store or department thereof continuously or for a substantially continuous period of 16 weeks (consisting of four accounting periods of four weeks each) or any group of accounting periods constituting more than 25% of any one-year period (1) below the cost of doing business and (2) with a realized gross profit rate (based on landed store cost) for such store or department which is below the average realized gross profit rate for the Safeway stores or departments in the same Safeway District (or in adjacent Districts within the same Safeway Division) which are not operating below the cost of doing business;

the same shall constitute a violation of this Final Judgment unless the defendant establishes to the satisfaction of this Court that the acts alleged were not done for the prohibited purpose charged.

For purposes of subsection (A) hereof only, "item" shall not include different sizes of the same brand of a particular product.

In any proceeding under this Final Judgment wherein the plaintiff seeks to invoke the provisions of subsection (B) hereof, it shall be a defense for the defendant to show that such sales were not made for the purpose charged but to prevent spoilage of perishable food or food products.

For purposes of subsection (C) hereof, in determining whether a store or department is operating below the cost of doing business, indirect, overhead, and administrative expenses incurred outside the store may be allocated to the stores and departments thereof on a sales ratio basis.

IX

[Sale of Store—Relief]

In the event that the defendant is found to have violated any of the provisions of this Final Judgment, the Court may, in an appropriate case, direct the defendant, upon such conditions which the Court may impose, with due regard to rights of innocent third parties, to sell, or close for a reasonable period, the store or stores in which the practices complained of took place and to cease doing business, for a reasonable period, in the trading areas of such stores.

X

[Business Records]

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment the defendant shall retain for a period of at least three years sufficient business records to reflect the cost of food or food products to defendant, the prices at which its retail stores were directed to sell and did sell food or food products, and the accounting records that show the details of the profit and loss results (including the realized gross profit rate based on landed store cost) of the retail operations of individual stores, Districts and Divisions.

XI

[Notice of Judgment]

Defendant shall, within ninety (90) days from the date of the entry of this Final Judgment, send written notice of the terms of this Final Judgment insofar as they relate to the retail sale of food or food products by the defendant to its personnel engaged in pricing or selling food or food products (except retail store employees below the level of store managers).

XII

[Inspection and Compliance]

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to the defendant made to its principal office, be permitted, subject to any legally recognized privilege, (a) reasonable access, during the office hours of the defendant, to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of the defendant, relating to any of the matters contained in this Final Judgment, and (b) subject to the reasonable convenience of the defendant, and without restraint or interference from it, to interview officers and employees of the defendant, who may have counsel present, regarding such matters. For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment, the defendants, upon the written request of the Attorney General, or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, shall submit such written reports with respect to any of the matters contained in this Final Judgment as from time to time may be necessary for the purpose of enforcement of this Final Judgment. No information obtained by the means permitted in this Section XII shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department, except in the course of legal proceedings for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment in which the United States is a party or as otherwise required by law.

XIII

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to this Court at any time for such further orders or directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this Final Judgment, or the modification or termination of any of the provisions thereof, or for the enforcement of compliance therewith or for the punishment of violations thereof.

[Effective Date]

This Final Judgment shall go into effect thirty (30) days after the date of entry hereof.

[¶ 68,872] United States v. El Paso Natural Gas Company and Pacific Northwest Pipeline Corporation.

In the United States District Court for the District of Utah, Central Division. Civil No. 143-57. Dated October 21, 1957.

Case No. 1354 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Jurisdiction of United States District Court and Federal Power Commission—Stock Acquisition of Pipeline Company—Primary Jurisdiction.—In an action charging that a pipeline company violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act when it acquired stock of a competing pipeline company, a motion to dismiss the action for lack of jurisdiction or, in the alternative, to stay the court proceedings until the Federal Power Commission's final determination of applications by the pipeline companies for authority to merge the companies' pipeline assets was denied. The applications were filed with the Federal Power Commission after the Government had instituted the instant proceeding against the stock acquisition. The Federal Power Commission does not have jurisdiction to pass upon the stock acquisition; therefore, the doctrine of primary jurisdiction was not applicable. The court will not abdicate its jurisdiction in favor of that of an administrative agency in relation to a question which cannot and will not be decided by the administrative agency. The filing of the above applications with the Commission did not divest the court of its jurisdiction to hear the Clayton Act proceeding.

See Acquisitions of Stock or Assets, Vol. 1, ¶ 4208.25; Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8221.125.

For the plaintiff: A. Pratt Kesler, United States Attorney, Salt Lake City, Utah; and Ephraim Jacobs, Department of Justice, Washington, D. C.

For the defendants: Van Cott, Bagley, Cornwall & McCarthy, Salt Lake City, Utah, for El Paso Natural Gas Co.; and Ray, Quinney & Nebeker, Salt Lake City, Utah, for Pacific Northwest Pipeline Corp.

[Jurisdiction of Court]

The Court [WILLIS W. RITTER, Chief Judge, In full text]: Is there anything further?

For this Court to abdicate his jurisdiction in favor of that of the F. P. C. I think I should wish to have some authority more compelling than any authorities that have been submitted to me.

[Defendants' Authorities]

Mr. Dean: Would your Honor give us a certain period of time in which to file a further memorandum with you.

The Court: No, I am prepared to decide this motion this afternoon. I think we have had a good deal of time. I am sure if there had been any cases any more nearly in point than those you have cited me, you would have had them here.

Mr. Dean: Well, it seems to us, your Honor, the cases we have cited, the Cunard case and the Far Eastern Conference case, are controlling in this matter. The Supreme Court, I think, has made it very clear that it is not necessary for the administrative agency to be able to grant the relief requested. I think that was clear in the El Dorado-General American Tank Car Corporation case. And I think the City of Pittsburgh case makes it clear the Federal Power Commission can consider the antitrust questions, as well as the questions of public interest, under the Natural Gas Act.

As I read the cases, your Honor, it does seem to me that the Supreme Court has said that under this doctrine of primary jurisdiction that the courts must, in the first instance, allow the administrative agencies appointed by the Congress to pass upon these matters.

[Stock Acquisition]

The Court: Well, you folks saw to it in the beginning of this transaction that they couldn't pass on it. You chose, as the initial move, to accomplish your ends by a stock acquisition.

The F. P. C. hasn't any jurisdiction to deal with that at all and never will have unless Congress changes the law.

El Paso and Pacific Northwest had a choice when they moved into this transaction. They had a choice, then and there, to apply to the F. P. C. for a certificate to acquire the assets. Well, they didn't choose to do it.

Now, if the F. P. C. had granted your application, you would have had antitrust immunity.

Mr. Dean: Not according to Mr. Jacobs.

The Court: Well, according to you.

Mr. Dean: Yes, sir.

[Primary Jurisdiction—FPC]

The Court: Now, you didn't choose to proceed that way. You knew, when you made that stock acquisition, that there was a risk and you took, as Mr. Jacobs said this morning, a calculated risk about that.

Now, the solution would have been a happy one if the Government had not moved under the Clayton Act, but the Government has moved under the Clayton Act. Now you want to go back and do what you might have done in the beginning, and you are asking this Court to abdicate its jurisdiction to decide the very point under Section 7 of the Clayton Act which you have made it necessary for us to decide here, really, by your choice.

I think the narrow question before us is whether your stock acquisition is in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, and I do not believe, under any view of the matter, that you can urge that that question is a question which Congress has given for decision to that administrative agency. We are all in agreement about that.

Now, you undertook to say in your brief that the stock acquisition and the asset acquisition are one and the same thing. I do not think they are. As a matter of fact, you are a bit inconsistent, I think—with deference to you, too, sir—in saying in your brief that the stock and asset acquisitions are one and the same thing, have a unity, and then saying, as you did a few minutes ago, that the determination of that issue under the Clayton Act by this Court is not going to be binding upon the F. P. C. because it is a different thing now to apply to them for an asset combination.

If it is true, as you say in your brief, that the asset and the stock acquisitions are one and the same thing, have a fundamental unity, and we are talking about one issue, and it is the same issue, how can you say this afternoon that, having decided that issue here, that won't have some binding effect upon the F. P. C. in a later proceeding in which you ask a certification for an asset merger?

But be that as it may, you folks chose a route that gave you no immunity under the Clayton Act, and the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice has now seen fit to move against you for an antitrust violation.

The issues before this Court are the ordinary, usual issue in Clayton Act proceedings, nothing more, nothing less. Those issues cannot be presented to the F. P. C. in any view of the matter, never will be presented to the F. P. C. Different issues may be presented to them. You are now seeking to present different issues to them and you are seeking, with your application to the F. P. C., to divest this Court of jurisdiction to hear a Clayton Act proceeding.

Now, I do not think your authorities go that far. I have looked at those authorities, and they do not seem to me to go that far. There is some broad language. The broadest, I think, is in the quotation from Frankfurter on the first two or three pages of your brief.

If you look at the broad principles of primary jurisdiction and do not put your eye too carefully on the facts in the case in which they are announced, why, there is considerable support for what you say; but when you relate what the court says to the factual issues before it, I do not believe you have handed me a case that is in point.

Now, whichever way this case is decided there is going to be some prejudice to the future proceedings. If I decide, as I am about to do, that the motion should be denied and that the Clayton Act proceeding should go forward, I suppose there may be some prejudice in the result, whether it is res judicata or not, in the F. P. C. On the other hand, if I decide those motions in your favor and you go first to the F. P. C. and the F. P. C. agress with you, I suppose there will be some prejudice to the Government's position in the Clayton Act proceedings. Either way I think there is going to be some prejudice to the proceedings, either here or in the F. P. C.

At this juncture all this Court is confronted with is a Clayton Act proceeding, and the Government urges us to get to the trial of it, which the Government is entitled to do. And the trial of it, it doesn't seem to me, is going to involve anything at all that is properly before the F. P. C. or that can be brought before the F. P. C. And because of that fact, I believe this case is distinguishable from your cases that you have referred to.

There isn't any question at all, under the Acts of Congress, that this Court has jurisdiction of Clayton Act proceedings, and I do not see anything in the Acts of Congress, and nothing has been mentioned here, that takes away that jurisdiction in this kind of a situation or in any other.

I would be abdicating my jurisdiction in favor of that of an administrative agency in relation to a question which, admittedly, on all hands, cannot and will not be decided by that administrative agency; and that I will not do.

[Motions Denied]

The motions are denied.

Order

Defendants having filed on September 30, 1957, a Motion to Dismiss these proceedings or in the alternative to stay all proceedings pending determination in the Federal Power Commission of certain applications there filed on August 7, 1957, and the Court having duly considered the Motion, affidavits in support thereof and affidavits in opposition thereto filed by the Government, and having heard argument on the Motion;

It is Ordered that the Motion to Dismiss or in the alternative to stay these proceedings is hereby denied.

[¶ 68,873] Brian Pharmacy, Inc. v. Master's Lake Success, Inc.

In the New York Supreme Court, Nassau County. 138 N. Y. L. J., No. 110, page 13. Dated December 6, 1957.

New York Fair Trade (Feld-Crawford) Act

Fair Trade—Enforcement of Fair Trade Prices—Who May Maintain Suit—Retailer. —A pharmacy's motion for a temporary injunction restraining a retailer from selling fair-traded toiletries at less than the retail prices fixed by the manufacturers of the toiletries was granted. The court noted that it has no power to disregard Section 369-a of the New York Fair Trade Act, and that, if the retailer is violating the Act, the pharmacy "is doubtless within the range of inevitable injury."

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3330.34.

[Temporary Injunction]

C. A. JOHNSON, Justice [In full text]: This is a motion for a temporary injunction to restrain the defendant from selling numerous price-fixed toiletries at retail at less than the price fixed by the manufacturers. It is not denied that merchandise of the character described is being sold at prices below those fixed by the manufacturers. Defendant seems to suggest that General Business Law, section 369A, should be disregarded. The court feels it has no such power; if, as seems evident, the defendant is violating the statute, the plaintiff is doubtless within the range of inevitable injury. An injunction will accordingly issue against sales at less than prices fixed by Fair Trade contracts of the price-fixed articles of the manufacturers enumerated in the papers. Bond $5,000. Proceed on notice.

[¶ 68,874] H. & A. Selmer, Inc., Plaintiff v. Musical Instrument Exchange, Inc., Defendant; and Musical Instrument Exchange, Inc., Supplemental Plaintiff v. Sam Ash, Supplemental Defendant 1, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil 119-63. Filed December 3, 1957.

Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Counterclaim for Civil Damages and Injunctive Relief—Pretrial Procedures—Supplemental Defendants—Necessary Parties.—An order permitting the bringing in of supplemental defendants to a defendant's counterclaim charging that the plaintiff violated the antitrust laws was vacated on the ground that the presence of the supplemental defendants was not necessary and indispensable for the granting of complete relief in the determination of the counterclaim. In effect, the defendant, a retailer, charged that the plaintiff, a manufacturer, would not sell its products unless the defendant adhered to a resale price agreement, and that the supplemental defendants, other retailers, insisted upon the plaintiff taking action against the defendant by reason of the defendant's breaches of such an agreement with the plaintiff. In an antitrust action, it must be shown that injury and damage to the pleader was proximately caused by the alleged wrongful conduct of those charged (the supplemental defendants). No conspiracy among the supplemental defendants and the plaintiff was alleged. The supplemental defendants had no connection with each other and dealt independently with the plaintiff. The presence of the supplemental defendants was not required to enable the defendant to recover on its counterclaim.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9013.525, 9046.60.

For the plaintiff: Harper & Matthews, New York, N. Y.

For the defendants: Friedland, Jobrack & Zurkow (Louis G. Greenfield and Sidney W. Rothstein, of counsel), New York, N. Y., for Musical Instrument Exchange, Inc.; and O'Brien, Driscoll & Raftery (George A. Raftery and William D. Friedmann, of counsel), New York, N. Y., for supplemental defendants.

For prior opinions of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, see 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,800, and ¶ 68,780.

Opinion

[Motion]

LEVET, District Judge [In full text]: A number of the so-called supplemental defendants herein have moved to vacate the ex parte order dated July 5, 1957, which brought them into this action, or, in the alternative, for other relief. The plaintiff has joined in this motion at the time of argument.

[Plaintiff]

Plaintiff, H. & A. Selmer, Inc. (hereinafter called Selmer), is an Indiana corporation with its principal office for doing business in Elkhart, Indiana. Selmer manufactures and sells musical instruments, accessories and parts.

[Defendant]

The defendant, Musical Instrument Exchange, Inc. (hereinafter called Musical), is a New York corporation, doing business at 112 West 48 Street, New York City, selling musical instruments at retail.

[Antitrust Counterclaim]

The original action of plaintiff Selmer against defendant Musical was based upon a claim for goods sold and delivered in the sum of $9,728.00. The defendant caused the original action to be removed to the federal court on or about April 1, 1957. Defendant answered plaintiff's complaint by setting up affirmative defenses and a counterclaim containing an alleged antitrust charge against the plaintiff. (The plaintiff replied to defendant's counterclaim and the defendant moved to strike the defense of pari delicto contained in defendant's [plaintiff's] reply, which motion was denied by this court.)

[Supplemental Defendants]

On July 5, 1957, defendant Musical secured an ex parte order of this court bringing in the supplemental defendants.

Rule 13(h) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure is as follows:

> "Additional Parties May Be Brought In. When the presence of parties other than those to the original action is required for the granting of complete relief in the determination of a counterclaim or cross-claim, the court shall order them to be brought in as defendants as provided in these rules, if jurisdiction of them can be obtained and their joinder will not deprive the court of jurisdiction of the action."

[Issue]

In the affidavit of Louis G. Greenfield, sworn to on July 3, 1957, upon the basis of which the ex parte order was made joining these supplemental defendants, he asserts that these supplemental defendants are necessary and proper parties and that their inclusion will prevent a multiplicity of suits; that if Musical prevails in establishing this countercliam, these supplemental defendants will be subject to the injunctive mandate of this court. No assertion was made that the presence of these parties was required for the granting of complete relief in the determination of the counterclaim. This is the issue upon this motion.

If the person to be added is an indispensable party he must be added or the court cannot proceed to an adjudication of the counterclaim. 3 Moore's Federal Practice, p. 102.

[Indispensable Parties]

The provision in Rule 13(h) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure providing for the bringing in of additional parties whose presence "is required for the granting of complete relief in the determination of a counterclaim or cross-claim" has been interpreted by the courts to mean "parties" who are "indispensable" and/or "necessary." Edwards v. Rogers, D. C. E. D. So. Car., 1954, 120 F. Supp. 499; Kuhn v. Yellow Transit Freight Lines, Inc., D. C. E. D. Mo., 1952, 12 FRD 252. See also Shefsky v. Mansew Corp. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,513], 2 Cir., 1949, 177 F. 2d 946.

Since the order permitting the bringing in of additional defendants was made ex parte, it may be vacated upon notice. Shefsky v. Mansew Corp., supra; Invest-Import v. Seaboard Surety Co., D. C. S. D. N. Y., 1955, 18 FRD 499.

[Antitrust Charges]

Defendant Musical's prolix "supplemental complaint" is in substance as follows:

1. That defendant Musical and the supplemental defendants, among others, were and are retail dealers in musical instruments, etc., and are retail customers of plaintiff Selmer;

2. That defendant Musical seeks damages from plaintiff sustained as a result of acts of plaintiff and its retailers violative of the antitrust acts;

3. That plaintiff Selmer and the retailers named herein, as well as others whose identities are "presently unknown to the supplemental plaintiff" have "combined and conspired" by certain resale agreements to sell only at fixed prices, etc.;

4. That during the year 1953, the supplemental plaintiff Musical introduced and promoted a consumer discount purchasing program known as the "mix" plan;

5. That in January 1953, Selmer adopted a franchise retailing dealers agreement and adopted a new resale plan at fixed terms and prices, in accordance with which dealers who breached such agreement were to cease receiving goods from Selmer;

6. That in January 1953, plaintiff Selmer and others acting in concert with it—that is, the so-called franchised dealers—demanded that defendant Musical adhere to these restrictive terms and that it delete Selmer's name from advertisements and that Musical, so coerced, agreed;

7. That between January 1953 and December 1956, Selmer received complaints from numerous of its franchised retailers that Musical was failing to comply with resale agreements; that Musical refused to abide by such agreements, and that as a result of Musical so refusing, plaintiff Selmer cancelled Musical's franchise agreement;

8. That to secure resumption of sales by plaintiff Selmer to Musical, Musical was compelled to and on or about March 21, 1955, did sign a restrictive agreement;

9. That Selmer and a majority of its retailers adhered to the written agreement of January 28, 1955, and that thereby Musical was affected in its sales of Selmer's products and was disfranchised by Selmer and suffered loss, etc.

[Necessary Proof]

It must affirmatively appear from the pleadings in an action brought under the antitrust laws that injury and damage to the pleader was proximately caused by the alleged wrongful conduct of those charged, here the supplemental defendants. Schwartz v. General Electric Co., D. C. S. D. N. Y., 1952 [1952 Trade Cases ¶ 67,298], 107 F. Supp. 58; Dublin Distributors, Inc. v. Edward and John Burke, Limited, D. C. S. D. N. Y., 1952 [1952 Trade Cases ¶ 67,398], 109 F. Supp. 125.

However, Musical has not shown, even to the extent of pleading, that the presence of these supplemental defendants is required for the granting of complete relief in the determination of the defendant's counterclaim against the plaintiff. There is no allegation of the formation of an overall conspiracy or combination among the plaintiff and the supplemental defendants against the defendant Musical. In effect, Musical claims that each of the supplemental defendants in his own business relationship with plaintiff engaged in a course of conduct motivated by similar considerations. The twelve separate and independent supplemental defendants had no connection with each other and dealt independently with Selmer. See Canella v. United States, 9 Cir., 1946, 157 F. 2d 470, 476; Feddersen Motors Inc. v. Ward, 10 Cir., 1950 [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,579], 180 F. 2d 519; Alexander Milburn Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 4 Cir., 1926, 15 F. 2d 678.

Consequently, it develops that the complaint of Musical is that Selmer would not sell unless Musical adhered to the resale agreement, and the complaint of Musical against the supplemental defendants is that they in turn insisted upon Selmer taking action against Musical by reason of Musical's breaches of its agreement with Selmer. Just what else the supplemental defendants had to do with this problem does not appear. For Musical to recover on such an alleged cause of action by way of counterclaim does not require the presence of the supplemental defendants in this action. If Selmer is eventually enjoined, Musical may secure complete relief in the determination of its counterclaim against Selmer without the presence of these supplemental defendants or any other of such retail dealers who are in a similar position with respect to Selmer. What Musical seeks against Selmer is (1) damages for failure to sell and (2) injunctive relief to prevent its repetition. Thus, Musical is not primarily concerned with what the supplemental defendants do, but only with what Selmer does.

Hence, the supplemental defendants are not required under Rule 13(h) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure for the granting of complete relief in the determination of this counterclaim.

[Order Vacated]

Therefore, the motion to vacate the order of July 5, 1957, permitting the bringing in of the supplemental defendants, is granted.

So ordered.

[¶ 68,875] Sunbeam Corporation v. Gem Jewelry Company, Inc.; Gem Housewares Co., Inc.; and Government Employees Mutual of Honolulu, Inc.

In the United States District Court for the District of Hawaii. Civil No. 1589. Dated November 19, 1957; filed December 5, 1957.

Hawaiian Fair Trade Act and McGuire Act

Fair Trade—Constitutionality of Hawaiian Fair Trade Act—Violation of Hawaiian Organic Act—Inconsistency with Section 3 of Sherman Act.—"The Hawaiian Fair Trade Act is in violation of Section 55 of the Hawaiian Organic Act (48 U. S. C. Section 562) in that it is and always has been inconsistent with Section 3 of the Sherman Act and hence invalid." The McGuire Act, although it contains the phrase "or in any of the Antitrust Acts," does not amend Section 3 of the Sherman Act, which declares unlawful, in any territory, contracts, combinations, and conspiracies in restraint of trade. The McGuire Act is premised on a recognition of states' rights. Repeals "by implication are not favored, especially when the implication is a strained and dubious one, and one which would have the result of jarring anew the Sherman Act, especially its application in areas that are peculiarly the sole and exclusive property of the Federal Government, namely, the District of Columbia and incorporated territories." When "Congress has in mind amending the Sherman Act, it does so directly, expeditiously and with clarity." Also, the McGuire Act, as it is written, does not make sense as applied to territorial commerce. There are no "intrastate" transactions in a territory. Furthermore, while the Miller-Tydings Act amended Section 1 of the Sherman Act, it did not amend Section 3 of the Act. The McGuire Act is not an expression of Federal "policy" for Federal areas.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3035, 3040, 3085.13, 3258.

Fair Trade—Enforcement of Fair Trade Prices—Federal Court Action—Jurisdictional Amount.—In an action to enjoin violations of the Hawaiian Fair Trade Act, a Federal District Court noted that it was dubious as to whether or not the fair trader satisfied the requirement of making out a preliminary, satisfactory showing of jurisdiction. If the test for jurisdictional amount is based on the value of the fair trader's good will or trade-mark, jurisdiction would exist; however, if the test for jurisdictional amount is based on potential damage to good will or the trade-mark, jurisdiction would not exist. The court, assuming jurisdiction, held the Act invalid.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3410.

Fair Trade—Enforcement of Fair Trade Prices—Defenses—Validity of Contract—Lack of Mutuality.—In a fair trade enforcement action against a nonsigner under the Hawaiian Fair Trade Act, the court rejected the contention that the action should be dismissed because the fair trade contract lacked mutuality. The enforcement suit was not based on the contract; it was a tort action founded on the Act. The court, however, held that the Act was invalid.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3130, 3420.

For the plaintiff: Pratt, Tavares & Cassidy, by Roy A. Vitousek, Jr., Honolulu, Hawaii.

For the defendants: Heen, Kai, Dodge & Lum, by Robert G. Dodge, Honolulu, Hawaii.

Ruling upon Motion to Dismiss

[Fair Trade Enforcement Action]

J. FRANK MCLAUGHLIN, District Judge [In full text]: I have before me a motion to dismiss a complaint setting forth two alleged causes of action under the Hawaiian Fair Trade Act (Revised Laws of Hawaii 1955, Chapter 205), one for injunction and one for damages. Plaintiff has alleged diversity of citizenship and the $3,000 jurisdictional amount. Under the Hawaiian Fair Trade law Sunbeam products manufactured by the plaintiff corporation are fair-traded in this District. Despite that law, defendants who have not signed a fair trade agreement with Sunbeam but who have been given notice of such agreements after they have acquired Sunbeam products are selling these products at prices below those fixed under the fair trade contracts by the manufacturer. Plaintiff alleges that it has suffered damage and will continue to suffer damage unless these non-signer defendants are enjoined. It seeks not only a temporary injunction to enjoin violations of its fair trade contract rights under the statute, but also to recover exemplary and punitive damages for defendants' alleged wilful violations.

[Defenses to Action]

To support their contention that not only should no temporary injunctive relief be granted but that no permanent injunction should issue or recovery in damages be ordered, defendants have claimed that the complaint is defective in many particulars. The extensive motion to dismiss ranges from charges that the Court is without jurisdiction to various assertions that no equitable relief should be granted for reasons either of defect in the Fair Trade contract, or because of lack of mutuality of remedy or the lack of availability of specific performance due to the clause countenancing revocation. The motion contains two strong contentions that regardless of the alleged defects heretofore mentioned, no relief can be granted and that the complaint should be dismissed because the Hawaiian Fair Trade Act is inconsistent with Federal law, or if valid as to signers, is certainly invalid as to non-signers such as these defendants.

[Jurisdiction of Court]

Challenging the jurisdictional allegations of defendants' motion to dismiss, plaintiff has produced testimony and affidavits of corporate officers and deems itself to have satisfied the Court that there is jurisdiction at least for preliminary purposes.

No dispute exists as to the parties' diversity of citizenship or of the Court's well settled power to entertain a diversity suit. There is issue as to whether or not the jurisdictional $3,000 amount is here made to appear with sufficient clarity to warrant the Court going forward. In these fair trade cases there is much talk to the effect that the matter in controversy is the good will of the plaintiff or the value of the plaintiff's trade mark distinguished from any prospective damage which might result from the defendant's actions. Indeed, the bulk of the cases use that type of language, and if it happens to be a plaintiff corporation that is nationally well-known simply say that obviously the good will of the corporation is in excess of $3,000 and go merrily on from that point. There are apparently no cases involving unpopular corporations or corporations that have unpopular products and hence no good will of the value of $3,000. Nor are there cases where the intangible good will is seriously questioned as to whether or not it has any value at all. Here the Court can judicially notice, for it does seem to be a matter of common knowledge, that the Sunbeam Corporation has attached to its name and its products much good will, indeed of a value far in excess of $3,000. If that be the test, certainly jurisdiction here exists. If, however, the Seventh Circuit's test be applied (Seagram-Distillers Corp. v. New Cut Rate Liquors [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,719], 245 F. 2d 453, 7 Cir. 1957, cert. denied, No. 353, Oct. 14, 1957, 26 Law Week 3118) proof of jurisdiction here must be said to be lacking. It does not appear from the evidence when this test is applied that the potential damage in the offing, if defendants' acts are allowed to continue, would volume wise amount to $3,000. I am dubious as to whether or not plaintiff has here upon the challenging of the defendants satisfied the requirements of making out a preliminary, satisfactory showing of jurisdiction when tested by the law of KVOS, Inc. v. Associated Press, 299 U. S. 269 (1936).

[Contract—Lack of Mutuality]

Assuming that jurisdiction does exist, I nevertheless do not believe that there is any merit to the contentions advanced by the defendants that this case should be dismissed for reasons sounding in the equity area of lack of mutuality because the contract could not be specifically enforced. These contentions are lacking in merit for the reason that this is not a suit on a contract but is a tort action against a non-signer founded on a statute. Granting that this fair trade contract is very one-sided and lacking in several of the requirements of equity, still I agree with plaintiff that what it is trying to enforce is a set of statutory rights. Therefore, the language of privity, mutuality, or specific performance is not pertinent.

[Decision of Territorial Court]

This brings me to the consideration of what I deem to be the central contention upon the motion, to wit, whether or not the Hawaiian Fair Trade Act is valid either as to signers or non-signers. We are met at the threshold of the problem with the question of whether or not I am foreclosed from deciding it because some years ago the Supreme Court of the Territory of Hawaii in Auto Rental Co. v. Lee, 35 Haw. 77 (1939), held unanimously that the Hawaiian Fair Trade Act was not inconsistent with any Federal law and hence valid. I do not believe that the Auto Rental Co. case forecloses this Court from examining for itself the Federal question. The opinions of the Territorial Supreme Court like those of State supreme courts are binding on us in matters of local law. Whether or not the Hawaiian Fair Trade Act is in conflict with Federal law obviously is not a local question. Thus it is that this Court is not barred from deciding this issue.

To be sure the language of the Auto Rental Co. case went beyond the requirement of the case. The issues of Auto Rental did not involve non-signers but were between parties who had signed a fair trade contract. It is also significant to remember that the opinion of he court was announced subsequent to the Miller-Tydings Act but before the McGuire Act. It should be pointed out, though, that from time to time successive legislatures of the Territory have passed and re-passed an Hawaiian Fair Trade Act so that to this day the Hawaiian Fair Trade Law is in step with the most recent action of the Congress of the United States and the Supreme Court.

[Issue—McGuire Act]

The question to be determined is whether or not by reason of the McGuire Act amending Section 45 of Title 15, United States Code, it can be said that Section 3 of the Sherman Act (15 U. S. C. 3) has or has not been amended. If upon analysis and interpretation it can be said that the McGuire Act had the effect of amending Section 3 of the Sherman Act, then certainly the Hawaiian Fair Trade Act is valid at least as to signers. If the McGuire Act had no effect on Section 3, then the Hawaiian Fair Trade Act has never been valid. Reaching that conclusion there would be no need to distinguish between signers and non-signers.

[Sherman Act]

I have examined the legislative history of this Fair Trade legislation, and I am, of course, conversant with the Federal policy first expressed by Congress in 1890 in passing the Sherman Act. I well know that it has been the Federal policy since 1890 to regard every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade, or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, to be illegal. This policy also regards as illegal every contract, combination or form of trust, conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce in any territory of the United States or the District of Columbia. This would include restraint of trade or commerce between any such territory and another, between any territory and territories and any state or states and the District of Columbia, or with foreign nations, or between the District of Columbia and any state or states or foreign nations. Indeed, this language of Section 1 and Section 3 of the Sherman Act might well be said to be one of the cornerstones of our competitive free economy.

[Miller-Tydings Act]

I know also from this legislative history that there came a time in 1937 when lobbyists and economic soothsayers sold the Congress what is regarded by many today as a bill of goods to the effect that a decent respect for states' rights and the economy of the states required that certain state legislation be rendered immune from the effect of the Sherman Act despite its adverse bearing on interstate and foreign commerce. And thus it was that we had the original exception to the Sherman Act carved out by the Miller-Tydings Act. This exception is a grant of immunity from Federal action and is solidly promised on a recognition of and respect for states' rights.

[Scope of McGuire Act]

The original statute, 50 Stat. 693, passed August 17, 1937, says the Miller-Tydings Act amends Section 1 of Title 15. Error, however, crept into the unofficial text. Thus we find the United States Code and the United States Code Annotated stating to this day that the Miller-Tydings Act amended not only Section 1 but Sections 1 through 7 inclusive. It did not. But the question we have is, did the McGuire Act amend Section 3? As stated, the Miller-Tydings Act did not because the actual statute controls over the unofficial text whenever there is a variance. There is no such problem of error with regard to the McGuire Act. It is perfectly clear in the original statute, the United States Code, and in the unofficial text. On its face it appears to endeavor by indirection to amend Section 3 It uses the same language as the Miller-Tydings Act, plus, for the Supreme Court's benefit, the emphatic insertion: "* * * or in any of the Antitrust Acts." See Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert Corp. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,823], 341 U. S. 384 (1951).

The McGuire Act reads:

> "Nothing contained in this section or in any of the Antitrust Acts shall render unlawful any contracts or agreements prescribing minimum or stipulated prices, or requiring a vendee to enter into contracts or agreements * * * when contracts or agreements of that description are lawful as applied to intrastate transactions under any statute, law, or public policy now or hereafter in effect in any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia in which such resale is to be made, or to which the commodity is to be transported for such resale." (Emphasis supplied)

Our inquiry is, does the phrase "or in any of the Antitrust Acts" of the McGuire Act amend Section 3?

[Sherman Act, Sec. 3, Not Amended]

I do not believe that it does. The McGuire Act, too, is premised on a recognition of states' rights; witness the preamble to the Act. Further, repeals by implication are not favored, especially when the implication is a strained and dubious one, and one which would have the result of jarring anew the Sherman Act, especially its application in areas that are peculiarly the sole and exclusive property of the Federal Government, namely, the District of Columbia and incorporated territories.

There are two further reasons why I do not believe that the McGuire Act amended Section 3. I have in mind what might be called "congressional know-how." Judge Felix pointed out in Johnson & Johnson v. Gem Sundries Co., Inc., Case No. 3204, decided Oct. 18, 1957, First Circuit of Hawaii, that when Congress has in mind amending the Sherman Act it does so directly, expeditiously and with clarity. Observe the fact that when in 1955 it sought to increase the penal provision from $5,000 to $50,000 it did so by not only amending Section 1 but by also expressly amending Section 3 (15 U. S. C. Sections 1 and 3; 69 Stat. 282).

The final reason why I believe that the McGuire Act does not amend Section 3 by indirection or implication is that as it is written the McGuire Act does not make sense as applied to Territorial commerce. Throughout the Sherman and Clayton Acts there is a well-defined, respected understanding of the meaning of the words "interstate," "intrastate" and "Territorial commerce." Section 45-A as amended by the McGuire Act talks about intrastate transactions in a territory or the District of Columbia. You simply do not have intrastate transactions in a territory or in the District of Columbia. You can only have those inside of a state. It looks to me as if, without thinking, the draftsman included the phrase "State, Territory or District of Columbia" as a stock phrase customarily used to assure application throughout the entire country. Perhaps inadvertently the draftsman did not notice this defect to which I have called attention, deemed it harmless or by some process of reasoning hoped that once Congress passed the bill some court would liberally interpret "intrastate" to include territorial commerce and the District of Columbia. Such would be without warrant under the Sherman Act, which so carefully distinguishes interstate and foreign commerce, commerce in the territories and the District of Columbia, and intrastate commerce.

[Hawaiian Act Invalid]

It is well-settled by the opinion of the Second Circuit in General Electric Co. v. Masters Mail Order Co. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,715], 244 F. 2d 681, (1957) cert. denied — U. S. — (Oct. 14, 1957, 24 Law Week 3117, No. 224), that fair trade laws are not lawful in the District of Columbia. Thus it would seem that the argument that the McGuire Act is an expression of Federal "policy" for Federal areas falls by the wayside. Congress has never thought so much of fair trade laws as to enact a Federal fair trade law applicable to territories or the District of Columbia or to interstate commerce. Indeed, the whole structure of these exceptions to the Sherman Act are poised and balanced on the theory of respect for states' rights. Such exceptions could not apply to a territory which has no sovereignty. I am satisfied that the complaint is one which does not state a claim or claims upon which relief can be granted. The Hawaiian Fair Trade Act is in violation of Section 55 of the Hawaiian Organic Act (48 U. S. C. Section 562) in that it is and always has been inconsistent with Section 3 of the Sherman Act and hence invalid.

The motion to dismiss is granted.

[¶ 68,876] Banana Distributors, Incorporated; Percival B. Elbaum; Edith Elbaum; Joan S. Elbaum and Jerome D. Elbaum, minors, by Percival B. Elbaum, their guardian ad litem; and The Inland Corporation v. United Fruit Company, Fruit Dispatch Company, and John A. Werner.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil 87-361. Filed December 6, 1957.

Clayton and Sherman Antitrust Acts

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages and Injunctive Relief—Defenses—Statute of Limitations—Applicable Statute—Interpretation of State Tolling Provision.—Connecticut statutes of limitations were held applicable to a private antitrust suit brought in a Federal District Court in New York, where the causes of action asserted in the suit arose in Connecticut and the statute of limitations of the forum, New York, contained a "borrowing" provision. The Federal four-year statute of limitations was enacted after the filing of the instant suit; therefore, it was not applicable.

The Connecticut statutes of limitations provided, in effect, that the running of the statutes of limitations shall be suspended during the period of time that the defendant is absent from the state. In the instant suit, it had to be determined whether or not the defendants were absent from the state during a certain period of time. As a general rule, a Federal court must determine such a question under the laws of the state as interpreted by the courts of the state. The instant court rejected the defendants' contention that, in determining the principles applicable to the question, a Connecticut court would, and, therefore, the Federal court must, utilize the so-called Federal approach and apply the test of amenability to service under the "transacting business" test of Section 12 of the Clayton Act. The court noted that Connecticut courts do not have jurisdiction over Federal antitrust causes of action, and that there is persuasive authority for distinctions between "venue" and "process." The court ruled that a charge embodying the process provision of Section 12 of the Clayton Act was not required.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9010.100, 9010.200.

For the plaintiffs: Smith, Mathews, Bell & Solomon (Blackwell Smith and Ernest Leff, New York, N. Y., and Arnold, Fortas & Porter, by Thurman Arnold, Washington, D. C., of counsel), New York, N. Y.

For the defendants: Davis, Polk, Wardwell, Sunderland & Kiendl (Theodore Kiendl, Ralph M. Carson, Porter R. Chandler, Edwin J. Jacob, David G. Gill, and David L. Farley, of counsel), New York, N. Y.

For prior opinions of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, see 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,532, 68,446, 68,445, and 68,343, and 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,232.

Opinion

[Statute of Limitations]

LEVET, District Judge [In full text]: This is an action for treble damages and injunctive relief under the antitrust laws. The application of the pertinent statute of limitations is immediately involved. The complaint was filed on September 3, 1953. It alleges a combination and conspiracy in violation of the federal antitrust laws commencing sometime in 1946; the complaint also alleges various overt acts constituting an illegal use of defendants' monopoly power committed in 1947 and 1949 and continuously thereafter up to the date of suit.

[Federal Statute]

When the complaint was filed on September 3, 1953, there was no federal statute of limitations governing treble damage actions under the antitrust laws. The uniform four-year statute of limitations now incorporated under the Clayton Act (15 USCA § 15(b)) was not enacted until 1955.

[New York Borrowing Statute]

Counsel for plaintiffs and counsel for defendants agree that the causes of action herein, if any, arose in Connecticut. Furthermore, under these conditions, the parties agree that this court in determining the appropriate period of limitations must first look to the law of the forum, to wit, New York.

However, Section 13 of the New York Civil Practice Act (sometimes called the "borrowing provision") provides:

> "Limitation where cause of action arises outside of the state. Where a cause of action arises outside of this state, an action cannot be brought in a court of this state to enforce such cause of action after the expiration of the time limited by the laws either of this state or of the state or country where the cause of action arose, * * *"

The "borrowing statute" (Section 13 of the New York Civil Practice Act) has been consistently applied when the cause of action arose in another jurisdiction. Seaboard Terminals Corporation v. Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, D. C. S. D. N. Y., 1938 [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,188], 24 F. Supp. 1018, affirmed, 2 Cir., 1939 [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,225], 104 F. 2d 659; Electric Theater Co. v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp., D. C. W. D. Mo., 1953, [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,560], 113 F. Supp. 937; cf. Cope v. Anderson, 331 U. S. 461 (1947). There is no claim that any of the plaintiffs come within the saving clause in favor of New York residents.

[Connecticut Laws]

Hence, we are forced to consider the relevant provisions of the State of Connecticut. These (Title 63, Chapter 414, General Statutes of Connecticut, 1949 Revision) are as follows:

> "§ 8316. Action founded upon a tort. No action founded upon a tort shall be brought but within three years from the date of the act or omission complained of."
>
> "§ 8325. Suit for forfeiture on penal statute limited to one year. No suit for any forfeiture upon any penal statute shall be brought but within one year next after the commission of the offense."
>
> "§ 8330. Defendant's absence from the state to be excluded, when. In computing the time limited in the several cases aforesaid, the time during which the party, against whom there may be any such cause of action, shall be without the state, shall be excluded from the computation."

[Absence from State]

The matter at issue in this preliminary trial is whether the defendants Fruit Dispatch Company and United Fruit Company were "without the state" during the years 1947-1953.

The basic rule has been stated as follows:

> "It is well established that in determining the period of limitations applicable to actions at law, the federal courts are governed by local statutes as interpreted by the highest courts of the respective States. Bell v. Morrison, 1 Pet. (26 U. S.) 351, 359, 360, 363, 7 L. Ed. 174; Graham v. Englemann, (D. C.) 263 F. 166, 168. See, also, Palmer v. Texas, 212 U. S. 118, 131, 29 S. Ct. 230, 53 L. Ed. 435." Van Dyke v. Parker, 9 Cir., 1936, 83 F. 2d 35, 37. See Campbell v. Haverhill, 155 U. S. 610.

The same court (9th Circuit) approved of the same rule with respect to any exceptions raising a bar to the statute notwithstanding the fact that the legislation or judicial construction thereof is different from that prevailing in other jurisdictions (83 F. 2d at page 38). See also Wood & Selick, Inc. v. Compagnie Generale Transatlantique, 2 Cir., 1930, 43 F. 2d 941, 942.

Consequently, the question of whether defendants were "without the state" must be determined by the laws of Connecticut and by reference to Connecticut decisions. We are bound by the decisions of the State of Connecticut on the construction and interpretation to be given those statutes. Leonia Amusement Corp. v. Loew's Inc., D. C. S. D. N. Y., 1953 [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,592], 117 F. Supp. 747, 751-752; Dibble v. Bellingham Bay Land Co., 163 U. S. 63, 73 (1896); Bauserman v. Blunt, 147 U. S. 647, 652 (1893).

In the absence of a decision by the highest court of the state, the federal court must follow the decisions of the intermediate state courts, even though the rule may appear to be unsound or undesirable, unless it is convinced by other persuasive data that the highest court of the state would do otherwise, but it is not free to apply a different rule merely because it may think that the highest court of the state might announce a different rule in the future. 35 C. J. S. 1257.

The Connecticut statute as to tolling—that is, Section 8330—apparently was first used in 1821, although theretofore such words had been used in a statute concerning book debts enacted in 1785. The early statute provided that "in computing the time limited in the several cases aforesaid, the time during which the party, against whom there may be any such cause of action, shall be without this state, shall be excluded from the computation." Stat. p. 406, § 8 (Ed. 1838). See Sage v. Hawley, 16 Conn. 106, 114 (1844).

If analogous decisions clearly show the law of the state, the federal court must determine the case in accord with those decisions. March v. Buck, 313 U. S. 406 (1940). If the law cannot be ascertained from state decisions, only then should the federal court examine the decisions of other states on the subject or it may follow the rule established by federal decisions. But the federal court need not engage in mere speculation as to how the state court would decide the question. New England Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Mitchell, 4 Cir., 1941, 118 F. 2d 414, 420, cert. denied 314 U. S. 629.

[Amenability to Service]

Defendants assert, however, that in determining the principles applicable to this question, the Connecticut court would, and, therefore, this court must, utilize the so-called federal approach and apply the test of amenability to service under the "transacting business" test of the Clayton Act. Here the defendants point to:

(1) Bertha Building Corporation v. National Theatres Corporation, 2 Cir., decided September 10, 1957 [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,818]. In this case the Second Circuit stated:

> "* * * decisions as to whether these suits are barred by the statute depends upon whether National could have been sued by these plaintiffs in California before the California statute of limitations had run, and so comes down to a question of venue in respect to each of such supposititious suits." (Italics supplied.)

This language from the Bertha case would not appear to be pertinent since we are not concerned with a question of venue but, rather, with a question of amenability to process. Furthermore, on petition for rehearing (Bertha Building Corporation v. National Theatres Corporation, 2 Cir., decided November 7, 1957 [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,860]) the Court of Appeals in a per curiam opinion expressly noted that it was not passing upon the question of whether New York law determined tolling under the New York statute (New York Civil Practice Act, § 19).

(2) Seaboard Terminals Corporation v. Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, D. C. S. D. N. Y., 1938 [1932-1939 Trade Cases ¶ 55,188], 24 F. Supp. 1018, affirmed, 2 Cir., 1939 [1932-1939 Trade Cases ¶ 55,225], 104 F. 2d 659:

In the Seaboard case, one of the questions before Judge Patterson was whether the Maryland statute of limitations had run against the defendant, Socony-Vacuum Oil Company, or whether the Maryland statute had been tolled due to its absence from the state. The defendant Socony argued that while it was not subject to suit generally in Maryland, it was subject to an action there for treble damages under the Clayton Act. Judge Patterson in rejecting this contention stated:

> "* * * The only activity of this defendant in Maryland shown on these papers, however, is the statement in the amended complaint that it has bought, sold, transported and caused to be transported gasoline and other petroleum products from and to Maryland, Pennsylvania and other states. In my opinion this falls short of alleging that it 'transacted business' in Maryland to a sufficient extent to be subject to civil action there under the Clayton Act." (p. 1020)

Neither the lower court nor the Court of Appeals in the Seaboard case was squarely faced with the problem of determining whether to read the "transacting business" text of the Clayton Act into the Maryland tolling provision since even under Section 12 of the Clayton Act, defendant Socony had not "transacted business" in Maryland.

The Seaboard case, therefore, would not appear to support defendants' position which would in effect require this court to incorporate or absorb federal decisions dealing with venue under Section 12 of the Clayton Act into an interpretation of the Connecticut tolling provision.

[Clayton Act]

The statute concerned is Title 15 U S C A § 22, which is as follows:

"§ 22. District in which to sue corporation

"Any suit, action, or proceeding under the antitrust laws against a corporation may be brought not only in the judicial district whereof it is an inhabitant, but also in any district wherein it may be found or transacts business; and all process in such cases may be served in the district of which it is an inhabitant, or where it may be found."

The legislative history of the "transacting business" amendment to the Clayton Act was discussed by the Supreme Court in United States v. National City Lines, Inc. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,259], 334 U. S. 573, 581-587. At page 583, the court said:

"The basic aim of the advocates of change was to give the plaintiff the right to bring suit and have it tried in the district where the defendant had committed violations of the Act and inflicted the forbidden injuries. At first they were not much concerned with the exact formulation of the language to accomplish this, several formulas being proposed from time to time. But they were convinced that restricting the choice of venue to districts in which the defendant 'resides or is found' was not adequate to assure that the suit could be brought where the cause of action arose, and therefore insisted on change in order to assure that result." (Italics supplied.)

In the legislative history of this section there is evidence indicating that its purpose related to venue and not to service. In discussing the purposes of the amendment Senator Chilton stated:

"* * * That provides where the suit may be brought. It does not give any further jurisdiction or right. If, as a matter of fact, the suit could not be brought before that section was passed, it would not allow the suit to be brought afterwards. It only speaks of the service of the process and where the suit may be brought. It does not refer to the jurisdiction of the court. The other language of the section provides that process may be served in another district. That is already the law. If the bill be passed, if the court has jurisdiction of the case, suits may be brought in one district and the other defendants may be served in another district." (See 51 Congressional Record, 63rd Congress, 2nd Session, 1914, p. 16,049.)

[Issue Restated]

The problem restated, however, is whether in this instance, the Connecticut courts (1) would be presumed to consider the federal statute and (2) to follow the interpretation of such statute as decided in the federal decisions.

The difficulty here is that unless a state court is given jurisdiction over antitrust cases, no Connecticut courts would have occasion to determine a specific question of application of Section 8330 to such an action. Thus, we are asked by the defendants to suppose that this court is the Connecticut Court of Errors passing on the application of the Connecticut tolling statute to a cause of action on which the Connecticut courts have no jurisdictional basis to entertain. "In essence, the question is whether the federal courts should or should not be required to make and document that kind of hypothetical estimate; it can never be more than that for the obvious reason that state courts do not have jurisdiction to hear antitrust complaints." See "The Statute of Limitations in Antitrust Litigation." Carl H. Fulda and Howard C. Klemme, 16 Ohio State Law Journal, 233, 238. Also see Disparities in Time Limitations on Federal Causes of Action, 49 Yale Law Journal, 738; Limitations and the Federal Courts, William Wirt Blume and B. J. George, Jr., 49 Michigan Law Review, 937.

The first clause of Section 22 deals with venue in which a corporation may be served; the second clause deals with service of process on the corporation. The two are not identical. Venue may be (a) in the district wherein the corporation is an "inhabitant;" (b) wherein it may be found; or (c) wherein it transacts business. Process may be served upon the corporation (a) "in the district of which it is an inhabitant" or (b) "wherever it may be found."

By the same token, the decisions interpreting Section 22 in reference to "transacting business" relate primarily to venue, not process.

Jeffrey-Nichols Motor Co. v. Hupp Motor Car Corporation, 1 Cir., 1931, 46 F. 2d 623:

Here plaintiff sued defendant, a Virginia corporation, in Massachusetts following service in Massachusetts. The court wrote:

"The defendant appeared by counsel for the sole purpose of objecting to the jurisdiction, and filed a motion to dismiss the action on the ground that the defendant was not a resident nor did it transact business in Massachusetts. * * * " (p. 624)

The court further stated:

"Prior to the enactment of October 16, 1914, c. 323, § 12, 38 Stat. 736 (15 USCA § 22), a person or corporation violating the anti-trust laws could only be sued in the district where resident, or where found. The provision of section 12 of the Clayton Act relieved 'the injured person from the necessity of resorting for the redress of wrongs committed by a nonresident corporation, to a district, however distant, in which it resides or may be "found"—often an insuperable obstacle —and enabling him to institute the suit in a district, frequently that of his own residence, in which the corporation in fact transacts business, and bring it before the court by the service of process in a district in which it resides or may be "found."' Eastman Co. v. Southern Photo Co., 273 U. S. 359, 373, 374, 47 S. Ct. 400, 403, 71 L. Ed. 684; Gen. Inv. Co. v. Lake Shore Rwy., 260 U. S. 261, 279, 43 S. Ct. 106, 67 L. Ed. 244." (p. 624)

Katz Drug Co. v. W. A. Sheaffer Pen Co., D. C. W. D. No., 1932, 6 F. Supp. 210:

Here Judge Reeves, apparently speaking of the above distinction, said:

"It does not follow that because it was transacting business in the district it could be regarded as present in the district or that 'it may be found' there. * * *" (p. 212)

Adolph Meyer, Inc. v. Florists' Telegraph Delivery Ass'n, Inc., D. C. S. D. N. Y., 1936 [1932-1939 Trade Cases ¶ 55,124], 16 F. Supp. 783:

In this case Judge Knox wrote:

"The opinion of the Supreme Court in Eastman Kodak Company v. Southern Photo Company, 273 U. S. 359, at page 373, 47 S. Ct. 400, 403, 71 L. Ed. 684, very definitely points out that the 'transaction of business' by a foreign corporation within the confines of a particular judicial district is of wider significance than the 'doing of business' within such district so as to subject the corporation to the valid service of process therein. The quotation from 273 U. S. 359, at page 371, 47 S. Ct. 400, 402, 71 L. Ed. 684, of the aforementioned opinion, and contained on page 13 of defendant's brief, has to do with the service of process within a district in which a defendant 'does business' and is not an interpretation of what constitutes the transaction of business under the venue provisions of the Clayton Act (38 Stat. 730)." (p. 783)

Lechler Laboratories, Inc. v. Duart Mfg. Co., Inc., D. C. S. D. N. Y., 1940, 35 F. Supp. 839:

Judge Mandelbaum said in this case:

"It is settled that the quantum of business which must be transacted by a corporation in a district to place the venue of an action under the anti-trust acts is less than the 'doing business' which is necessary to sustain the service of process. Eastman Kodak Co. v. Southern Co., 273 U. S. 359, 47 S. Ct. 400, 71 L. Ed. 684; Hansen Packing Co. v. Armour & Co., D. C., 16 F. Supp. 784; Meyer, Inc. v. Florists' Telegraph Delivery Association, Inc., D. C., 16 F. Supp. 783; Haskell v. Aluminum Co. of America, D. C., 14 F. 2d 864; United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, D. C., 20 F. Supp. 13; Sure-Fit Products Co. v. Fry Products Co., D. C., 23 F. Supp. 610; Deutsch v. Times Pub. Corporation, D. C., 33 F. Supp. 957. * * *" (p. 840)

Abrams v. Bendix Home Appliances, Inc., D. C. S. D. N. Y., 1951 [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,792], 96 F. Supp. 3:

Judge Weinfeld very properly wrote:

"Section 12 of the Clayton Act is an enlargement of jurisdiction granted under Section 7 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, 15 U. S. C. A. § 15, which restricted suits to the district in which the defendant 'resides or is found' and so controlled both the place of service of process and venue. United States v. Scophony Corporation of America, 333 U. S. 795, 804, 68 S. Ct. 855, 92 L. Ed. 1091. * * *

"As indicated in the Eastman [273 U. S. 359] and Scophony cases, venue may be proper in a district, although the corporation may not be subject to service of process there. It follows that the standard to be applied in determining whether a corporation 'transacts business' for the purposes of venue under Section 12 is more liberal than that used in deciding the validity of service. * * *" (p. 5)

Similiter see:

Windsor Theatre Co. v. Loew's Inc., D. C. Distict of Columbia, 1948 [1948-1949 Trade Cases ¶ 62,277], 79 F. Supp. 871; United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., D. C. N. D. Ill., 1950 [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,557], 87 F. Supp. 962; Austad v. United States Steel Corp., D. C. N. D. Cal., 1956, 141 F. Supp. 437.

[Ruling]

There is, therefore, persuasive authority for the above distinctions between "venue" and "process." Consequently, application of the so-called "liberal federal approach" (which in essence deals with nothing more than venue) to this problem of Connecticut interpretation of Section 8330 of the laws of that state is, in my opinion, erroneous.

It would be equally erroneous, in my opinion, to submit to the jury the question of whether defendants can be "found" in Connecticut within the meaning of Section 12 of the Clayton Act since there would appear to be no justification for incorporating or absorbing the federal statutory language into the Connecticut tolling provision. In any event, there seems to be no substantial distinction between the process test set forth in Section 12 of the Clayton Act, and the process test applied by the Connecticut courts. Thus, in Eastman Kodak Company of New York v. Southern Photo Materials Company, 273 U. S. 359 (1927) the Supreme Court in discussing the original provision in Section 7 of the antitrust act which authorized suit "in the district in which the defendant resides or is found" stated:

"* * * In Peoples Tobacco Co. v. Am. Tobacco Co., 246 U. S. 79, 84, 86—decided in 1918—it was held that this provision, as applied to a corporation sued in a district in which it did not reside, required that it 'be present in the district by its officers and agents carrying on the business of the corporation,' this being the only way in which it could be said to be 'found' within the district; that to make it amenable to service of process in the district, the business must be of such nature and character as to warrant the inference that it had subjected itself to the local jurisdiction, and was by its duly authorized officers or agents present therein; and that advertising its goods in a State and sending its soliciting agents therein, did not amount to 'that doing of business' which subjected it to the local jurisdiction for the purpose of serving process upon it." (p. 371)

Therefore, a charge embodying the process provision of Section 12 of the Clayton Act is not required.

[¶ 68,877] Paper Mate Manufacturing Co. v. A. Rosenblum, Inc.

In the New York Supreme Court, New York County, Special Term, Part III. 138 N. Y. L. J., No. 111, page 6. Dated December 9, 1957.

New York Fair Trade (Feld-Crawford) Act

Fair Trade—Enforcement of Fair Trade Prices—Temporary Injunction—Availability of Defenses.—A fair trader was granted a temporary fair trade injunction where the claimed offending sales were not denied. A number of defenses were unavailable to the defendant, as an offending seller, to defeat the application.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3420.

[Temporary Injunction]

McGIVERN, Justice [In full text]: Plaintiff moves for temporary injunction in enforcement of the Feld-Crawford Act. The claimed offending sales are not denied. Defendant attempts to assert a number of defenses, but as an offending seller they are unavailable to him to defeat this application. The motion is granted with bond in the sum of $1,000. Settle order.

[¶ 68,878] Julius Kayser & Co. v. E. J. Korvette, Inc.

In the New York Supreme Court, New York County, Special Term, Part III. 138 N. Y. L. J., No. 112, page 6. Dated December 10, 1957.

New York Fair Trade (Feld-Crawford) Act

Fair Trade—Enforcement of Fair Trade Prices—Temporary Injunction—Triable Issue—Purchase of Merchandise Prior to Fair Trade Contract.—A fair trader was denied a temporary injunction where there was a triable issue as to whether or not the defendant purchased the fair trader's merchandise prior to the date of the fair trader's first fair trade contract.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3268.34.

[Temporary Injunction]

McGivern, Justice [In full text]: Plaintiff moves for a temporary injunction in enforcement of the Feld-Crawford Act. Whether plaintiff is entitled to such drastic relief depends here solely upon the pertinent facts and circumstances surrounding the one claimed offending sale. Notice of plaintiff's fair trade program was given to the defendant by letter dated October 10, 1957. The program is evidenced by contracts dated September 25, September 30 and Octber 1, 1957. Whether defendant made its purchase of stock of plaintiff's merchandise prior to September 25, 1957, as claimed, must remain for trial and cannot be determined on this application to support the requested drastic relief (E-Z Mills, Inc., v. E. J. Korvette, Inc., Spector, J., N. Y. L. J., May 1, 1957; Cluett, Peabody & Son Co., Inc., v. J. W. Mays, Inc., Hofstadter, J., N. Y. L. J., May 22, 1957). The motion is denied. Order signed.

[¶ 68,879] Whitaker Pharmacy, Inc. v. Pinkiert Supply Store, Inc.

In the New York Supreme Court, Westchester County. 138 N. Y. L. J., No. 111, page 14. Dated December 9, 1957.

New York Fair Trade (Feld-Crawford) Act

Fair Trade—Enforcement of Fair Trade Prices—Suit by Retailer—Temporary Injunction—Defenses—Enforcement Activity or Policy of Fair Traders.—A retailer was granted a temporary injunction restraining a competing retailer from selling fair traded products at less than their established prices. The defendant did not deny its price cutting, and its affidavit that other retailers and discount houses were selling the products below fair trade prices and that the manufacturers and distributors were not diligently and in good faith enforcing their fair trade contracts was held insufficient to defeat the application.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3440.34.

[Temporary Injunction]

Eager, Justice [In full text]: This is a motion for a temporary injunction in action by retailer to restrain a competing retailer from selling trade marked and branded products at less than the minimum prices established pursuant to the Fair Trade Law. The moving affidavits clearly show repeated and continual unlawful price cutting by defendant, and the defendant, advertising as a "discount center," does not deny its price cutting. The plaintiff has made a clear case for a temporary injunction which is not to be defeated by the general and rather inconclusive averments in defendant's affidavit that other retailers and discount houses in the county and in the metropolitan area are selling the products at less than the fair trade prices and that the manufacturers and distributors are not diligently and in good faith enforcing their Fair Trade Law contracts (see, particularly, General Electric Co. v. Masters, Inc., [1952 Trade Cases ¶ 67,382], 122 N. Y. S., 2d, 14, aff'd 281 App. Div., 827, 118 N. Y. S., 2d, 927; Fisher v. Rothberg, Mr. Justice Olliffe, N. Y. L. J., March 4, 1955 [1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,029]; Librandi v. Berners Pharmacy, Inc., Mr. Justice Dineen, N. Y. L. J., January 25, 1955) [1955 Trade Cases ¶ 67,966]. Motion granted. Plaintiff shall give an undertaking in the sum of $5,000. Settle order on notice.

[¶ 68,880] Parmelee Transportation Company v. John L. Keeshin, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. No. 56 C 323. Dated November 13, 1957.

Clayton and Sherman Antitrust Acts

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages and Injunctive Relief—Pretrial Procedures—Interrogatories.—In a private antitrust action, the court sustained the plaintiff's objection to the defendants' interrogatories requesting financial information which would tend to show whether or not the plaintiff was making (or should have made) a profit in various years on the ground that interrogatories relating to damages will not be allowed until liability is established, and sustained the defendants' objection to the plaintiff's interrogatories requesting the defendants to list every pending Interstate Commerce Commission proceeding (for a period of several months) to which they were parties on the ground that such information is of public record.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9013.875.

For the plaintiff: Lee A. Freeman, Chicago, Ill.

For the defendants: Noah Walker, M. A. Garvey, D. J. Parker, and Charles F. Hough, Chicago, Ill.

For a prior opinion of the U. S. District Court, Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division, see 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,484.

[Objections to Interrogatories]

Memorandum

PHILIP L. SULLIVAN, District Judge [In full text]: In this civil anti-trust action pre-trial discovery proceedings in one form or another have been under way for some months. In connection with them, three motions are now before the court.

I

Defendants' Objections to Plaintiff's Interrogatories of July 1, 1957 (Objections Filed August 7, 1957).

Plaintiff has served each of defendant railroads with three interrogatories, to which all defendants object. (For the purpose of this motion the interrogatories may be treated as identical; the slight variation in one instance is immaterial.)

Interrogatory No. 1 asks each railroad to list the docket number and title of every proceeding pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission for a period of several months, to which the railroad or any of its subsidiaries were parties; No. 2 asks for further information relating to each case so listed; and No. 3 inquires whether any officer of the railroad conferred informally with Cross about any of the proceedings listed in response to Interrogatories Numbers 1 and 2.

It is not necessary to consider now all of the arguments advanced by counsel. The objections to Interrogatories Numbers 1 and 2 will be sustained on the ground that the matters requested are of record in the files of the Interstate Commerce Commission and therefore available to the plaintiff. Plaintiff's objection that the names of parties are not spelled out in the titles to Interstate Commerce Commission cases has some merit. Nevertheless, while this may make the task more difficult, it does not make it impossible. (In its answering brief of September 21, 1957, on another motion, plaintiff describes this information as "more readily accessible" to the defendants than to plaintiff). No doubt it is true, as plaintiff insists, that defendants could compile the list much more easily than plaintiff; but it does not follow that the court can compel them to do so.

Even if the matters here requested are regarded as not available to the plaintiff because of the equivocal nature of the titles to the cases, it would be necessary to find that Interrogatories Numbers 1 and 2 are improper. It is apparent that the answers to them would consist of a list of thousands of cases. This is simply too unwieldy to make sense; court and counsel would soon be lost in a morass of lists.

As for Interrogatory No. 3, it must fail in its present form, since by its wording it depends upon Numbers 1 and 2. Therefore, no consideration is given at this time to the various arguments of counsel as to its relevancy.

The objections of each of the defendant railroads to the interrogatories propounded by plaintiff on July 1, 1957, are sustained.

II

Objections of Plaintiff to Interrogatories Propounded by Certain Defendants on May 31, 1957 (Objections of July 1, 1957).

The challenged interrogatories request plaintiff to furnish financial information which would tend to show whether or not the plaintiff was making (or should have made) a profit in various years. The case made by defendants for the relevancy of these questions is weak, and they appear to relate principally to statements assumed in the briefs. Defendants state that these interrogatories might in any event show that plaintiff's damages were not as extensive as claimed by the complaint. Although there is a conflict of authority on the subject, the better view is that interrogatories relating to damages will not be allowed until liability is established. (Ball v. Paramount Pictures) [1944-1945 Trade Cases ¶ 57,311], 4 F. R. D. 194, 196 (W. D. Pa. 1944); Lyophile-Cryochem Corp. v. Chas. Pfizer Corp., 7 F. R. D. 352, 364 (E. D. N. Y. 1947); Zenith Radio Corp. v. Dictograph Products, Inc., 6 F. R. D. 597, 599 (D. Del. 1947).

Plaintiff's objections to defendants' interrogatories of May 31, 1957, are sustained.

III

Motion (Sept. 6, 1957) of Defendants to Compel Further Answer to Certain of the Interrogatories of May 31, 1957.

Although, as noted above, plaintiff objected to some of the interrogatories of May 31, 1957, it answered others. Defendants now request that plaintiff be required to elucidate several of these answers.

(A) Objections to answer to Interrogatory No. 2.

This interrogatory asks about plaintiff's contracts with various railroads. The answer states that the "terms of these agreements were matters of practice and usage." This is not sufficiently definite, and the objection will be sustained.

(B) Objection to answer to Interrogatory No. 8(c)(1).

Since it is apparent from the briefs that the parties are in substantial agreement as to the form and content of a proper answer, the objection will be sustained.

(C) Objections to answer to Interrogatory No. 12.

In answer to an inquiry as to alleged agreements between Keeshin and Cross, plaintiff has stated "Plaintiff believes that promises * * * were oral but written memoranda of and documents based upon such promise may have been prepared and may still exist."

Plaintiff should state definitely whether or not it knows of any written memoranda; to that extent the objection is sustained. If it does not know of any, no further consideration of the objections will be necessary. If it does know of some but refuses to reveal them, the objections may be reconsidered.

(D) Objection to answer to Interrogatory No. 13.

The answer is sufficient and the objection be overruled.

(E) Objection to answer to Interrogatory No. 14.

Plaintiff has in effect answered by saying it does not know. This is all it can do, and the objection is overruled.

(F) Objection to answer to Interrogatory No. 15.

Since it appears from the briefs that the parties are in agreement, the objection will be sustained.

Summary

I

Defendants' objections (of August 7, 1957) to plaintiff's interrogatories of July 1, 1957: Sustained.

II

Plaintiff's objections (of July 1, 1957) to defendants' interrogatories of May 31, 1957: Sustained.

III

Defendants' motion (of Sept. 6, 1957) to compel further answers by plaintiff to interrogatories of May 31, 1957: Defendants' objections to the answers are sustained, and its motion granted, as to Interrogatories Numbers 2, 8(c)(1) and 15; the motion is granted to the extent indicated above for Interrogatory No. 12; the motion is denied as to Interrogatories 13 and 14.

[¶ 68,881] Banana Distributors, Incorporated; Percival B. Elbaum; Edith Elbaum; Joan S. Elbaum and Jerome D. Elbaum, minors, by Percival B. Elbaum, their guardian ad litem; and The Inland Corporation v. United Fruit Company, Fruit Dispatch Company, and John A. Werner.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil 87-361. Filed December 12, 1957.

Clayton and Sherman Antitrust Acts

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages and Injunctive Relief—Defenses—Statute of Limitations—Applicable State Statute—Nature of Treble Damage Action.—A New York three-year statute of limitations, covering any action upon a statute for a penalty or forfeiture, rather than a New York six-year statute of limitations, covering any action to recover upon a liability created by statute (except a penalty or forfeiture), was held to be applicable to a private antitrust action brought in a Federal District Court in New York.

In determining the applicable statute of limitations, the court first looked to the law of the forum, that is, New York. The New York statutes provided that where a cause of action arises outside of the state, an action cannot be brought in a state court to enforce such cause of action after the expiration of the time limited by the laws either of the state or of the state where the cause of action arose. The cause of action in the instant action arose in Connecticut, and the Connecticut statutes of limitations provided, in effect, that the running of the Connecticut statutes of limitations shall be suspended during the period of time that the defendant is absent from the state. A jury rendered a verdict finding that the defendants were absent from Connecticut during a six-year period immediately prior to suit. Consequently, since the statute of limitations of Connecticut was tolled by reason of the absence of the defendants from Connecticut, the New York statutes of limitations were applicable to the action.

In determining the applicable New York statute of limitations, the court ruled that the question of whether the cause of action is a cause of action upon a statute for a penalty or forfeiture must be determined by the decisions of the courts of New York, and that the New York courts may decide to be guided by federal court decisions as to the nature of the cause of action. The court found that there were no authoritative New York decisions which were determinative of the issue, that there was evidence that certain New York courts in decisions dealing with federal statutes had resorted to federal determinations for guidance purposes, and that the weight of authorities in federal decisions and in federal expressions of characterization of a federal treble damage action required the choice of the statute of limitations applicable to an action upon a statute for a penalty or forfeiture.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9010.100, 9010.200.

For the plaintiffs: Smith, Mathews, Bell & Solomon (Blackwell Smith and Ernest Leff, New York, N. Y., and Arnold, Fortas & Porter, by Thurman Arnold, Washington, D. C., of counsel), New York, N. Y.

For the defendants: Davis, Polk, Wardwell, Sunderland & Kiendl (Theodore Kiendl, Ralph M. Carson, Porter R. Chandler, Edwin J. Jacob, David G. Gill, and David L. Farley, of counsel), New York, N. Y.

For prior opinions of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, see 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,876; 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,532, 68,446, 68,445, and 68,343; and 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,232.

Opinion Re New York Statute of Limitations

[Issue]

RICHARD H. LEVET, District Judge [In full text]: The question immediately involved in this action at this juncture is, what statute of limitations of the State of New York is available to the defense herein. It is concededly either a three-year period under Section 49, subdivision 3, or a six-year term under Section 48, subdivision 2 of the New York Civil Practice Act.

[Nature of Action]

The action is for treble damages and injunctive relief under the antitrust laws. The complaint was filed on September 3, 1953. It alleges a combination and conspiracy in violation of the federal antitrust laws commencing sometime in 1946; the complaint also alleges various overt acts constituting an illegal use of defendants' monopoly power committed in 1947 and 1949 and continuously thereafter up to the date of suit.

[Federal Statute]

When the complaint was filed on September 3, 1953, there was no federal statute of limitations governing treble damage actions under the antitrust laws. The uniform four-year statute of limitations now incorporated under the Clayton Act (15 USCA § 15(b)) was not enacted until 1955.

[New York "Borrowing" Provision]

Counsel for plaintiffs and counsel for defendants have agreed that the causes of action herein, if any, arose in Connecticut. Furthermore, under these conditions, the parties conceded that in determining the appropriate period of limitations this court must first look to the law of the forum, to wit, New York.

However, Section 13 of the New York Civil Practice Act (sometimes called the "borrowing provision") provides:

> "Limitation where cause of action arises outside of the state. Where a cause of action arises outside of this state, an action cannot be brought in a court of this state to enforce such cause of action after the expiration of the time limited by the laws either of this state or of the state or country where the cause of action arose, * * *"

This "borrowing statute" (Section 13 of the New York Civil Practice Act) has been consistently applied when the cause of action arose in another jurisdiction. Seaboard Terminals Corporation v. Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, D. C. S. D. N. Y., 1938 [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,188], 24 F. Supp. 1018, affirmed 2 Cir., 1939 [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,225], 104 F. 2d 659; Bertha Building Corporation v. National Theatres Corporation, 2 Cir., decided September 10, 1957, Docket Nos. 24253-4 [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,818]; cf. Cope v. Anderson, 331 U. S. 461 (1947). There was no claim that any of the plaintiffs come within the saving clause in favor of New York residents.

[Connecticut Statutes]

Hence, we were forced to consider the relevant provisions of Section 8330 of the Statutes of the State of Connecticut, which is as follows:

> "§ 8330. Defendant's absence from the state to be excluded, when. In computing the time limited in the several cases aforesaid, the time during which the party, against whom there may be any such cause of action, shall be without the state, shall be excluded from the computation."

A preliminary trial with a jury was held to determine whether the defendants Fruit Dispatch Company and United Fruit Company under said Section 8330 were "without the State" of Connecticut during the years 1947-1953 (see opinion of this court with respect to certain phases thereof, dated December 5, 1957).

At the conclusion of this preliminary trial on December 5, 1957, the jury rendered a special verdict by which it was held that both of these corporate defendants, to wit, Fruit Dispatch Company and United Fruit Company, were "without the State" of Connecticut during the entire six-year period immediately prior to suit, that is, from September 3, 1947 through September 3, 1953. At this trial the defendants stipulated in effect that the defendant John A. Werner was not within the state in the appropriate period. The motion of defendants to set aside this verdict was denied.

[New York Statutes Control]

Consequently, since the statute of limitations of Connecticut, in which the cause of action arose, is thus tolled by reason of all three defendants being out of the State of Connecticut, the New York Statutes of Limitations control. See American Surety Company of New York v. Gainfort, 2 Cir., 1955, 219 F. 2d 111.

[Applicable Statute]

Section 48, subdivision 2 of the New York Civil Practice Act provides:

"§ 48. Actions to be commenced within six years. The following actions must be commenced within six years after the cause of action has accrued:

* * *

"2. An action to recover upon a liability created by statute, except a penalty or forfeiture."

Section 49, subdivision 3 of the New York Civil Practice Act provides:

"§ 49. Actions to be commenced within three years. The following actions must be commenced within three years after the cause of action has accrued:

* * *

"3. An action upon a statute for a penalty or forfeiture where the action is given to the person aggrieved or to that person and the people of the state, except where the statute imposing it prescribes a different limitation."

This, then, is the issue for our decision: Is the period six years under Section 48, subdivision 2, or three years under Section 49, subdivision 3?

The general rule is that this court in interpretation of the New York State rules of limitation must look to the constructions of such rules as determined by the highest court of this state. Bauserman v. Blunt, 147 U. S. 647, 652 (1893); Dibble v. Bellingham Bay Land Co., 163 U. S. 63, 73 (1896).

Therefore, the question of whether the cause of action involved is a cause of action upon a statute for a penalty or forfeiture must be determined by the decisions of the courts of New York. Hoskins Coal & Dock Corp. v. Truax Traer Coal Co., 7 Cir., 1951 [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,925], 191 F. 2d 912, cert. denied 342 U. S. 947 (1952); Schiffman Bros., Inc. v. Texas Co., 7 Cir., 1952 [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,270], 196 F. 2d 695; Gordon v. Loew's Incorporated, 3 Cir., 1957 [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,783, 68,820], 247 F. 2d 451.

The New York state courts may, of course, if they so elect, decide to be guided by federal court decisions as to the nature of a cause, especially if based upon federal statutes. See DiBitetto v. Sussman, 279 App. Div. 1033 (2nd Dept. 1952); Corcoran v. Nelson Towers Realty Corporation, 42 N. Y. S. 2d 265 (Sup. Ct. N. Y. Co. 1942); Drenne v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, 42 N. Y. S. 2d 259 (Sup. Ct. N. Y. Co. 1943).

[Penal Character of Action]

Title 15 U. S. C. A. § 15 is as follows:

"15. Suits by persons injured; amount of recovery

"Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee."

An analysis of the statutory provisions upon which the plaintiffs sue, clearly indicates that the actual loss sustained by plaintiffs is only a base upon which the sanction of treble damages is superimposed. Thus, the fundamentally penal character of the right of action is evident.

At the time of the passage of the Sherman Act, Senator Hoar of Massachusetts, an eminent member of the Bar, one of the sponsors of the bill in the Senate, said of Section 7 of the Sherman Act:

"* * * This section, which is proposed to be amended, is a section establishing a penalty, threefold damages. Now, you cannot clothe a state court with the authority to enforce a penalty. * * *

"* * * we cannot say that a state court shall be clothed with jurisdiction to enforce a claim for threefold damages suffered, which is purely penal and punitive." See 21st Cong. Rec., 3146-3147 (51 Cong., 1st Sess., April 8, 1890).

In the Ninth Circuit in 1955 in Karseal Corporation v. Richfield Oil Corporation [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,020], 221 F. 2d 358, the opinion expounded the purposes of the antitrust acts:

"Free enterprise is a basic concept of our economy but contained therein is the corollary of free and fair competition. The broad scope of the antitrust laws, was part of the legislative scheme 'intended in the most comprehensive way to provide against combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade or commerce * * *', D. R. Wilder Mfg. Co. v. Corn Products Refining Co., 1915, 236 U. S. 165, 173, 35 S. Ct. 398, 401, 59 L. Ed. 520, and thus gave substance to those basic concepts and corollaries. The Clayton Act was part of the overall plan and the 'right of the injured party to recover damages was intended to provoke greater respect to the Act * * *', Maltz v. Sax, 7 Cir., 1943, 134 F. 2d 2, 5, certiorari denied 319 U. S. 772, 63 S. Ct. 1437, 87 L. Ed. 1720. 'The treble-damage action was intended not merely to redress injury to an individual through the prohibited practices, but to aid in achieving the broad social object of the statute.' Fanchon & Marco v. Paramount Pictures, D. C. S. D. Cal. 1951, 100 F. Supp. 84, 88, affirmed Fanchon & Marco, Inc., v. Paramount Pictures Inc., 9 Cir., 1954, 215 F. 2d 167, certiorari denied 348 U. S. 912, 75 S. Ct. 293. The object of the three main statutes, Sherman, Clayton and Robinson-Patman Acts, 15 U. S. C. A. § 1 et seq., comprising the antitrust laws, 'is to protect "the interstate market"', Balian Ice Cream Co. v. Arden Farms Co., D. C. S. D. Cal. 1950, 94 F. Supp. 796, 800." (p. 365)

Judge Yankwich in Fanchon & Marco v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., D. C. S. D. Cal., 1951 [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,909], 100 F. Supp. 84, wrote:

"The treble-damage action was intended not merely to redress injury to an individual through the prohibited practices, but to aid in achieving the broad social object of the statute. * * *" (p. 38)

In Fleitmann v. Welsbach Co., 240 U. S. 27 (1916), Holmes, J., described a private Sherman Act case as involving "a penalty of triple damages." (p. 29)

In United States v. Standard Ultramarine and Color Company, D. C. S. D. N. Y., 1955 [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,237], 137 F. Supp. 167, Judge Weinfeld wrote:

"Congress, to secure effective enforcement of the antitrust laws, provided both criminal and civil sanctions through governmental agencies. But it was not content to rely solely upon official action. It sought to encourage individuals to aid in the policing. And to help achieve the broad objectives of the Act the treble damage action was authorized in favor of those who had been injured by the condemned conduct. Its purpose was not only the redress of private wrong but also the protection of the public interest. And 'Congress intended to use private self-interest as a means of enforcement * * * when it gave to any injured party a private cause of action * * *.' Another purpose in permitting an injured party to recover three-fold his actual damage was that substantial verdicts against the wrongdoer would constitute punitive sanctions—to act as a deterrent against a repetition of the offense and to serve as a warning to potential violators." (p. 171)

As long ago as 1907, in the Circuit Court, Southern District of New York, in a case entitled American Banana Co. v. United Fruit Co., 153 Fed. 943, Judge Lacombe said:

"* * * It seems entirely clear that this is a penal action. It is instituted by a person who claims to have been injured by the unlawful acts of defendant to recover, not only the damages which will compensate him for any loss he has sustained, but also a penalty of twice as much again, which represents no damages, but only a fine imposed for bad conduct." (p. 944)

In the Circuit Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, 1928, in the case entitled Decorative Stone Co. v. Building Trades Council, 23 F. 2d 426, involving the antitrust laws under the Clayton Act, Swan, Circuit Judge, stated on page 427:

"As to the claim for triple damages, the answer is found in the doctrine of Fleitman v. Welsbach Co., 240 U. S. 27, 36 S. Ct. 233, 60 L. Ed. 505, where it was held that damages under section 7 of the Sherman Act (26 Stat. 209, 210 [15 USCA § 15]) could not be awarded in a shareholder's representative action in equity, inasmuch as the act contemplated that the infliction of 'the penalty of triple damages' should not be enforced, 'otherwise than through the verdict of a jury in a court of common law.' * * * The right to recover penal damages still remains a right enforceable only in a common-law action." (Emphasis supplied)

In a later case in the Second Circuit, in 1955, Lyons v. Westinghouse Electric Corporation [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,008, 68,032], 222 F. 2d 184, cert. denied 350 U. S. 825 (1955), a private triple damage action under the antitrust acts, Learned Hand, Circuit Judge, wrote:

"* * * The remedy provided is not solely civil; two thirds of the recovery is not remedial and inevitably presupposes a punitive purpose. It is like a qui tam action, except that the plaintiff keeps all the penalty, instead of sharing it with the sovereign." (p. 189)

To whom must the action upon a statute be a penalty or forfeiture? Judge Cardozo in Cox v. Lykes Brothers, 1924, 237 N. Y. 376, said:

"* * * We are to remember that the same provision may be penal as to the offender and remedial as to the sufferer (Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 667; Loucks v. Standard Oil Co. of N. Y., 224 N. Y. 99). The nature of the problem will determine whether we are to take one viewpoint or the other." (p. 380)

In connection with a consideration of the statute of limitations in determining the pertinent section of the New York Civil Practice Act, the impact of a suit under the federal antitrust acts is clearly upon the defendants. The defendants pay, and as to them a penalty is exacted.

[Non-Penal Character of Action]

There are a number of cases involving civil antitrust litigation in which an action for treble damages under the Clayton Act has been held to be one brought to recover upon a liability created by statute within the meaning of Section 48, subdivision 2 of the New York Civil Practice Act, rather than one to recover a penalty within the meaning of Section 49, subdivision 3 of the New York Civil Practice Act.

The leading decision in which this view is maintained is Leonia Amusement Corp. v. Loew's Inc., D. C. S. D. N. Y., 1953 [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,592], 117 F. Supp. 747. The court in the Leonia case viewed the problem as a two-fold one: "(a) what in federal law is the essential nature of a claim arising under Section 4 of the Clayton Act as amended; and (b) what New York statute of limitations would the New York courts hold applicable to this type or class of claim." (p. 752)

In many of the cases cited in the Leonia opinion in which a non-penal characterization of a treble damage action was employed, there is little or no discussion as to the basis for the court's conclusion.[1] Instead, there is often a mechanistic reliance on Chattanooga Foundry and Pipe Works v. City of Atlanta, 203 U. S. 390 (1906) as authority for such a non-penal characterization. The first question which had to be determined in the Chattanooga case was whether the federal five-year statute of limitations (Section 1047 of the Revised Statutes) was applicable to civil antitrust litigation. This state read as follows:

"No suit or prosecution for any penalty or forfeiture, pecuniary or otherwise, accruing under the laws of the United States, shall be maintained, except in cases where it is otherwise specially provided, unless the same is commenced within five years from the time when the penalty or forfeiture accrued; provided, that the person of the offender, or the property liable for such penalty or forfeiture, shall, within the same period, be found within the United States; so that the proper process therefor may be instituted and served against such person or property."

Based upon previous federal authority, the court concluded that a civil antitrust action was not a "suit for a penalty" within the meaning of Section 1047. However, it is apparent from a reading of the three Chattanooga opinions[2] that in determining the applicable Tennessee statute of limitations, the respective courts were guided by their conception of Tennessee law.[3] Thus,

---

[1] See Seaboard Terminals Corporation v. Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, D. C. S. D. N. Y., 1938 [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,188], 24 F. Supp. 1018, affirmed on other points 2 Cir., 1939 [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,225], 104 F. 2d 659; Pastor v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., D. C. S. D. N. Y., 1940, 76 F. Supp. 781; Dipson Threatres, Inc. v. Buffalo Theatres, Inc., D. C. W. D. N. Y., 1948, 8 FRD 86; Winkler-Koch Engineering Co. v. Universal Oil Products Co., D. C. S. D. N. Y., 1951 [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,892], 100 F. Supp. 15; Momand v. Universal Film Exchange, Inc., D. C. D. Mass., 1942, 43 F. Supp. 996.

[2] City of Atlanta v. Chattanooga Foundry & Pipe Co., D. C. E. D. Tenn., 1900, 101 Fed. 900, reversed 6 Cir., 1903, 127 Fed. 23, affirmed Chattanooga Foundry and Pipe Works v. City of Atlanta, 203 U. S. 390 (1906). For an excellent summary of the Chattanooga cases see footnote 26 of the Leonia opinion, 117 F. Supp. at p. 753.

[3] As was stated by Judge Lindley in Hoskins Coal & Dock Corp. v. Truax Traer Coal Co., 7 Cir., 1951 [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,925], 191 F. 2d 912 at p. 914:

"* * * We think plaintiff's reliance upon Chattanooga Foundry and Pipe Works v. City of Atlanta, 203 U. S. 390, 27 S. Ct. 65, 51 L. Ed. 241 is misplaced. The court held that no federal limitation existed; that the applicable statute was that of Tennessee and, approving Judge Lurton's analysis of the decisions of that state, that the pertinent limitation was 10 years. Here, as there, the applicable limitation is that of the state. There the state determination was that the 10 year statute applied; here the state determination is that the two year statute controls. * * *"

Also pertinent is Judge Lindley's discussion in Sun Theatre Corp. v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 7 Cir., 1954 [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,722], 213 F. 2d 284 at pages 287, 288.

the United States Supreme Court in affirming the judgment of the Circuit Court stated:

> "* * * Although the decision is appealed from, as this question involves the construction of local law we cannot but attribute weight to the opinion of the judge who rendered the judgment, in view of his experience upon the Supreme Court of Tennessee. And although doubts were raised by the argument, we have come to agree with his interpretation in the main." Chattanooga Foundry and Pipe Works v. City of Atlanta, 203 U. S. 390, 398.

It seems clear, therefore, that the Chattanooga case is at best dubious authority for the inelastic non-penal approach adopted by some of the courts which have been confronted with the statute of limitations problem.

In other cases cited in the Leonia opinion in which a non-penal characterization had been adopted, the courts were guided in their determination by analogous state court statute of limitations decisions.[4]

Nevertheless, the court in the Leonia case concluded that a treble damage action, while providing for "exemplary damages," is not in its nature and substance a penal action. Turning to New York authorities, the court concluded that such an action for "exemplary damages" would fall within Section 48, subdivision 2 of the New York Civil Practice Act. The following cases are cited as authority for this proposition:

1. Layton v. McConnell, 61 App. Div. 447 (2nd Dept. 1909).

This was an action under Section 654 of the Penal Code to recover treble damages for injury to property. Plaintiffs had judgment. On appeal, defendants urged as a basis for reversal that the action was for a penalty and that plaintiffs had failed to comply with Section 1897 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provided that:

> "In an action to recover a penalty or forfeiture, given by a statute, if a copy of the complaint is not delivered to the defendant with a copy of the summons, a general reference to the statute must be indorsed upon the copy of the summons so delivered."

The Appellate Division held that Section 1897 did not apply to actions for treble damages brought under Section 654 of the Penal Code. Since the Layton decision did not involve a statute of limitations question but involved solely the sufficiency of an indorsement on a summons, it is of dubious authority for the position adopted by the court in the Leonia case.

2. Syfert v. Lenett Realty Corp., 124 Misc. 871 (Sup. Ct. Kings Co. 1925).

The case likewise did not concern a statute of limitations question but rather involved a motion for change of venue of a treble damage action for forceable entry or detainer. The court in holding that the action was not one "to recover a penalty or forfeiture imposed by statute" within the meaning of Section 184, subdivision 1, of the New York Civil Practice Act, expressly and without discussion relied upon Layton v. McConnell, supra.

3. DiBitetto v. Sussman, 279 App. Div. 1033 (2nd Dept. 1952).

The question there involved was whether summary judgment would lie in an action for treble damages for overcharge of rent under the Federal Rent Control Law. Rule 113, subdivision 3 of the New York Rules of Civil Practice authorizes the granting of summary relief in an action "On a statute where the sum sought to be recovered is a sum of money other than a penalty." The court, referring to several federal decisions which it apparently regarded as definitive, concluded that the action was not one for a penalty within the meaning of Rule 113, subdivision 3. Here, again, a statute of limitations question was not involved. Furthermore, the greater weight of federal authority in regard to a treble damage action under the antitrust law supports a penal characterization of such an action.

The only other New York authority relied upon in the Leonia case was Cox v. Lykes Bros., 237 N. Y. 376 (1924). There, plaintiff, a seaman, sued to recover additional wages under Section 4529 of the United States Revised Statutes, which read as follows:

> "* * * Every master or owner who refuses or neglects to make payment in the manner hereinbefore mentioned without sufficient cause shall pay to the seaman a sum equal to two days' pay for each and every day during which payment is delayed beyond the respective periods, which sum shall be recoverable as wages in any claim made before the court."

[4] Shelton Electric Co. v. Victor Talking Machine Co., D. C. D. N. J., 1922, 277 Fed. 433; Reid v. Doubleday & Co., Inc., D. C. N. D. Ohio, 1952 [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,428], 109 F. Supp. 354 (action under Robinson-Patman Act).

The question involved was whether the state court had jurisdiction over the action in view of Section 256 of the Judicial Code, which conferred upon the courts of the United States exclusive jurisdiction "of all suits for penalties and forfeitures incurred under the laws of the United States." The New York Court of Appeals in holding that the action was not one for a penalty, stated:

"Congress has expressly said that the extra compensation, when due, 'shall be recoverable as wages.' This would seem decisive, without more, that in determining the bounds of jurisdiction, it is not to be classified as a penalty."

(p. 379) No such express indication of Congressional intent can be found in the language of the treble damage provision of the Clayton Act.

[Leonia Case—Conclusion]

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the disposition of this question in the Leonia case is erroneous for each of the following reasons:

1. It fails to recognize the fact that as to a defendant, for whose protection statutes of limitations exist, the treble damage provisions of the antitrust laws are, both from a historical as well as from a practical viewpoint, penal in nature;

2. It is in conflict with the greater weight of authority which supports a penal characterization of a treble damage action under the antitrust laws;

3. The New York authorities cited do not substantiate Leonia's determination of the applicable New York statute of limitations.

[Bertha Building Corp. Case]

The case of Bertha Building Corporation v. National Theatres Corporation, 2 Cir., decided September 10, 1957, Docket Nos. 24253-4 [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,818], does not impel a contrary conclusion. There, the sole question before the Court of Appeals was whether Judge Galston had erred in determining without a jury that the defendant was amenable to suit in California between July 20, 1935 and July 20, 1938. The parties in the Bertha case conceded the applicability of a six-year statute of limitations in the event that the New York statute was found to be controlling.[5] The reference to Section 48, subdivision 2 of the New York Civil Practice Act appearing on the third page of the Bertha opinion must, it seems to me, be read in connection with the aforementioned concession of the parties and is, therefore, inapplicable to the case at bar.

[Penal Nature of Action—Decisions]

It is persuasive, although, of course, not controlling, that in similar cases arising in the federal district courts of Illinois, Wisconsin and New Jersey, the Circuit Courts in the Seventh Circuit and Third Circuit have reached identical conclusions as to the penal nature of a treble damage action under the Clayton Act: Hoskins Coal & Dock Corp. v. Truax Traer Coal Co., 7 Cir., 1951 [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,925], 191 F. 2d 912, cert. denied 342 U. S. 947; Schiffman Bros., Inc. v. Texas Co., 7 Cir., 1952 [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,270], 196 F. 2d 695; Sun Theatre Corp. v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 7 Cir., 1954 [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,722], 213 F. 2d 284; Grengs v. Twentieth Century Fox Film Corporation, 7 Cir., 1956 [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,318], 232 F. 2d 325; Gordon v. Loew's Incorporated, 3 Cir., 1957 [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,783, 68,820], 247 F. 2d 451.

In Hoskins Coal & Dock Corp. v. Truax Traer Coal Co., 7 Cir., 1951 [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,925], 191 F. 2d 912, cert. denied 342 U. S. 947, Judge Lindley held that the two-year penal limitation statute of the State of Illinois[6] was applicable to a civil antitrust action. In doing so, Judge Lindley observed that:

[5] See Judge Galston's Conclusion of Law "2" appearing at page 290a of "Appendix to Brief for Plaintiffs-Appellants. On Appeal From the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York."

[6] "Ill. Rev. Statutes, Chap. 83, § 15 provides that actions to recover damages for personal injuries, among others, and for 'a statutory penalty * * * shall be commenced within two years * * * after the cause of action accrued.' This provision, defendants assert, is controlling in the present case. On the other hand, plaintiff insists that its action is not one to recover a statutory penalty but one within section 16 of the statute which permits actions on unwritten contracts, 'and all [other] civil actions not otherwise provided for' to be commenced within five years after they accrue." (191 F. 2d at pp. 913-914)

"* * * When 'the object is clearly to inflict a punishment on a party for violating' the statute, it is penal in character, and the circumstance that in punishing, remedy is likewise afforded to those having an interest in the observance of the statute is unimportant. Diversey v. Smith, 103 Ill. 378. The Illinois court has adhered to this interpretation in its consideration of similar statutes in Vestal Company v. Robertson, 277 Ill. 425, 115 N. E. 629 and Gridley v. Barnes, 103 Ill. 211.

"Plaintiff, though conceding that the applicable statute is that of the state, insists that whether a federal cause of action falls within the provisions of a state statute is a question to be decided by the federal courts. Even should we admit arguendo that this is a proper postulate, no solace for plaintiff is to be found in federal decisions involving causes of action such as the one asserted here. Cases referring to such a recovery as 'a penalty' of triple or treble damages include Fleitmann v. Welsbach Street Lighting Co., 240 U. S. 27, 29, 36 S. Ct. 233, 60 L. Ed. 505; Milwaukee Towne Corp. v. Loew's Inc., 7 Cir., 190 F. 2d 561; H. J. Jaeger Research Laboratories v. Radio Corp. of America, 3 Cir., 90 F. 2d 826, 828; Decorative Stone Co. v. Building Trades Council, 2 Cir., 23 F. 2d 426, 427-428, certiorari denied 277 U. S. 594, 48 S. Ct. 530, 72 L. Ed. 1005; Elizabeth Arden Sales Co. v. Gus Blass Co., 8 Cir., 150 F. 2d 988, 996." (191 F. 2d at page 914)

In Schiffman Bros., Inc. v. Texas Co., 7 Cir., 1952 [1952 Trade Cases ¶ 67,270], 196 F. 2d 695, in which a similar result was reached, Judge Lindley stated:

"The word 'penal' is not one of definite specific meaning but has variable connotations depending upon the environment in which it is utilized. That this court has considered the action as in the nature of a penalty, though unimportant in this decision, is apparent from Milwaukee Towne Corp. v. Loew's, Incorporated, 7 Cir., 190 F. 2d 561, 570, wherein, referring to our earlier decision in Bigelow v. R. K. O. Radio Pictures, Inc., 7 Cir., 150 F. 2d 877, 883, we said: '* * * the victim is permitted to use as a yardstick for measuring his damages what he would have gained as a member of or a beneficiary of the conspiracy, and is mandatorily awarded a judgment for three times the amount thus found. Certainly Congress did not intend to impose a further penalty upon the defendants * * *. Two-thirds of the judgment is the penalty imposed by Congress and automatically attaches to the damages found. Bigelow et al. v. R. K. O. Radio Pictures, Inc., 7 Cir., 150 F. 2d 877, 883.' (Italics supplied.) And in H. J. Jaeger Research Laboratories v. Radio Corp., 3 Cir., 90 F. 2d 826, at page 828, the third circuit said: 'The Sherman Act created a new tort damage right for damages actually suffered, but also imposed a statutory trebling penalty.' These comments are, however, as we have said, beside the point in this discussion, for the question now before us, presented to us in no case other than Hoskins, is, we repeat, what is the applicable statute of limitations in Illinois in an action for treble damages and attorneys' fees." (p. 697)

In Sun Theatre Corp. v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 7 Cir., 1954 [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,722], 213 F. 2d 284, Judge Lindley discussed the question of whether a plaintiff could avoid the effect of a penalty statute of limitations by suing only for actual damages and waiving the remaining two-thirds. On page 287 he said:

"The statute is explicit; the only remedy provided therein is 'threefold the damages' sustained. Giving to this language its plain meaning, we think the only permissible interpretation is that the remedy afforded is treble damages, penal in nature and susceptible therefore to all restrictions surrounding an action of such nature. The remedy has been so treated by this court in Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 7 Cir., 150 F. 2d 877, reversed on other grounds 327 U. S. 251, 66 S. Ct. 574, 90 L. Ed. 652, wherein the court said, 150 F. 2d at page 883: 'The amount of this verdict was required by statute to be trebled by the judgment. In this respect neither the jury nor either court had any discretion. The verdict should represent actual damages sustained, and two thirds of the judgment is a penalty which Congress has seen fit to impose * * *.'"

In Grengs v. Twentieth Century Fox Film Corporation, 7 Cir., 1956 [1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,318], 232 F. 2d 325, the Seventh Circuit also held a Wisconsin statute, providing for a two-year limitation based upon a penalty or forfeiture, applicable to a civil antitrust action. The provisions of the Wisconsin Statutes involved were incorporated in the opinion in the following exerpt:

"* * * Defendants claim that § 330.21(1) Wisconsin Statutes 1951 is applicable. It provides a two-year limitation for:

"'An action by a private party upon a statute penalty or forfeiture when the action is given to the party prosecuting therefor and the state, except when the statute imposing it provides a different limitation.'"

Plaintiff claims that § 340.19(4) [This is obviously an error by plaintiff who undoubtedly means § 330.19(4)] of said statutes is applicable. It provides a six-year limitation for:

"'An action upon a liability created by statute when a different limitation is not prescribed by law.'

"Obviously, if the two-year limitation applies, the six-year limitation is inapplicable." (pp. 327-328)

In Gordon v. Loew's Incorporated, 3 Cir., 1957 [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,783, 68,820], 247 F. 2d 451, the Circuit Court was required to determine the New Jersey statute of limitations applicable to a civil antitrust action. The following excerpt from the court's opinion is pertinent:

"The sections of the New Jersey Revised Statutes, N. J. S. A., having possible applicability here as statutes of limitations are as follows:

"'2A:14-1. 6 years

"'Every action at law for trespass to real property, for any tortious injury to real or personal property, for taking, detaining, or converting personal property, for replevin of goods or chattels, for any tortious injury to the rights of another not stated in sections 2A:14-2 and 2A:14-3 of this title, or for recovery upon a contractual claim or liability, express or implied, not under seal, or upon an account other than one which concerns the trade or merchandise between merchant and merchant, their factors, agents and servants, shall be commenced within 6 years next after the cause of any such action shall have accrued.'

"'2A:14-10. 2 years * * *; actions on penal statutes

"'All actions at law brought for any forfeitures upon any penal statute made or to be made, shall be commenced within the periods of time herein prescribed;

* * *

"'b. Within 2 years next after the offense committed or to be committed against the statute, or cause of action accrued, when the benefit of the forfeiture and the action therefor is or shall be limited or given to the party aggrieved;

* * *

"'Where, however, by any statute made or to be made it is provided that any such action is to be brought within a shorter time than that prescribed by this section, such action shall be commenced within the time so provided by that statute.' N. J. S. A. 2A:14-1, 10.

"Upon examining these statutes we observe that the period of limitation applicable to the actions here in question is six years, as provided by section 2A:14-1 unless the plaintiffs' actions for treble damages under section 4 of the Clayton Act are to be regarded as actions brought for a forfeiture upon a penal statute within the meaning of section 2A:14-10, in which case the limitation of two years provided by that section is applicable." (247 F. 2d at pages 454-455)

Relying upon the determination of the Supreme Court of New Jersey in Addiss v. Logan Corp., 1957, 23 N. J. 142, 128 A. 2d 462, the Third Circuit decided that the applicable statute was the two-year statute. The New Jersey decision in the Addiss case involved an action for treble damages brought by a tenant against his landlord under the State Rent Control Act. The Circuit Court in commenting on the Addiss decision said:

"* * * To paraphrase what Justice Burling said in the Addiss case with regard to the State Rent Control Act, the person injured by reason of action forbidden by the antitrust laws recovers the measure of the injury to his business or property and by statutory direction is the recipient of the punitive award. The total recovery is arbitrarily computed; it takes cognizance of the actual loss only as a base. According to the statutory direction the defendant must pay an amount three times that base. This operates as a sanction. True it is largely a wrong to the individual but violations of the antitrust laws also impugn the Congressional purpose of freeing interstate commerce from restraints and monopolies and thus incidentally wrong the public. Indeed the violation of those laws is not only subject to this sanction but is also made a misdemeanor punishable by fine and imprisonment. We think it is clear, in the light of the Addiss opinion, that for the purpose of the application of section 2A:14-10 of the New Jersey Revised Statutes, section 4 of the Clayton Act must be regarded as a penal statute within the purview of that section." (247 F. 2d at pages 456-457)

[Summary]

To Conclude:

1. It appears that there are no authoritative New York decisions which are determinative of this issue. However, there is evidence that certain New York courts in decisions dealing with federal statutes have, in fact, resorted to federal determinations for guidance purposes.

2. The weight of authorities in federal decisions and in federal expressions of characterization require the choice of the penalty limitations statute of Section 49, subdivision 3 of the New York Civil Practice Act.

3. Realistic considerations of the nature and impact upon the defendants of the treble damage clause of Section 15, Title 15 U. S. C. A., persuades this court to sustain the three-year statute.

Accordingly, I find that the pertinent statute of limitations in this action is three years pursuant to Section 49, subdivision 3 of the New York Civil Practice Act.

[¶ 68,882] New Home Appliance Center, Inc. v. W. G. Thompson, The Western Corp., doing business as Western Appliance Corp.; W. Dan Bell; William Gibbons; Frances Hammond; William Lujan; Emil Berkowitz; T. E. Braunschweiger; Allied Appliances, Inc.; The Denver Area Better Business Bureau, Inc.; New York Furniture House, Inc.; and The Daniels & Fisher Stores Company.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit. November Term, 1957. No. 5627. Dated November 27, 1957.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Colorado. WILLIAM LEE KNOUS, Chief Judge.

Clayton and Sherman Antitrust Acts

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Necessary Averments to State Cause of Action—Restraint of Interstate Commerce.—Any "horizontal agreement among local competitors or with manufacturers, which has the purpose and effect of fixing or stabilizing prices at local levels, or apportioning territories, or suppressing competition, is illegal per se if interstate commerce is utilized, or if such concerted acts have the effect of restraining the free flow of interstate commerce." In these circumstances, the amount or quantity of interstate commerce is unimportant; it is the nature or the tendency of the agreement which is proscribed. The dismissal of a retailer's complaint alleging that wholesalers, competing retailers, and a business bureau engaged in a conspiracy to deny local retailers free access to the channels of interstate commerce, by preventing them from making interstate purchases and requiring them to purchase their requirements from local wholesalers, on the ground that the complaint did not sufficiently allege facts from which it could be determined as a matter of law that the alleged conspiracy unduly restrained interstate commerce, was reversed. In holding the complaint sufficient, the reviewing court noted that the liberal rules of pleading are applicable to antitrust cases.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.170, 9009.600.

For the appellant: Dayton Denious, Denver, Colo.

For the appellees: John F. Shafroth and George Louis Creamer (W. Clayton Carpenter, Allan R. Phipps, Samuel S. Sherman, Jr., John W. Low, and Philip S. Van Cise on briefs), Denver, Colo.

Reversing a decision of the U. S. District Court, District of Colorado, 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,354.

Before MURRAH, PICKETT and LEWIS, Circuit Judges.

[Dismissal Judgment—Appeal]

MURRAH, Circuit Judge [In full text]: Holding that the complaint in this case, as amended, and as attempted to be amended, did not state a claim under the triple damage provisions of the antitrust acts, the trial court dismissed the complaint, and this appeal is from the judgment of dismissal.

[Complaint]

The complaint, as amended, alleged that at all times complained of, the complainant was a discount retail dealer of brand name electrical applicances in Denver, Colorado, whose profit depended in a large measure upon volume through extensive newspaper advertising; that certain of the defendants were distributors or wholesale dealers through whom the complainant purchased its products for resale; that certain other named defendants were competitive retail dealers in all or some of the brand name products sold by the complainant; that the defendant, Better Business Bureau, was an organization to which all of the defendants belonged except New York Furniture, Inc.; that all the products purchased and sold by the retailer through the wholesalers are manufactured outside the State of Colorado and are shipped interstate to the retailers' stores, thence to the ultimate consumer; that in the course of its business operations, complainant purchases substantial amounts of these products, some of which are shipped direct to it interstate, and some have already come to rest prior to purchase. The complaint then states that the defendants formed a combination or conspiracy, the purpose, object and effect of which was to deny retail appliance dealers in Denver, Colorado free access to the channels of interstate commerce by preventing them from making interstate purchases; and requiring them to purchase their requirements of home appliances from local wholesalers in Colorado, and thus to fix the prices at which such products were to be sold retail by Denver retail dealers; to monopolize interstate commerce in wholesale appliances and to eliminate the complainant as a competitor in such trade.

Specific overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy were set out in the complaint, namely: the refusal of the wholesalers to sell the complainant electrical appliances at the instance of the named retail competitors. It was further alleged that as a part of the same conspiracy, and in furtherance thereof, the defendants, acting in concert obtained agreements with the two daily newspapers in Denver to limit and restrict complainant's advertising by excluding it from the advertising columns for a period of seven weeks, and thereafter requiring complainant to advertise only those items "obtained through regular Denver wholesale channels" at prices and on terms approved by the supplying distributors, and forbidding the complainant to advertise certain brand name products on any terms.

It was further alleged that to accomplish the conspiracy, the Denver Better Business Bureau circulated disparaging matter of the complainant, calculated and intended to cause termination of its financing arrangements; and that it otherwise coordinated the efforts of the defendants in excluding and restricting the complainant's access to the advertising media in Denver. It was specifically alleged that by such concerted action, the defendants had restrained and monopolized a substantial part of interstate commerce by eliminating the plaintiff's competition and raising prices for home appliances to consumers in Denver and vicinity. Then followed specific allegations showing business losses to the complainant for the years involved.

[Trial Court Rulings]

After dismissal of the amended complaint, the complainant tendered further amendments tending to show in more specific detail the manner in which the acts complained of affected interstate commerce with resulting damages to the complainant. These tendered amendments were denied on the grounds that they added nothing to the validity of the complaint.

Basing its judgment squarely on Fedderson Motors v. Ward [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,579], 180 F. 2d 519; and Shotkin v. General Electric Co. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,341], 171 F. 2d 236, the trial court concluded that the complaint did not sufficiently allege facts from which it could be determined as a matter of law that the alleged conspiracy unduly restrained interstate commerce with requisite harmful effect to the public interest; that the complaint failed to allege with sufficient definiteness the volume of interstate trade, or that complainant's interstate purchases were adversely affected by the defendants' activities. Nor did the court think the defendants' refusal to deal with complainant on a purely local basis had any prohibited effect on interstate commerce as in Mandeville Farms, Inc. v. American Crystal Sugar Co. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,251], 334 U. S. 219. And see Spears Free Clinic and Hospital v. Cleere [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,276], 197 F. 2d 125.

[Sufficiency of Complaint]

At the outset, it seems appropriate to say that nothing in either the Shotkin or Fedderson cases was intended to suggest that a special form of pleading is indicated or sanctioned in antitrust cases. Indeed, the liberal rules of pleading are as applicable to these cases as any other case. Under these rules, it is not the office of a complaint to plead detailed facts or state particular theories for recovery. It is sufficient, and indeed all that is permissible, if the complaint concisely states facts upon which relief can be granted upon any legally sustainable basis. Only a generalized statement of the facts from which the defendant may form a responsive pleading is necessary or permissible; and "where a bona fide complaint is filed that charges every element necessary to recover, summary dismissal of a civil case for failure to set out evidential facts can seldom be justified. If a party needs more facts, it has a right to call for them under Rule 12(e) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure." And, the free use of summary judgment is available to avoid expensive trials of frivolous claims. See United States v. Employing Plasterers Assn. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,692], 347 U. S. 186. See also Package Closure Corp. v. Sealright Co. [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,227], 141 F. 2d 972; Nagler v. Admiral Corp. (2 CA) decided Oct. 2, 1957 [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,839], — F. 2d —; Clark "Special Pleading in the 'Big Case' ", —F. R. D. —.

We also know from experience that motions to make more definite and certain, or for a bill of particulars under Rule 12(e), tend only to promote verbiage. Particularization of the issues is indeed the first order of business. But the Rules do not contemplate their definition by paper pleadings. They are to be ascertained and articulated by the free use of controlled pre-trial discovery under the guiding hand of the judge who has the responsibility for the trial of the case. See "Procedure In Antitrust and Other Protracted Cases", a Report adopted by the Judicial Conference of the United States on September 26, 1951. Ultimately the issues, when defined by discovery and pre-trial conference, are embodied in a pre-trial order in which the factual and legal issues are defined and the plan for trial delineated, i.e. Clark "Special Pleading in the 'Big Case' ", supra. Adherence to and utilization of these simple rules will undoubtedly result in a more expeditious and creditable disposition of this type of litigation. The Shotkin and Feddersen cases must be considered in the light of these fundamental precedural concepts.

[Cases Distinguished]

The complainant in the Shotkin case, who was also a retail dealer in electrical appliances, sued certain manufacturers and retail dealers, charging a conspiracy in restraint of trade. There was a charge of price fixing with injury to the public. But, looking at the whole complaint, drawn pro se, we concluded that it stated only a personal grievance "based solely and exclusively upon the declination" of the manufacturer to do business with the complainant "as an outlet for its manufactured merchandise with no evil consequences to the consuming public." The defect there was not that the complaint did not state enough, but that the substance of what it did state was legally insufficient on which to grant relief on any accepted theory.

Feddersen Motors v. Ward, supra, followed the same pattern of the Shotkin case. There, a retail dealer complained of a conspiracy on the part of the manufacturer and a retail dealer to exclude him from the interstate market and to fix prices. But the court, looking at the agency contract, was able to conclude that the substance of the complaint was a permissible declination on the part of the manufacturer to further deal with his agent in a prescribed territory.

[Interstate Commerce]

It is of course true without dispute that a manufacturer is free to make vertical agreements with local agents and dealers for the sale of his wares or products in a given territory for a stated price; and, he is also free as far as the antitrust laws are concerned, to discontinue his relations with any dealer so long as his conduct is not conceived in monopolistic purpose or market control. See Paramount Film Distributing Corp. v. Village Theatre [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,239], 228 F. 2d 72; and cases cited.

But, any horizontal agreement among local competitors or with manufacturers, which has the purpose and effect of fixing or stabilizing prices at local levels, or apportioning territories, or suppressing competition, is illegal per se if interstate commerce is utilized, or if such concerted acts have the effect of restraining the free flow of interstate commerce. See Moore v. Mead's Fine Bread Co. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,906], 348 U. S. 115; United States v. Frankfort Distilleries [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,338], 324 U. S. 293; United States v. McKesson & Robbins [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,308], 351 U. S. 305. In these circumstances, the amount or quantity of interstate commerce is unimportant, it is the nature or the tendency of the agreement which the act proscribes. Gamco, Inc. v. Providence Fruit & Produce Bldg. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,219], 194 F. 2d 484; United States v. McKesson & Robbins, supra.

[Reversed]

Judged by these standards, we think the complaint stated a claim upon which relief can be granted under the antitrust laws. The judgment is reversed.

[¶ 68,883] Charles Walder, et al. v. Paramount Publix Corporation, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil 69-217. Filed September 30, 1957.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Defenses—Statutes of Limitations—When Cause of Action Accrues—Tolling of Statutes of Limitations—Pendency of Government Antitrust Action.—Defendants' motion for a summary judgment on the ground that the claims asserted on behalf of a theatre operating company were barred either by the Florida or New York statutes of limitations was denied. The defendants asserted that all of the company's claims accrued prior to a specified date, and that the running of the applicable statute of limitations was not tolled by the pendency of a Government antitrust action. There was no indication that all of the alleged illegal acts which adversely affected the company occurred prior to the specified date. Also, the instant action involved matters based in whole or in part on the matters complained of by the Government in its antitrust action; therefore, the running of the applicable statute of limitations was tolled during the pendency of the Government action. On the present state of the record, there was no basis for granting the defendants' motion.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9010.200, 9010.275.

For the plaintiffs: Claudia Pearlman (Edgar A. Buttle, of counsel), New York, N. Y.

For the defendants: Louis Phillips for Paramount Pictures Inc. (In Dissolution), Paramount Pictures Corp., and Paramount Film Distributing Corp.; J. Miller Walker for RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.; Robert W. Perkins for Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Corp.; Herbert B. Lazarus for American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, Inc.; Dwight, Royall, Harris, Koegel & Caskey for Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. (In Dissolution); Schwartz & Frohlich for Columbia Pictures Corp.; and E. Compton Timberlake, of counsel for all defendants; all of New York, N. Y.

For prior opinions of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, see 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,650; 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,572 and 68,275; and 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,170 and 68,097.

[Motion for Summary Judgment]

DAWSON, District Judge [In full text]: This is a motion by the defendants for a summary judgment dismissing so much of this action as is brought on behalf of Tivoli Operating Corporation, on the ground that any claims asserted on behalf of Tivoli Operating Corporation are barred either by the Florida or New York statute of limitations.

[Nature of Action]

The action is one for treble damages and injunctive relief for alleged violations of the anti-trust laws in connection with the distribution and allotment of films for exhibition at the Tivoli Theatre in Miami, Florida.

For an analysis of the parties to the action and the contentions of the various parties reference should be made to the opinion of Judge Weinfeld reported in [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,097], 132 F. Supp. 912 (S. D. N. Y. 1955). That opinion was rendered upon a motion for summary judgment made by the defendants in this action. So far as the action involves claims on behalf of the Tivoli Operating Corporation Judge Weinfeld said:

"Likewise, with respect to Operating, a cause of action appears to have been stated. It is true that the complaint admits that Operating was able to obtain desirable runs on a competitive basis, after it had issued 50% of its stock to the defendant Paramount, and as a consequence the conspiracy in this regard had no further impact upon it. But there is no suggestion that Operating was not adversely affected by the other illegal acts complained of in paragraph sixty-five of the complaint, or any of them. Moreover, the gravamen of the complaint, insofar as Operating is concerned, appears to be that by reason of the conspiracy it was coerced into surrendering half of its stock and a larger share of its profits to one or more of the defendants. These allegations are sufficient to state a claim upon which relief can be granted." 132 F. Supp. at 920.

[Statute of Limitations]

Now the defendants urge that even if the allegations of Tivoli Operating Corporation do state claims upon which relief may be granted the claims are barred by the statute of limitations. The bases of this contention are (1) that all the claims asserted on behalf of Tivoli Operating Corporation accrued prior to September 4, 1945, and (2) that the running of the statute of limitations is not tolled by the pendency of the Paramount case. United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,470], 66 F. Supp. 323 (S. D. N. Y. 1946); [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,526], 70 F. Supp. 53 (S. D. N. Y. 1946), reversed and remanded in part, [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,244], 334 U. S. 131 (1948); [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,473], 85 F. Supp. 881 (S. D. N. Y. 1949), aff'd, 339 U. S. 974 (1950).

[Prior Proceedings]

It appears that this action has heretofore been referred to Judge Leibell for pre-trial pursuant to Rule 16 of the Rules of Civil Procedure. One purpose of a pre-trial is to simplify the issues. This motion should have been brought on before Judge Leibell, but it appears that counsel for plaintiff refused to have the matter referred to him. So we have a situation where the issues in the case have been exhaustively studied by Judge Weinfeld (on motions brought on before him) and then by Judge Leibell (in pre-trial proceedings) and thereafter this motion is brought on before a third judge, perhaps in the hope that he will reach conclusions different from those judges who have previously considered the matter. If any such hope exists it will be vain, for I will consider the determinations previously made to state the law of the case which I should follow.

[Accrual of Claims]

On the question as to whether all the claims asserted by the plaintiffs accrued prior to September 4, 1945, I would point out that Judge Weinfeld has previously held that "there is no suggestion that Operating was not adversely affected by the other illegal acts complained of in paragraph sixty-five of the complaint, or any of them." There is no indication that all these acts occurred prior to September 4, 1945; in fact, quite the contrary would appear from the complaint.

[Tolling of Statute of Limitations]

Furthermore, § 5 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. A. § 16, provides for the running of the statute of limitations in private actions for triple damages during the pendency of an anti-trust case when the action is based "in whole or in part" on "any matter" complained of in the Government's anti-trust suit. The defendants properly state in their brief (p. 24): "The precise question presented here is whether Tivoli Operating Corporation's actual claim is based in whole or in part on any matter complained of by the Government in the Paramount case"; and they further contend, "Moreover, the words 'complained of' cannot be considered in a vacuum but only in the light of the actual complaint made by Tivoli Operating Corporation and the actual matters complained of by the Government in the Paramount case."

Defendants urge that the only claims asserted by Operating relate to dividends and management fees. Plaintiffs deny that these are the only issues, and the language of Judge Weinfeld, previously quoted, would indicate that he found the issues to be not so limited. The complaint claims in paragraph eighty-five that the injuries suffered by the plaintiffs covered a period from January 1, 1937 to May 24, 1947. Whether these claims can be sustained at the trial is not now before this Court. If issues of fact are presented these issues must be determined at the trial.

The defendants also urge that the matters complained of by Tivoli Operating Corporation are not based in whole or in part on any matter complained of in the Paramount case. Whether this is true or not must depend upon what matters are complained of by Tivoli. Certainly the acts complained of in paragraph sixty-five were specifically based on the complaint in United States v. Paramount; and paragraph sixty-six of the complaint states that the same illegal practices are complained of in the instant action.

Judge Weinfeld has heretofore said, in his previous opinion in this case:

> "In substance the plaintiffs claim that from 1928 to date the defendants, who are motion picture distributors, conspired among themselves and with Paramount Enterprises, Inc., an exhibitor operating in Miami, to prevent the Tivoli Theatre from exhibiting pictures on a 'first run' and from obtaining subsequent runs on a competitive basis; that this conspiratorial action coerced the individual plaintiffs into agreeing to the formation of Operating, in which Paramount Enterprises, Inc. received a 50% stock interest, and the plaintiff Walwal the other 50%; further that in 1937 Walwal as owner and Tivoli as lessee or operator of the Tivoli Theatre, and the individual plaintiffs as stockholders of the two corporations, were coerced into substituting Operating as lessee in place and stead of Tivoli; that plaintiffs were further coerced into surrendering to several of the co-conspirators over half the proceeds of the theatre during the period when Operating was the lessee. The complaint incorporates by reference the decrees entered against the defendants in United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc." 132 F. Supp. at 915.

This analysis of the case would indicate that the action involves matters based in whole or in part on matters complained of by the Government in the Paramount case; and under such circumstances the running of the statute of limitations was tolled during the pendency of that case and therefore there is no basis for granting the motion for summary judgment.

[Pre-Trial Proceedings]

This is the type of action where formal pre-trial proceedings for the simplification of the issues would be eminently desirable. The complaint is a hodgepodge of accusations. How many of the accusations constitute issues which will have to be tried and how many are inserted merely for atmosphere cannot be decided on the face of the pleading. Any attempt to secure a limitation of issues by motions addressed to the complaint would seem to be regarded with disfavor in some circles.* However, formal pre-trial proceedings can do much to achieve a proper resolution of the issues in dispute. See "The Lost Horizon in Pleading under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure," by Hon. James Alger Fee, 48 Colum. L. Rev. 491 (1948). We must recognize, however, that even this procedural device will break down if one side is given the opportunity, as it was in the instant action, to bring the pre-trial proceedings to a halt by refusing to continue before a particular judge.

[Motion Denied]

It may be that if pre-trial proceedings had continued in this action and an order been entered as to the specific issues in dispute, the issues of law raised by the instant motion would then have been susceptible of determination and the time consumed by the trial court in trying the issues would have been appreciably shortened. However, this has not been done and on the present state of the record there would be no basis for granting defendants' motion for summary judgment.

Motion denied. So ordered.

---

* See "Special Pleading in the 'Big Case'" by Hon. Charles E. Clark—Paper Prepared for the Seminar on Protracted Cases held at New York University, August 26-30, 1957.

"Occasionally there is a direction to prune off surplusage, a theoretically sound point of view since these complaints, far from being models, are usually singularly verbose and full of unnecessary conclusions, cliches and counts. . . . But is there time in the Southern District for such pruning and perfectionism when the easier course is just to treat such excesses with silent disdain?"

It may be suggested that it is just this unwillingness to require an early definition of the real issues that results in "little cases" becoming "big cases" from the standpoint of judicial time consumed, and helps to create the "protracted case."

[¶ 68,884] Electric & Musical Industries Limited v. The Honorable Lawrence E. Walsh, United States District Judge for the Southern District of New York.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. October Term, 1957. Docket No. 24837. Argued November 4, 1957. Decided November 13, 1957.

Petition for Writ of Mandamus and Prohibition.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Grand Jury Investigation—Validity of Service of Subpoena on Foreign Corporation—Appealability of Order Denying Motion to Quash Subpoena.—Where a grand jury subpoena duces tecum was served upon a British corporation by delivering a copy to a subsidiary corporation doing business in the Southern District of New York and where the District Court denied a motion to quash the subpoena, the British corporation's petition for a writ commanding the District Court to vacate its order denying the motion and to refrain from asserting jurisdiction in personam over it was denied. The order attacked by the corporation was interlocutory and non-appealable. The "All Writs Statute" (28 U. S. C., Sec. 1651) is to be used only in exceptional cases where abuse of discretion or usurpation of judicial power is "clear and indisputable."

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8021, 8029.930.

For the petitioner: Dwight, Royall, Harris, Koegel & Caskey, New York, N. Y. (John A. Wells, H. Allen Lochner, Justin W. D'Atri, and Herbert C. Earnshaw, of counsel). (Appearing Specially.)

For the respondent: Harry G. Sklarsky, Ralph S. Goodman, and Richard B. O'Donnell, Attorneys, Department of Justice, New York, N. Y.

Denying a petition for a writ commanding the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, to vacate an order of the Court, 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,773.

Before: SWAN, HINCKS and WATERMAN, Circuit Judges.

[Prior Proceedings]

PER CURIAM [In full text]: Petitioner, referred to as EMI, is a British corporation. A subpoena duces tecum to appear before a grand jury was served upon it by delivering a copy to a subsidiary corporation doing business in New York. EMI moved to quash the subpoena. This motion was denied by Judge Walsh by order dated June 27, 1957. The present petition seeks a writ commanding Judge Walsh to vacate his order and to refrain from asserting jurisdiction in personam over petitioner.

[Non-Appealable Order]

The order attacked by the petitioner is interlocutory and non-appealable. Cobbledick v. United States [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,011], 309 U. S. 323. As stated at page 328, whatever right the witness may have requires no further protection than that afforded by the district court "until the witness chooses to disobey and is committed for contempt." The All Writs Statute, 28 U. S. C. A. § 1651, is to be used only in exceptional cases where abuse of discretion or usurpation of judicial power is "clear and indisputable." Bankers Life & Cas. Co. v. Holland [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,626], 346 U. S. 379, 383-4. See also Ex Parte Fahey, 332 U. S. 258, 260; Ward Baking Co. v. Holtzhoff, 2 Cir., 164 F. 2d 34; Massey-Harris-Ferguson, Ltd. v. Boyd, 6 Cir. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,680], 242 F. 2d 800, 803; Comfort Equipment Co. v. Steckler, 7 Cir. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,731], 212 F. 2d 371. The issue is whether the court has usurped and is enforcing a non-existent jurisdiction over the petitioner. This is not so "clear and indisputable" as to require issuance of the writ.

Petition denied.

[¶ 68,885] Youngs Rubber Corp. v. Sirbel Sales Corp.

In the New York Supreme Court, New York County, Special Term, Part III. 138 N. Y. L. J., No. 120, page 4. Dated December 20, 1957.

New York Fair Trade (Feld-Crawford) Act

Fair Trade—Enforcement of Fair Trade Prices—Temporary Injunction—Necessary Proof—Defenses.—On a motion for reargument, a fair trader was granted a temporary fair trade injunction where the defenses asserted by the defendant were incapable of defeating the issuance of the injunction. Previously, a motion for a temporary injunction had been denied where the defendant had claimed to be a wholesaler, and the claimed offending sales had been vigorously denied and not identified except by a statement of a shopper.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3354.34.

On reargument of a decision of the New York Supreme Court, New York County, 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,863.

[Injunction Granted]

STREIT, Justice [In full text]: Plaintiff moves for reargument of its motion for a temporary injunction in this Feld-Crawford action. The occasion for the present application, as stated, was the failure of the defendant to supply the plaintiff at the time of argument with a copy of its opposing affidavit. It clearly appears on the basis of the present submission that the defenses urged are incapable of defeating the motion for temporary injunction. Accordingly, the motion for reargument is granted and upon such reargument the original motion is likewise granted with bond in the sum or $1,000. Plaintiff is directed to serve and file a note of issue for the next ensuing term. Settle order.

[¶ 68,886] Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers Association, Inc. v. United States [also Maryland Cooperative Milk Producers, Inc. v. United States].

In the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. Nos. 13,893 and 13,894. Decided December 19, 1957.

Appeals from the United States District Court for the District of Columbia. ALEXANDER HOLTZOFF, District Judge.

Case Nos. 1260 and 1259, respectively, in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Grand Jury Proceedings—Production of Documents—Return of Copies of Documents After Dismissal of Criminal Actions—Use of Copies in Civil Action.—During a grand jury proceeding which resulted in the return of indictments against an association, the Government obtained and copied thousands of documents from the files of the association. These criminal actions were terminated favorably to the association, and the Government filed a civil suit against the association based on the same transactions as those involved in the indictments. The Government returned to the association the original documents, but it refused to return the copies. The denial of the association's motion to require the Government to return the copies was affirmed. The reviewing court held that the Government may retain the copies of the documents, subject to the following limitation: that it may use in the trial of the pending civil action, or in the trial of any future civil action against the association, only such of the documents, of which it has retained copies, as it could obtain through discovery processes applicable to civil actions.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8021.750, 8225.590.

For the appellant: Daniel J. Freed, with whom William J. Hughes, Jr., Herbert A. Bergson, and Daniel H. Margolis were on the brief.

For the appellee: Henry Geller, Attorney, Department of Justice, with whom Daniel M. Friedman, Attorney, Department of Justice, was on the brief.

Affirming, as modified, an order of the U. S. District Court, District of Columbia, 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,701; for prior opinions of the Court, see 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,518 and 68,517.

Before WILBUR K. MILLER, FAHY and DANAHER, Circuit Judges.

[Copies of Documents]

PER CURIAM [In full text]: During the grand jury proceedings which preceded these criminal cases, the United States obtained and copied thousands of documents from the files of the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers Association. After the cases had terminated favorably to the Association, the Government returned to it the original documents but refused to return the copies, claiming them as its own property and saying it will or possibly may rely upon some of them in the trial of a civil action now pending in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia (Civil Action No. 4482-56, United States v. Maryland and Va. Milk Producers Ass'n Inc.)

The Association moved the District Court to require the return of the copies. The motion was denied, [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,701] 151 F. Supp. 438 (1957), the trial judge holding that, as the documents could be reached by the Government through discovery process in the civil action, it would be vain to order the copies delivered to the Association. This appeal is from the denial of the motion.

[Limitations Imposed]

We hold the United States may retain the copies of the documents in question, subject to the following limitations:

1. That it may use in the trial of the pending civil action only such of the documents, of which it has retained copies, as it could obtain through discovery processes applicable to civil actions, and only such as are enumerated by it as those upon which it will or possibly may rely, in a list to be served upon the Association on or before March 10, 1958, and in no event less than 60 days prior to the commencement of such trial;

2. That the United States may use in the trial of any future civil action against the Association only such of the documents, of which it has retained copies, as it could obtain through discovery processes available to civil actions and only such as are enumerated by it as those upon which it will or possibly may rely, in a list to be served upon the Association not less than 60 days prior to the commencement of the trial of any such future civil action;

3. That in the lists the documents intended to be relied upon shall be described and referred to by the identification numbers placed thereon by the Association at the time of their submission.

[Order Modified]

The order appealed from should be modified to include the foregoing provisions.

Affirmed as modified.

[¶ 68,887] Bernard Fein, Harry B. Leslie and Warren S. Schoenthaler, individually and as directors of Security Banknote Company v. Security Banknote Company, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil 126-6. Filed December 16, 1957.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Who May Bring Suit—Directors of Corporation.—Plaintiffs, either as directors of a corporation or individually, were not proper parties to bring an action to enjoin their corporation from commingling the assets of a competitor which the corporation had allegedly acquired in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act. There was no authority sustaining the institution of such an action by directors under Section 16 of the Clayton Act, and, while a New York corporation law apparently authorizes the bringing of a "directors' derivative action" in certain cases, such a cause of action will not be engrafted upon an exclusively federal right of action provided for under Section 16 of the Clayton Act. It appeared from papers outside the complaint that the plaintiffs were stockholders of the corporation, and the plaintiffs were granted leave to file an amended complaint.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9020.

For the plaintiffs: Stroock & Stroock & Lavan (Morton L. Deitch, Milton N. Scofield, David Lubart, E. Millimet, and Roger S. Kuhn, of counsel), New York, N. Y.

For the defendants: Dwight, Royall, Harris, Koegel & Caskey (John A. Wells, H. Allen Lochner, Justin W. D'Atri, and Herbert C. Earnshaw, of counsel), New York, N. Y.; and Crowell & Leibman (Morris I. Leibman and Donald S. Macleod, of counsel), Chicago, Ill., for Security Banknote Co., James A. Austin, George W. Goldsworthy, Jr., Oswald Maland, Charles H. Sulzberger, William P. Hunt, and Charles R. Koerwer, Jr., Duke and Landis (David B. Landis and Herbert A. Harris, of counsel), New York, N. Y., for Columbian Bank Note Co.

For a prior opinion of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, see 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,858.

Memorandum

[Capacity to Sue]

LEVET, District Judge [In full text]: Certain of the defendants have moved for orders pursuant to Rule 12(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure dismissing the complaint herein for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted on the grounds that:

"a) plaintiffs, as individuals and directors of defendant Security Banknote Company, are not proper parties to maintain the action and have no capacity to sue; and

"b) plaintiffs are not entitled to maintain an action for the relief they seek."

[Clayton Act]

Defendants' claim that plaintiffs lack capacity to sue would appear to be well founded. This action is one for an injunction and certain other relief. Jurisdiction is allegedly conferred upon the court by section 16 of the Clayton Act, 15 USCA § 26, which is as follows:

"§ 26. Injunctive relief for private parties; exception

"Any person, firm, corporation, or association shall be entitled to sue for and have injunctive relief, in any court of the United States having jurisdiction over the parties, against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws, including sections 13, 14, 18, and 19 of this title, when and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity, under the rules governing such proceedings, and upon the execution of proper bond against damages for an injunction improvidently granted and a showing that the danger of irreparable loss or damage is immediate, a preliminary injunction may issue: Provided, That nothing contained in sections 12, 13, 14-21, 22-27 of this title shall be construed to entitle any person, firm, corporation, or association, except the United States, to bring suit in equity for injunctive relief against any common carrier subject to the provisions of chapters 1 and 8 of Title 49, in respect of any matter subject to the regulation, supervision, or other jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission."

The plaintiffs have brought this action individually and as directors of Security Banknote Company. No authority sustaining the institution of such action by directors under Title 15 USCA § 26 has been cited by the plaintiffs. The court has found none. No basis therefor appears.

[New York Corporation Law]

Even though relief by way of preliminary injunction under Section 16 of the Clayton Act has been denied plaintiffs and their claim for a permanent injunction is at best colorable, plaintiffs contend that they are proper parties to maintain this action. This right, they assert, is grounded upon Sections 60 and 61 of the New York General Corporation Law. Section 60 is in part as follows:

"§ 60. Action against officers of corporation for misconduct.

"An action may be brought against one or more of the directors or officers of a corporation to procure judgment for the following relief or any part thereof:

"1. To compel the defendants to account for their official conduct, including any neglect of or failure to perform their duties, in the management and disposition of the funds and property, committed to their charge.

"2. To compel them to pay to the corporation, or to its creditors, any money and the value of any property, which they have acquired to themselves, or transferred to others, or lost, or wasted, by or through any neglect of or failure to perform or other violation of their duties.

. . .

"5. To set aside a transfer of property, made by one or more directors or officers of a corporation, contrary to a provision of law, where the transferee knew the purpose of the transfer.

"6. To enjoin such a transfer where there is good reason to apprehend that it will be made."

Section 61 is as follows:

"§ 61. Who may bring such action

"An action may be brought for the relief prescribed in the last section [Section 60] by the attorney-general in behalf of the people of the state, or except for the relief specified in the third and fourth subdivisions, by the corporation or a creditor, receiver or trustee in bankruptcy thereof, or by a director or officer of the corporation.

"Upon the application of either party the court shall make an order directing the trial by jury of the issue of negligence, and for that purpose the questions to be tried must be prepared and settled as prescribed in section four hundred and twenty-nine of the civil practice act."

While Section 61 apparently authorizes the bringing of what we might term "directors' derivative actions" in certain cases —at least, in the New York court and in federal courts when diversity of citizenship exists—this, in my opinion, is insufficient under the circumstances of this case to permit such a cause of action to be engrafted upon an exclusively federal right of suit provided for under Title 15 USCA § 26.

[Stockholders]

It appears from papers outside the complaint but not from the complaint itself that all the plaintiffs are stockholders of Security Banknote Company. On the argument of this motion, plaintiffs' counsel conceded that the reason plaintiffs were bringing this action as a directors' rather than a stockholder's derivative action was to avoid furnishing security for costs under Section 61-b of the New York General Corporation Law. Whether or not this would be a circumvention of the security for costs requirements is not the issue here. The fact is that plaintiffs either as directors or individually are not proper parties to bring an action under Title 15 USCA § 26.

[Motion Granted]

Since this is not a diversity of citizenship case there is no other valid basis for any of the relief requested by these plaintiffs in this court. Therefore, the present complaint by these plaintiffs in the capacities under which they have sued herein must fall in its entirety.

Accordingly, defendants' motions to strike the complaint are granted with leave, however, to plaintiffs to serve an amended complaint within ten days from the date of entry hereof.

So ordered.

[¶ 68,888] Safeway Stores, Incorporated v. Oklahoma Retail Grocers Association, Inc., and Louie J. Speed, Inc.

In the Supreme Court of the State of Oklahoma. No. 37326. Filed December 24, 1957.

Appeal from the District Court of Oklahoma County, Oklahoma. Hon. F. B. H. Spellman, Assigned Judge.

Oklahoma Unfair Sales Act

Sales Below Cost Under State Acts—Sales Below Cost—Meeting Competition—Good Faith—Legality of Competitor's Prices.—A retail grocery chain violated the Oklahoma Unfair Sales Act when it sold groceries at prices below the minimum statutory cost to meet the alleged reduced prices of competitors who were giving trading stamps with the purchase of groceries. The chain could not justify its price cutting by asserting that, under the Act, it had the right, in good faith, to meet the prices of its competitors, and, therefore, it could reduce its prices to the extent of the value of the trading stamps issued by its competitors. The chain admittedly did not, in good faith, set the prices of its groceries on the basis of its competitors' prices, which it in good faith believed to be legal prices under the Act, but, on the contrary, it set illegal prices for the sole purpose of meeting prices of its competitors which it thought to be illegal. Alleged wrongful acts of competitors cannot justify the chain's price cutting, and the chain should have sought injunctive relief against the competitors' acts. Under the Act, the appropriate remedy was by injunction and not by retaliation or retaliatory action.

See Sales Below Cost, Vol. 2, ¶ 7151, 7161, 7263.

Sales Below Cost Under State Acts—Giving of Trading Stamps—Double Stamps—Legality.—The giving of trading stamps, valued at approximately 2.5 per cent of the sale price of merchandise, in the usual manner with merchandise sold at the statutory minimum price, does not constitute a disguised form of price cutting in violation of the Oklahoma sales below cost law. A trial court did not err in refusing to issue an injunction to force a retailer, who was giving single trading stamps in the usual manner and in accordance with a court order enjoining him from giving double stamps, to price his merchandise at the statutory markup plus the value of the single trading stamps issued in the usual manner to consumers. The giving of such stamps does not constitute a price cut or unfair competition; trading stamps merely constitute a discount for cash.

See Sales Below Cost, Vol. 2, ¶ 7201.

Sales Below Cost Under State Acts—Oklahoma Unfair Sales Act—Constitutionality.—The Oklahoma Supreme Court found it unnecessary, in view of a prior ruling of the Court, to consider the contention that the Oklahoma Unfair Sales Act is violative of certain provisions of the Oklahoma Constitution and the United States Constitution.

See Sales Below Cost, Vol. 2, ¶ 7111.38.

Sales Below Cost Under State Acts—Enforcement of Laws—Who May Bring Suit—Trade Association.—"Since actions for injunctions may be filed by a trade association for the benefit of all its members, the practice of resorting to the same practices to meet competition is materially reduced, for the natural restraint against suing a competitor is less present in the seeking of immediate relief against threatened piratical price wars."

See Sales Below Cost, Vol. 2, ¶ 7241.

For the plaintiff in error: Embry, Crowe, Tolbert, Boxley & Johnson; V. P. Crowe; and John W. Swinford, all of Oklahoma City, Okla. Drummond Wolde and R. J. Van Gemert, Oakland, Cal., of counsel.

For the defendants in error: Miskovsky and Miskovsky, William J. Holloway, and Looney, Watts, Looney and Nichols, Oklahoma City, Okla.; and Samuel M. Lane, New York, N. Y.

Affirming a decision of the Oklahoma District Court, Oklahoma County, 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,195.

Syllabus

1. The Oklahoma Unfair Sales (Practices) Act, 15 O. S. 1951, Sec. 598.1, et seq., provides a remedy by injunction against repetitive violations thereof, and the availability of the injunctive remedy and that of interlocutory decrees based on actions therefor precludes competitors from immediately indulging in, or resorting to, the same practices themselves violative of the Unfair Practices Act governing merchandising; and, where a corporation operating a chain of grocery stores, admittedly cut prices of its merchandise below the statutory minimum cost violative of the Unfair Sales (Practices) Act, in order to meet what it thought was illegal, or below cost prices of its competitors, it thereby became amenable to the injunctive action of the trial court against such corporation, as shown in this opinion, was proper and timely.

2. Single trading stamps given by a grocer in the usual and customary manner, of the value of 2.5 percent of the cost of the merchandise, and which were redeemable by cash or merchandise, constituted a device for giving a discount for cash, and the giving of such stamps with commodities sold at minimum prices under the Unfair Sales (Practices) Act, did not constitute a violation of the Act, and the trial court's refusal of injunctive restraint against giving such stamps was not error.

[Appeal]

Action by Oklahoma Retail Grocers Association against Safeway Stores to enjoin it from selling merchandise below statutory minimum cost in violation of Unfair Sales Act, and wherein Safeway by cross-petition made Louie J. Speed, Inc., a corporation, and others defendant, and sought to have them enjoined from giving trading stamps to their customers allegedly in violation of the Unfair Sales (Practices) Act. From a judgment permanently enjoining Safeway from selling merchandise below statutory minimum cost and refusing to enjoin Speed from issuing trading stamps to his customers in the usual manner as cash discounts, Safeway appeals. Affirmed.

[Nature of Action]

JOHNSON, Justice [In full text]: This is an action brought by Oklahoma Retail Grocers Association, Inc., a corporation against Safeway Stores, Incorporated, a foreign corporation, to enjoin it from selling groceries below cost in violation of the Oklahoma Unfair Sales Act, 15 O. S. 1951, Sec. 598.1-598.11.

[Cross-Petition]

The Safeway Company by cross-petition made Louie J. Speed, Inc., a corporation, and other grocers parties defendant. Safeway in its cross-petition asked for injunctive relief against Speed, et al., alleging that they, as its competitors, had violated the Unfair Sales Act.

[Defense]

Safeway in its answer admitted selling groceries below minimum statutory cost, but denied that its advertisement, offer for sale, or sale of the alleged articles, was in violation of the Oklahoma Unfair Sales Act, and alleged that its prices were made in good faith to meet the prices of its competitors who were, on the dates complained of, selling the same articles or products of comparable quality at such prices, or below minimum cost by giving trading stamps in violation of the Unfair Sales Act.

[Trial Court Ruling]

In the trial of the case Speed admitted that it issued single trading stamps to its customers on all purchases of groceries, and on certain days that it issued double stamps, and that sales below the statutory cost were accomplished by use of even the single stamps, but contended that the stamps were in the nature of a cash discount and not violative of the Unfair Sales Act.

The court issued a permanent injunction against Safeway prohibiting it from advertising, offering for sale or selling merchandise below the minimum prices as fixed by the Oklahoma Unfair Sales Act.

As to Speed, the court found that the giving of stamps in accordance with the trading stamp contract was in the nature of a cash discount and not in violation of the Unfair Sales Act, but made permanent the injunction restraining Speed from issuing or giving double stamps to its customers with purchases of merchandise.

Safeway and the Retail Grocers Association and, by agreement, Speed, were the only parties involved in the trial, and Safeway alone appeals.

[Constitutional Issue]

Safeway contends that the Unfair Sales Act is violative of certain provisions of the Oklahoma Constitution and the Constitution of the United States. However, the constitutionality of the Unfair Sales Act as amended, after Englebrecht v. Day et al. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,393], 201 Okl. 585, 208 P. 2d 538, was upheld in Adwon v. Oklahoma Retail Grocers Association, Inc. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,791], 204 Okl. 199, 228 P. 2d 376. Therefore, the constitutional questions herein raised, being substantially the same as in the Adwon case, supra, we deem it unnecessary to consider the issue of the constitutionality of the Unfair Sales Act in the instant case.

[Cases—Other Jurisdictions]

Many cases from other jurisdictions and authorities have been cited and quoted from by all parties involved in this lawsuit. But a study of them clearly indicates a large variety of statutes, differing materially from ours in concept, if not in purpose, to such an extent that we deem it unnecessary to refer to all such cases herein by citing and considering them.

[Interpretation of Oklahoma Act]

We are concerned herein only in the interpretation and application of Oklahoma's Unfair Sales Act as applied to the particular facts in this case. See 15 O. S. 1951. Sec. 598.1, et seq., Laws of 1949, p. 103, Sec. 1, et seq. We must construe and interpret the Unfair Sales Act so as to give it practical meaning and effect within the legislative intent. However, until a proper factual case is presented which requires a clear determination and offers a practical situation in which all the conflicting problems and considerations of the area involved are [present,] this court will refrain from theorizing. This is particularly true in cases involving the field of economic regulation. The eventual goal of any interpretation must be viewed in the practical situation existing in the field to be regulated.

[Meeting Competition]

Safeway contends that it was not and is not amenable to injunctive restraint from admittedly selling merchandise below the statutory cost under the Unfair Sales Act, 15 O. S. 1951, Sec. 598.3, because under Sec. 598.7 of the Act it had the right to advertise, offer to sell, or sell merchandise at a price made in good faith to meet the price of a competitor who was selling the same article or products of comparable quality at cost to it as a retailer. It seeks to justify its price cutting action on the ground that when its competitors gave trading stamps, cash register receipts or things of like nature of such value with their sales of merchandise, which in effect reduced the price of their merchandise below minimum cost, that that constituted sales below cost or price cutting in violation of the Unfair Sales Act, and that it had a right to meet such competition by reducing its prices to the extent of the value of the trading stamps.

[Good Faith]

In other words, Safeway contends that its action was justifiable because of the alleged wrongful acts of its competitors, and that its actions in the premises constituted "good faith" in accord with Sec. 598.7, which exempted it from the injunctive provisions of Sec. 598.5 of the Unfair Sales Act. We do not agree.

In this connection our attention has been called to the recent case (10-4-57) of State v. Wolkoff, (Minn.) [1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,826] 85 N. W. 2nd 401, wherein it was held that "(I)f a merchant in good faith sets the price of an article on the basis of a competitor's price, which price he in good faith believes to be a legal one, there is no violation," which clearly is not the case herein. In the instant case, Safeway obviously and admittedly did not, in good faith, set the price of its articles which were subject to the Unfair Sales Act on the basis of its competitors' prices, which it in good faith believed to be legal prices under the Unfair Sales Act, but on the contrary it set illegal prices for the sole purpose of meeting prices of its competitors, which it thought to be illegal.

[Injunction Upheld]

In considering unfair sales practice acts from a procedural viewpoint, commentators have observed the wisdom of the legislatures in providing the remedy by injunction, and the increasing tendency of the courts to enjoin, at the suit of competitors, repeated violations affecting the unfair conduct of business. Availability of the injunctive remedy and that of interlocutory decree based on actions therefor precludes the practice indulged in by many fair minded competitors immediately to meet competition by resorting to the same practices themselves. Since actions for injunctions may be filed by a trade association for the benefit of all its members, the practice of resorting to the same practices to meet competition is materially reduced, for the natural restraint against suing a competitor is less present in the seeking of immediate relief against threatened piratical price wars. 10 So. C. L. Rev. 22. See also 21 Iowa L. Rev. 175, 236; 42 Harv. L. Rev. 693; 13 Tex. L. Rev. 136; and 25 Cal. L. Rev. 1088, and cited cases.

We are of the opinion that this injunction granted by the trial court against Safeway was proper, because under our statute the appropriate remedy was by injunction and not by retaliation or retaliatory action, such as was practiced by Safeway. In this respect the judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

[Competitor's Activity]

We come now to Safeway's cross-petition and its contention that the trial court erred in refusing to enjoin Speed and restrain him from distributing trading stamps with articles priced at the minimum under the Unfair Sales Act.

Safeway's cross-petition charged that Speed by the use of trading stamps was selling his merchandise below the statutory minimum cost in violation of the Unfair Sales Act.

Speed in his answer to the cross-petition admitted that he was a retail grocer, in competition with Safeway; that for a number of years he had been distributing S & H trading stamps with all merchandise, including those items which were offered for sale at the statutory minimum; that the stamps were worth approximately 2.5 percent of the sales price of the merchandise, but did not deduct the sales price because they constituted the only practical means of allowing a discount for cash.

Speed defends on the grounds that single trading stamps (the court having enjoined him from issuing double stamps on his sales) do not reduce the price of merchandise, but constitute only a discount for cash on his sales.

[Trading Stamps]

In recent years there have been many appellate court decisions dealing with the subject of trading stamps, and several Law Review articles have been written concerning them and their legal effect upon economic regulatory measures. See cited authorities supra and infra.

An extensive article appears in 105 Pa. L. Rev. 242, et seq. entitled "Trading Stamps: A Challenge to Regulation of Price Control" wherein in referring to trading stamps it is said (quoting from Wall St. Journal, April 23, 1956, p. 1, col. 6.):

> "Assailed by some 'as a costly device that raises family food bills' and hotly defended by others as 'a perfectly legal promotional tool,' trading stamps have become a center of controversy in the merchandising field. Though stamp plans have enjoyed a rapid upsurge in growth since World War II, the idea itself is over fifty years old." (See 24 Tenn. L. Rev. 557-58, 1956.)

Description of the various stamp plans may be found in 24 Tenn. L. Rev. supra. However, there being no statute in Oklahoma prohibiting the use of trading stamps as such, we are concerned herein only with the application of and/or relation of trading stamps to unfair competition and below cost sales under our statute; see "The Unfair Sales Act," Laws 1949, p. 103, Sec. 1, et seq.; 15 O. S. 1951, Sec. 598.1, et seq., which as noted by the title of the Act, is designated as > "An Act defining and prohibiting unfair sales practices with a view to preventing the advertising, offering for sale, or the selling of merchandise below cost for the purpose of injuring competitors, destroying, or substantially lessening competition; providing remedies for violation thereof; establishing a penalty therefor, etc."

[Issue]

The question of whether giving trading stamps in the usual manner with merchandise sold at the statutory minimum constitutes a disguised form of price cutting in violation of our Unfair Sales Act, or whether they (trading stamps) are to be regarded as a discount for cash, as a means of advertising, a device to entice customers and to retain their trade, is new in this jurisdiction, and our decision on this matter will be one of first impression. It is a question upon which appellate courts, economists and accountants have diverse and conflicting opinions.

The question has, however, been considered by the courts of California and Utah, which states have statutes similar and comparable to ours in content and substantially identical to ours in purpose on unfair trade practices and fair trade contracts. See Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code, Fair Trade Contracts, Sec. 16900-16905, Unfair Trade Practices, 17000-17100, and Food and Grocery Bureau v. Garfield (Cal.) [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,205], 125 P. 2d 3; Weco Products Co. v. Mid-City Cut Rate Drug Stores, et al. (Cal.) [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,242], 131 P. 2d 856, and cited cases. See also the Utah case, Trade Commission v. Bush (1953) [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,537], 259 P. 2d 304, and cited cases, and Utah statute cited in footnote of the case.

[Decisions]

In the case of Food and Grocery Bureau v. Garfield, supra, there was no contention as herein that the use of the stamps resulted in sales of commodities below cost under the Unfair Sales Practices Act, but it was said in that case that > "(I)t is well settled by the decisions of this Court, as well as other jurisdictions, that the practice of merchants in issuing trading stamps with the purchase of articles is merely a method of discounting bills in consideration for the immediate payment of cash." Citing cases.

In the California case of Weco Products Co. v. Mid-City Cut Rate Drug Stores, et al., supra, the question of price cutting or selling below cost was involved, and the factual situation was similar, if not identical, to the case herein, except that the latter case involved the Fair Trade Act and the case before us involves the Unfair Sales Practices Act which was true of the California case of Food and Grocery Bureau v. Garfield, supra, but the court made no distinction in the application of the cash discount rule to the Fair Trade and Unfair Sales Practices Acts. In the Weco Products Co. case, supra, it was said:

"Defendant, even antedating plaintiff's availing itself of the protection of the Fair Trade Act, regularly gave to his customers trading stamps at the rate of one stamp with each ten cents of the sale price of articles purchased. These were given on purchases of any of the thousand and one things sold in defendant's drug stores, with the exception of liquors. At infrequent intervals there were 'double stamp days,' when two stamps were given for each unit of sale price. Upon each stamp was imprinted 'Cash Discount Stamp.' Each stamp had a cash value of two mills. Stamps were given to every customer paying cash at the time of purchase and requesting trading stamps. They were redeemed by defendant upon presentation of five hundred stamps collected in a book given by defendant to customers for that purpose, redemption value for a book of five hundred being $1.00 cash or, at the option of the purchaser, $1.25 merchandise.

"Inasmuch as trading stamps were given by defendant upon sales of plaintiff's commodities, plaintiff contends that the scheduled minimum prices of his commodities were reduced by exactly the amount of the cash value of the stamps, to wit, by two mills upon each ten cents. In other words, plaintiff insists that the giving of trading stamps was in reality a disguised form of price cutting.

"The question before us for consideration, therefore, may be stated as follows: Does the giving of trading stamps, redeemable for cash or merchandise, constitute a violation of the Fair Trade Act when such stamps are given with commodities sold at the minimum prices stipulated by the producer under said act? This query is best answered, we believe, by a consideration of the nature and purpose of the trading stamp coupons. Are they to be regarded as a discount for cash, as a means of advertising, a device to entice customers and to retain their trade, or do they simply represent a cut in the sale price of the articles with which they are given? If the latter, they accomplish a cut in the established price of merchandise; and where such merchandise is sold at minimum Fair Trade Act prices, the giving of trading stamps then amounts to a sale below such prices.

"If, however, the stamps are given by the merchant in the nature of an inducement to customers to attract them to his store, the practice is in the nature of an advertising device, and is no more to be condemned as violative of the Fair Trade Act than would be such commonly employed devices as free parking room, care of infants and other plans offered by some mercantile establishments in competition with their rivals. Free parking for automobiles of customers might be said to result in a lesser price paid by a customer for goods purchased, yet it could hardly be reasonably contended that thereby a violation of the Fair Trade Act had been worked.

"Neither can it be asserted that by giving discounts for cash the terms of the statute in question are contravened. A cash discount is a reward for prompt payment. It is a trade practice long established, and is authoritatively recognized as being not a deduction from the purchase price. Montgomery, Auditing Theory and Practice, pp. 499-500.

"Consideration of such authorities as are available leads us to the conclusion that the giving of trading stamps as in the instant now before us does not effect a reduction in the price of the articles sold such as to constitute a violation of the Fair Trade Act. The matter has not been passed upon by the appellate courts of this state. However, aside from the consideration of the Fair Trade Act, the status of trading stamps is definitely fixed in this state as being a discount for 'the immediate payment of cash.' This pronouncement finds its latest expression in the case of Food and Grocery Bureau v. Garfield, 20 Cal. 2d 228, 125 P. 2d 3, 5, decided April 28, 1942, where the defendant is the same as in the instant case and where the very trading stamps as in the instant case and where the very trading stamps here involved were under consideration. It is true that the Food and Grocery Bureau case involved a different statute, the Unfair Practices Act rather than the Fair Trade Act, but the ruling of the court must be regarded as conclusive of the status of the trading stamp in commercial retail business.

"'It must be concluded,' says the court in the Unfair Practices Act case, '*that the trading stamp plan adopted by the appellant * * * is a discount given the customer in consideration of his paying cash.*' And at page 6 of 125 P. 2d: 'It is well settled by the decisions of this Court, as well as those in other jurisdictions, that the practice of merchants in issuing trading stamps with the purchase of articles is merely a method of discounting bills in consideration for the immediate payment of cash.'

"This latter pronouncement is buttressed by numerous citations to decisions in California and other jurisdictions, where trading stamps are characterized as 'merely one way of discounting bills in consideration for immediate payment in cash.' Ex parte Hutchinson, C. C., 137 F. 950, 951; 'a benefit to the customer, who practically receives a discount, and who will buy more cautiously and judiciously if he pays cash,' Winston v. Beeson, 135 N. C. 271, 47 S. E. 457, 461, 65 L. R. A. 167, and 'a convenient means of allowing or granting a discount to the merchants' customers on small as well as on large purchases which were paid for in cash', State v. Holtgreve, 58 Utah 563, 200 P. 894, 897, 26 A. L. R. 696.

"To denominate appellant's trading stamp plan as a device for giving a discount for cash payment on merchandise, rather than as a cut in price upon the articles sold, gains force when we consider that the stamps are given uniformly and without regard to the type of goods sold or the purchaser of the same. The only condition is that cash be paid for the purchases. Respondent's 'Fair Trade' minimum-priced articles are not singled out by appellant as objects to which alone the trading stamp privileges attach. No discrimination is made for or against them. The policy may be said to be of uniform application both as to goods sold and as to purchasers of the same, and logically falls into the classification of 'cash discount' rather than 'price cut'" (Italics ours).

The California rule is expounded in the above quotation holding that giving of trading stamps with purchases of merchandise sold at the minimum price under the Unfair Sales Practice Act is not a violation of the Act because the stamps represent a "cash discount" which, according to accounting procedure, is a cost of selling rather than a reduction in price, is a rule of long standing. In 105 Pa. L. Rev. 248, in discussing discounting procedures, it was said:

"While in the case of stamps a stronger argument may be made for treatment as a selling cost, since seller receives in cash the full list price regardless of the discount in stamps and must therefore account for the cash income as well as for his payment to the stamp company for the use of the stamps."

As early as 1904 in Ex parte Hutchinson, 137 Fed. 949, the Court, in nullifying anti-trading stamp legislation, said:

". . . (T)he giving of trading stamps is merely one way of discounting bills in consideration for immediate payment in cash, which is a common practice of merchants, and is doubtless a popular method, and advantageous to all concerned, and it is not obnoxious to public policy. . . ."

In the same year (1904) in Winston v. Beeson, 135 N. C. 271, 47 S. E. 457, the court in holding that the issuance of S & H stamps did not constitute a "gift enterprise" said:

"We can discern no practical difference between this arrangement of the parties and one by which the merchant agrees to discount his bills where cash is paid by his customer at the time of purchase, and the giving of stamps redeemable at a store of another in goods to be selected by the holder, instead of an actual discount by the merchant, does not in law vary the case or change the real and substantial character of the transaction * * *"

In 1922, in the case of Sperry & Hutchinson Co. v. Siegel-Cooper & Co., 225 Ill. App. 540, aff'd 309 Ill. 193, 140 N. E. 864, (1923) in 225 Ill. at page 548, the court referred to the practice as follows:

"The practice of giving trading stamps to customers buying merchandise at retail constitutes a method of discounting the bills in consideration of prompt payment in cash. This is a common practice among merchants advantageous to all concerned. * * *"

In 1942 the same rule was applied in Food and Grocery Bureau Inc. v. Garfield, supra.

In 1951 in Sperry & Hutchinson Co. v. Hudson, 190 Ore. 458, 226 P. 2d 501, the court said:

"In a practical sense, the issuance of these trading stamps to cash customers is simply a method adopted for giving these purchasers a discount for cash. By the use of these stamps discounts are available on small purchases. As explained by the witness Shirer, vice president of plaintiff corporation: 'There is no coin small enough to give a discount on a ten or fifteen cent purchase.' By the issuance of one of these stamps for each ten cent purchase, such a discount is made possible."

In 1954 in Sperry & Hutchinson v. Margetts [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,747], 15 N. J. 203, 104 A. 2d 310, the court held that giving trading stamps was a form of discount for cash and "should be treated as a non-operating item, rather than as a deduction from sales price."

And as late as December of 1956, in Gever v. American Stores Co. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,569], 487 Pa. 206, 212, 127 A. 2d 694, the court said:

"Viewed realistically, the giving of trading stamps may be regarded as nothing more than the equivalent of a normal cash discount, which is merely a term of payment and not a price reduction. Indeed, in a sense, the stamps have no value in themselves but acquire it only if the stipulation amount of other purchases is made. They cannot be regarded as cutting prices any more than free delivery service or free parking could be so regarded although these are practices which obviously save money for the customers of stores offering such advantages. Accordingly, the use of trading stamps, pursued as a general business practice by a commercial establishment, does not violate either the letter or the spirit of the Fair Trade Act."

[Affirmed]

Generally, the law of trade regulations has moved swiftly, and our statutes relating thereto are relatively new; however, from an examination of our statutes and those of other states, together with appellate court decisions construing same, we conclude that the weight of law, logic and reason clearly and distinctly show that the practice of giving trading stamps in the usual customary manner does not amount to, nor will it sustain a charge of price cutting.

The trial court did not err in refusing injunctive relief to force Speed, who was giving single trading stamps in the usual manner and in accord with a court order enjoining him from giving double stamps, to price his merchandise at statutory markup plus the value of the single stamps issued in the usual manner to the consumers, and we hold that the giving of such stamps did not constitute a price cut or unfair competition, but that such stamps merely constituted a discount for cash.

Therefore the judgment as to Speed is affirmed.

Concur: WELCH, C. J., CORN, V. C. J., and DAVISON and CARLILE, JJ. Concur in part and dissent in part: HALLEY, WILLIAMS, BLACKBIRD, and JACKSON, JJ.

[Concurring and Dissenting Opinion]

JACKSON, Justice: Concurring in part and dissenting in part.

[Discount Not Authorized]

Sales at retail below cost, as defined in the Act, are prohibited. 15 O. S. 1951, § 598.3.

Speed is selling, or giving, two articles for the price of one. Speed does not admit that this constitutes selling below cost nor does the majority opinion specifically so hold. Speed argues, and the majority agrees, that Speed is giving a discount for cash.

The Act does not authorize discounts for cash in retail sales. It does not authorize any scheme or device that would result in sales below "cost to the retailer." We are not dealing herein with sales at wholesale or by the manufacturer wherein discounts for cash appear to be authorized by § 598.2 (a) of the Act.

Insofar as material here § 598.2(a) defines "cost to the retailer" in substance as invoice cost, plus freight, plus a 6 percent markup to cover a part of the cost of doing business.

Speed was selling items at "cost to the retailer" (Speed) but in addition was giving trading stamps to the purchaser. The stamps were valued at 2.5 percent. That is, if a pound of coffee cost Speed $1.00, as defined in "cost to the retailer," Speed was selling the coffee at $1.00 and giving the customer a stamp.

Even if it could be said that a cash discount by the retailer is authorized, the foregoing practice does not constitute a discount for cash in the ordinary acceptance or understanding of the term. A "discount for cash" ordinarily connotes a taking away, or reduction. The word "discount" is defined in Webster's New International Dictionary as follows:

"Discount. 1. To deduct from an account, debt, charge, or the like; to make an abatement of; as, to discount a per cent of a bill for early payment."

In Black's Law Dictionary "Discount" is defined as follows:

"Discount. In a general sense, an allowance or deduction made from a gross sum on any account whatever."

In Black's Law Dictionary "Cash Discount" is defined as follows:

"A deduction from billed price which seller allows for payment within a certain time. Leonard v. U. S., Ct. Cl., 7 F. Supp. 295, 297."

Speed is not giving a discount for cash but is selling two articles for the price of one. Under the illustration above given Speed is selling a pound of coffee and a stamp for $1.00 which, together, cost One Dollar and Two and One-Half cents. This is contrary to an express provision of the statute. § 598.2(d) provides in substance that when one or more items are advertised or sold with one or more other items at a combined price, or offered as a gift, or given with the sale of any one or more other items, each of said items shall be deemed to be advertised or sold, and the price of each item named shall be governed by the definition of "cost to the retailer."

We have been furnished extensive briefs citing decisions from other jurisdictions. Most of these decisions seem to be influenced by experts in the field of accounting and auditing. Experts in these fields testified in this case. Reasons which compel an accountant's conclusion do not compel the same legal conclusion. The issues are not the same. Accountants are concerned with auditing principles. We are concerned with the meaning of the Act as intended by the Legislature.

[Injunction]

In my opinion the injunction against Safeway was proper. Safeway does not contend that it has a right to sell below cost. It does contend that it had a right to meet Speed's prices. § 598.7 of the Act authorizes a retailer to sell merchandise at a price made in good faith to meet the price of a competitor who is selling the same article at cost to him (competitor). Safeway was taking 2.5 percent from cost. Speed was adding or giving 2.5 percent above cost. But if it could be admitted that Safeway was meeting competition it was meeting unlawful competition. An illegal price on Speed's part would not authorize an illegal price on Safeway's part. This is one of the evils that the Act seeks to prevent.

For the reasons assigned, I respectfully concur in the order enjoining Safeway from selling below statutory cost and dissent to the opinion wherein it authorizes Speed to give stamps on articles sold at statutory cost.

I am authorized to say that HALLEY and BLACKBIRD, JJ. concur in the views herein expressed.

[¶ 68,889] United States v. Federation Suisse Des Associations De Fabricants D'Horlogerie; The Watchmakers of Switzerland Information Center, Inc.; Bulova Watch Company, Inc.; Hamilton Watch Company; Waltham Watch Company, Inc.; Elgin National Watch Company; Carl Hirschmann Company, Inc.; Russell, Holbrook & Henderson, Inc.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Civil Action No. 105-210. Filed December 19, 1957.

Case No. 1267 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Pretrial Motions—Summary Judgment—Judgment on Pleadings—Mootness.—Motions by a defendant for summary judgment and for judgment on the pleadings on the ground that the action against it was moot were denied. As to summary judgment, the court ruled that there were genuine issues of material fact which could be resolved and properly adjudicated only upon trial. Such questions of fact included the defendant's good faith, whether the defendant violated the controlling statutes, and the degree of probability that the defendant would again violate the controlling statutes. As to judgment on the pleadings, the court ruled that there was a genuine issue as to the reasonable likelihood of a recurrence of conduct on the part of the defendant in violation of the controlling statutes.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8229.150, 8229.225, 8229.675.

For the plaintiff: Richard B. O'Donnell, Attorney, Department of Justice, New York, N. Y.

For the moving defendant: Debevoise, Plimpton & McLean, New York, N. Y., for Elgin Natl. Watch Co.

Memorandum

[Pretrial Motions]

WILLIAM B. HERLANDS, District Judge [In full text]: Defendant Elgin National Watch Company, one of the eight defendants named in this antitrust action, has moved as follows:

1. To dismiss the complaint as to this defendant because, as to it, the case is moot and that, therefore, the Court lacks jurisdiction over the subject-matter. F. R. C. P. rule 12.

2. For summary judgment on the ground that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact. F. R. C. P. rule 56.

These motions by defendant Elgin are denied in all respects.

The moving and opposing papers and briefs are voluminous and well-documented. Several hours were devoted to the oral argument of these motions. The stenographic transcript of said argument was taken, has been submitted to the Court and is now part of the record. All of the foregoing material has been closely studied.

[Issues of Fact]

It is the Court's clear conclusion that there are genuine issues of material fact and that such issues can be resolved and properly adjudicated only upon the trial.

Such questions of fact include, inter alia, (1) the good faith of the moving defendant; (2) whether the moving defendant violated the statutes here involved; and (3) the degree of probability that the moving defendant will again violate the controlling statutes. The Government has persuasively demonstrated that said defendant's position on the motion for summary judgment is basically unsound.

With respect to the moving defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings, it is likewise clear that the case is not moot, but that, on the contrary, there is a genuine controversy and issue as to the reasonable likelihood of a recurrence of conduct on the part of the defendant Elgin in violation of the controlling statutes.

There is no need for the Court to expound and particularize the respective contentions and arguments of the defendant Elgin and the Government. Such contentions are set forth not only in the moving and opposing papers and brief, but in the transcript of the oral argument, in the course of which the Court closely questioned counsel. The Court agrees substantially with the factual analysis and legal contentions submitted in behalf of the Government.

[Motions Denied]

The defendant Elgin's motions for summary judgment and for judgment on the pleadings are denied.

Settle order on notice.

[¶ 68,890] United States v. National Malleable & Steel Castings Co., American Steel Foundries, The Buckeye Steel Castings Co., The Symington-Gould Corporation, McConway & Torley Corporation, Foundries Export Co., Inc., and Association of American Railroads.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio, Eastern Division. Civil Action No. 30,281. Dated November 26, 1957.

Case No. 1166 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Practices—Price Fixing—Price Leadership—Standardized Product—Sufficiency of Evidence.—The fact that manufacturers of railroad car couplers operated, for nearly 30 years, under a trust agreement allegedly fixing prices was not evidence that the manufacturers, at the time of suit, were monopolizing or were engaged in a conspiracy to monopolize or restrain trade in such couplers. The agreement was apparently a necessary concomitant to the production of a standard coupler, which the country needed. The agreement was not illegal at the time it was entered into, and it would not be declared illegal at the present time. Furthermore, there was no evidence that the alleged conspiracy to fix prices continued after the termination of the agreement. While there was uniformity of prices in the industry, the parallelism of action as to prices was the result of a strong and well-informed competition. There was no evidence that prices were fixed jointly by the manufacturers. The price leader in the industry, although it published its prices, did not conspire with the other manufacturers in the establishment of its prices. The similarity or uniformity of prices came about in a purely natural way, not the result of any conspiracy, but the result of intense competition. Also, the fact that the couplers were standardized contributed to price uniformity. The manufacturers followed the prices of the industry price leader because they could not make the same identical product any cheaper.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.360, 2011.181; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.600.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Practices—Allocation of Markets—Sufficiency of Evidence.—The fact that manufacturers of railroad car couplers operated, for nearly 30 years, under a trust agreement allegedly allocating business was not evidence that the manufacturers, at the time of suit, were monopolizing or were engaged in an unlawful conspiracy to monopolize or restrain trade in such couplers. The agreement was apparently a necessary concomitant to the production of a standard coupler, which the country needed. The agreement was not illegal at the time it was entered into, and it would not be declared illegal at the present time. Furthermore, there was no evidence that the alleged conspiracy to allocate business continued after the termination of the agreement. Evidence showing fluctuations in the amount of business handled by the manufacturers and showing that the smaller manufacturers increased their business at the expense of the larger manufacturers disproved that there was an allocation of business. Also, the evidence established that each of the manufacturers fought for every customer and for every sale. The market for couplers, the railroad industry, was limited, and there was intense competition to hold and gain customers.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.468; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.240.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Practices—Exclusion of Trade—Lack of New Venture Capital as Evidence of Conspiracy To Exclude Competition.—The fact that there was a lack of new venture capital in the railroad car coupler industry was not evidence that manufacturers of railroad car couplers monopolized or conspired to monopolize or restrain trade by preventing others from manufacturing and selling such couplers. Evidence established that nobody wanted to get into the business and nobody was ever kept out of the business, and the evidence and common knowledge on the subject indicated some good reasons why new venture capital would avoid the business. The expense of getting into the business was great, and the railroad industry, the customer of the manufacturers, was in a state of contraction. Also, the evidence did not establish that the manufacturers improperly threatened patent infringement suits.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.660; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Patents—Pooling of Patents—Refusal To Grant Licenses—Threatening Infringement Suits—Sufficiency of Evidence.—The fact that manufacturers of railroad car couplers granted non-exclusive patent licenses to each other was not evidence that the manufacturers were monopolizing or were engaged in a conspiracy to monopolize or restrain trade in the manufacture and sale of such couplers.

The contention that the manufacturers imposed upon themselves the authority to issue patent licenses was rejected. The evidence established that no application for a license had been made for a number of years and that nobody had been denied a license. There was evidence that the licensing policy of one of the manufacturers was fair, and that one of the defendant manufacturers, holding no patents but operating licenses from the others, was successful in its operations. Also, the two-year licenses issued by the manufacturers did not impose quotas on the smaller manufacturers, and the manufacturers did not improperly threaten infringement suits.

The fact that the manufacturers had previously operated under a trust agreement was not evidence that the manufacturers, at the time of suit, were engaged in the alleged conspiracies. The agreement was a necessary concomitant to the production of a standard coupler, which the country needed. For the benefit of the entire country, the manufacturers gave up their exclusive patent rights to make possible the development of a standard coupler. There was no legal wrong in their method of mutual sacrifice of patent rights to attain this end.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2013.225, 2013.600; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.525, 2610.575.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Practices—Pooling of Interests—Operation of Technical Committee by Competitors—Legality.—The activities of a technical committee composed of engineers of manufacturers of railroad car couplers did not constitute evidence that the manufacturers were monopolizing or were engaged in a conspiracy to monopolize or restrain trade in the manufacture and sale of such couplers. The work of the committee was scientific and mathematical, and its purpose was to develop the best standard coupler. Whatever was done by the committee with respect to its holding of its own drawings and gages, and with respect to its alleged denial of the drawings and gages to others, was done in the interest of standardization, in the interest of protecting standardization, and in the interest of the safety of passengers and crews on trains. Standardization was necessary to prevent the manufacture of obsolete or inadequate parts which would endanger those who ride and those who work on the trains. The fact that one who sought to engage in the business of manufacturing couplers might have to go to the committee for its help is not evidence of the committee's illegality.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005, 2005.751; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Practices—Exchange of Information—Costs, Royalty Reports, and Plant Visitation—Legality.—The fact that manufacturers of railroad car couplers visited each other's plants, exchanged cost information, and furnished royalty reports to each other did not constitute evidence that the manufacturers were monopolizing or were engaged in a conspiracy to monopolize or restrain trade in the manufacture and sale of such couplers. There was no legal harm in the manufacturers' fraternizations in view of the intense competition among them. The manufacturers visited each other's plants to see new furnaces, new processes, and new methods, and the reasons for such visitation did not indicate that it was a part of an illegal conspiracy. Furthermore, they visited plants of manufacturers not named as defendants. The manufacturers did not exchange cost information to raise prices; they did it to check costs so that they could get costs down. Cost information was exchanged to improve productive efficiency and to lower costs. Also, there was nothing illegal in the exchange of royalty reports.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.730; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Trade Association—Boycott—Recommendation of Standardized Equipment—Unwitting Conspirator—Sufficiency of Evidence.—In an action charging that manufacturers of railroad car couplers and a railroad association monopolized and conspired to monopolize or restrain trade in railroad car couplers, it was held that the railroad association did not engage in a boycott by recommending the adoption of standards for couplers. Under the rules, any railroad could accept cars not equipped with standard couplers. Also, no rule required the purchase of any special coupler.

The court noted that the association was charged with being an unwitting conspirator, that is, with intentionally doing something which it did unintentionally. The court commented that it did not quite comprehend such a charge because it always believed that a conspirator had some consciousness of the existence of the conspiracy of which he was a part.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005, 2017; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.720.

Monopolies—Conspiracy To Monopolize—Monopolization—Intent—Sufficiency of Evidence.—A complaint charging that manufacturers of railroad car couplers and an association of railroads conspired to monopolize and did monopolize trade in the manufacture and sale of such couplers was dismissed on the ground that the Government failed to establish a monopoly or a conspiracy to monopolize. "One of the general characteristics of monopolies is that we find them in good businesses which are profiting and expanding, which everybody else wants to get into, and we have people on the inside who have such a good thing they do not want to let anybody else in because they are so jealous of the good things they have." This indicia of monopolies was absent in the instant case. The Government defined monopoly as being a joint acquisition or maintenance of a conspiracy formed for the purpose and to such extent that it is able to exclude others, accompanied by an intention to do so. However, the court ruled that there was no unlawful acquisition, no unlawful maintenance, no unlawful exclusion, and no unlawful intention. The intense competition among the manufacturers did not indicate a monopoly. Furthermore, no "monopolist monopolizes unconscious of what" he is doing; however, the association was charged with having gone into the alleged monopoly unwittingly. The fact that no new manufacturers had gone into the industry for a long time was not evidence of an intent on the part of the defendant manufacturers to monopolize.

See Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2510.275, 2510.400, 2520.10.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Circumstantial Evidence—Sufficiency.—A complaint charging that manufacturers of railroad car couplers and a railroad association monopolized and conspired to monopolize or restrain trade in railroad car couplers by fixing prices, by allocating markets, by excluding others from the manufacture and sale of such couplers, and by pooling patents was dismissed on the ground that the Government failed to establish an unlawful monopoly or conspiracy. The Government had relied upon the following circumstantial evidence to establish its case: the fact that the defendants had, in the past, operated under a trust agreement allegedly fixing prices and allocating business; the fact that prices were uniform; the fact that a technical committee, utilized in the past, was still being utilized; the fact that the defendants revealed costs to each other and visited each other's plants; the fact that no new capital had ventured into the industry for some 30 to 40 years; and the defendants' alleged improper retention of control over their patents. The Government sought to prove a present conspiracy and monopoly by this chain of circumstances. However, the court, in examining each of the circumstances separately, did not find any present antitrust violation. Actual conditions in the industry, in general, disproved the existence of the alleged conspiracy and monopoly.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8225.420.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Evidence—Applicable Period of Time.—In an injuctive suit charging a conspiracy, evidence could have been limited to that which had happened since 1944; however, the court permitted the Government to go back to 1916 and decades previous to that year for the purpose of showing motivations, alleged illegalities, intentions, habit patterns, and other matters relevant to the current situation.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8225.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Injunctive Decrees—Discontinuance of Practices—Necessity of Relief.—For the Government to prevail in an injunctive suit, there must be improper conduct which is susceptible of injunction and the thing enjoined must be happening as of the present time or likely to happen in the immediate future. The sole function of an injunction is to forestall future violations. In the instant case, the court found that, even if there were past violations, there was no activity going on at the present time or likely to occur in the near future which was either properly susceptible of injunction or which would justify equitable relief in any form.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8229.550, 8233.100.

For the plaintiff: Robert B. Hummel, Lewis Bernstein, Lester P. Kauffman, Robert M. Dixon, and Dwight B. Moore.

For the defendants: Jones, Day, Cockley & Reavis by Luther Day, Victor DeMarco, Curtis C. Williams, Jr., George H. Rudolph, and Raymond J. Durn; and Fish, Richardson & Neave, by William K. Kerr, for National Malleable & Steel Castings Co. Squire, Sanders & Dempsey by James C. Davis and George I. Meisel; and Dallstream, Schiff, Hardin, Worth & Dorschel, by John B. Robinson, Jr., for American Steel Foundries. Vorys, Sater, Seymour & Pease by Webb I. Vorys, James A. Gorrell, and Russell P. Herrold, Jr., for The Buckeye Steel Castings Co. Mechlin & Mechlin by Wilmer Mechlin; and Bingham, Collins, Porter & Kistler, by Roger Robb, for The Symington-Gould Corp. Thompson, Hine & Flory, by C. W. Sellers and Andrew C. Hartzell, for McConway & Torley Corp. Arter, Hadden, Wykoff & Van Duzer by Ashley M. Van Duzer and Thomas A. Quintrell; Sidley, Austin, Burgess & Smith by Kenneth F. Burgess, D. Robert Thomas, and James R. Bliss; and Philip F. Welsh, General Attorney for the Association of American Railroads, for the Association of American Railroads.

For a prior opinion of the U. S. District Court, Northern District of Ohio, Eastern Division, see 1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,741.

Court's Opinion

[Preliminary Statement]

CONNELL, District Judge [In full text]: May it please my brother lawyers: we must first say that we all regret the illness and absence of Mr. Luther Day throughout that part of the trial which ensued after he had to leave us. With due regard to all other great lawyers our State has produced, especially in this area, he is considered, I believe, by our leading lawyers as possibly the greatest trial lawyer in Ohio's history, and it is a matter of great and sincere regret to all of us, I'm sure, that his participation in this trial had to end because of an illness. We hope he is soon back at the trial work he so loves.

Today you will have to be patient with me, for I work throughout from longhand notes, and I do that for your convenience today because quite a few of you have expressed a desire to complete our matter as reasonably early as is possible before the great holiday which approaches.

I must say our case terminates today with regret. It will not seem right for those of us who work here every day to get back to just two trial tables and to put the witness back in the right chair, and to operate in your absence, for we have been together for a long time.

I join all other eminent counsel in thanking the reporters who have done a perfect job throughout, and Mr. Rogers, and Messrs. Mancini and Wetherbee, who have helped you get everything you wanted, and Mr. Stevens who kept perfect track of our 2,000 odd exhibits these many weeks. Mr. Stevens' exhibit record was a great convenience to all of us throughout the trial of the case, putting us in a position where we could instantly recognize, on the part of 30 or 40 men in the room, just exactly which exhibit a lawyer was speaking of.

You have all mentioned the fact that all here sought to make you feel at home. This we did, insofar as I was concerned, because as a lawyer we know from experience what it is to go a long way from home to espouse a cause which may be on the unpopular side, and sometimes against local legal heroes.

As lawyers, we all know and understand exactly what it feels like to walk into a strange court room with a frosty atmosphere, just as surrounded the Phophet Daniel in the Den of Lions, and as lawyers we have all had Daniel's experience that in order to win we had to work from a dietary viewpoint in which cross-examination was our only weapon, and we had to concoct such a dish as would cause our opposition to split asunder.

Every comfort we gave you we owed you. We wanted you to be so comfortable that nothing would interfere with your capacity to fight.

This has indeed been a difficult, lengthy and onerous case. It has kept you professional men quite busy for some years. After you had worked out a timetable between you, you did a splendid job of boiling the case down to its main issues: on agreeing to everything susceptible of agreement; you worked it down to a point where most of the factual situation was not in dispute, except that the Court must decide the motivations behind much of the factual situation, and the intent with which certain acts were and are being done.

You have taken a case which was early anticipated by all to require a year for trial and you have agreed to so much between you that actual trial work will have been less than two months. You have done such a perfect job of streamlining your case; you have cooperated with the Court and assisted the Court to the fullest possible degree, for which we are grateful indeed. In fact, you cooperated so well that for a short time, at the beginning, the Court did not fully understand the degree to which you had cut down on the work both you and the Court would have to do.

This case was some years in coming to trial. It has been a solid year in immediate preparation by you. You men worked continuously for months on depositions, pleadings, admissions, and other evidentiary agreements between yourselves. All of you supplied me with splendid advance briefs, citing your authorities, and thus gave me ample early time to check them out, for which I am grateful. In fact, I personally feel if those pages that you gentlemen supplied me with were put in one book it would make as fine a textbook on this subject as has ever been written.

On trial you have produced many witnesses and numerous exhibits. We have had approximately 1200 exhibits of plaintiff, some of which are but a page and some of which are leaflets, and records, and some of which are almost books. The defendants have produced approximately 650 exhibits and many witnesses, some of whom had previously been plaintiff's witnesses.

I have had opportunity of looking at these exhibits both during our many weeks of trial and during the intervening days between hearings. I must say that yours has been the best documented lawsuit I have ever seen.

At the outset of trial, we seemed to get a slow start. At first I misunderstood plaintiff's counsel's method of introducing his exhibits. It is the rule that exhibits should be inquired of and qualified before being offered, but here counsel seemed to be offering them before qualifying them. I didn't at first quite appreciate how much of my work you men had arranged to do for me in advance.

Later counsel for plaintiff was being so meticulously careful as he initiated his inquiries that our case seemed to be going too slowly. Then defense counsel indicated they did not desire to be too technical; and after we got past those first roadblocks at times plaintiff's counsel moved so rapidly that it was difficult for the defense to keep up with him.

May I at this point thank all counsel for their courtesy, their efficiency, their hard work, their patience, and kindness, and I I am grateful too for the brotherly and kindly spirit in which you men all fought with each other so hard, so fairly, and so zealously, as you presented your respective contentions. I have never been in a lawsuit where men lived together with each other in the court room so long and fought so valiantly and kept their amiability so well. You have all had a difficult case here. It represents four and a half years of hard work by all, and it includes many months of immediate and intensive preparation.

It is too bad that after such mutual and joint efforts on the part of such splendid trial men anybody must be on the losing side. But such is the ultimate in the life of every lawyer now and then.

[Antitrust Charges]

Now for the case. Ours is fundamentally an injunction question. Your pleadings boiled down to your opening statements. I will now cover those.

It is here claimed by the plaintiff that these defendants are in active violation of law; that they currently combine to accomplish an unlawful purpose; that they restrain trade by fixing prices, by dividing business, by holding down the less powerful members within their group, and by permitting no others to join their group.

It is further claimed that such conspiracy has existed for over four decades. That prices were set in an agreement going back to 1916. That the exchange of cost information between cost accountants employed by defendants was part of the combination. That their engineers met as a Mechanical Committee to make certain improper decisions also considered unlawful.

It is further claimed by plaintiff that defendants operated this combination through the instrumentality of a Board of Trustees from 1916 to 1945, which it then dissolved because, plaintiff claims, defendants knew it to have been unlawful.

The plaintiff further claimed that defendant The Association of American Railroads was a part of this unlawful combination. That they took no safeguards to prevent these alleged illegal acts and results of other defendants.

In opening statement, plaintiff said it would offer some 50 witnesses and 1200 exhibits to prove its case; that the combination to fix prices continues to date; that the business is allocated to date; and that patents are maintained to exclude others to date; that, in effect, the aid of this Court should be invoked to enjoin this current illegal combination. Counsel for plaintiff said it would have a circumstantial case as to these defendants, and that it would not prove its case by direct evidence.

[Defendants' Contentions]

In its opening statement, it is here claimed by defendant National, meaning National Malleable & Steel Castings Company, that no such condition now exists which could be properly susceptible of injunction. They rely particularly on the authority of the case of United States v. The Oregon Medical Society reported in [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,264] 343 U. S. 326, in the year 1952.

Defendant National says it is violating no law; that it does have patents, and properly so; and that it has joined with others to give the country the most safe and efficient coupler; that it did operate under an agreement, and did use a Board of Trustees between 1916 and 1944 when, by reason of what appeared to be possible changing thought on the subject of its legality, the Board dissolved itself.

National says the 1916 agreement was lawful throughout its entire existence; that the best available counsel, including a former United States Attorney General, so instructed them.

Counsel for National denies they were in a patent pool. Counsel says the Justice Department investigated this entire matter in 1932 and found nothing illegal about it at that time.

Counsel says each defendant got all the work it could; that customers were not divided; that there was no price-fixing.

Counsel says that between November 15, 1944, and April 6, 1946, the OPA was in effect, and that between January 26, 1950 and February 12, 1953, the OPS was in effect, which brought Governmental control of the situation down to a time just three months before the within case was filed.

Counsel says National made the decision to determine its own prices on couplers; that others would adopt similar prices. Counsel says such prices were based on its own business judgment, and never were based on any agreement with anybody else; that uniform prices are due to economic and business reasons, and are not the result of any illegal agreement.

In his opening statement, counsel for American Steel Foundaries suggested that the plaintiff had the burden of establishing a present threat to violate the law today. Counsel further said that as to the uniformity of prices others follow the prices set by National on couplers, as they follow the prices by National on freight differentials.

Counsel said allocations of business were made before 1945, but never since, and that today each defendant goes after all the business he can get.

Without too much repetition, may I say that counsel for Buckeye stated that they sell all they can, as did counsel for Symington-Gould.

Counsel for McConway & Torley said the same, and added that patentors should be encouraged so that the public gets the greatest amount of benefit from their work. Counsel also related that in 1893 the law required automatic couplers; that the results achieved by the manufacturers in order to comply with the Government's suggestion resulted in the saving of lives and property, and in the expedition of passenger and freight travel; that such result was possible only by team-work and cooperation on the part of all concerned, for the benefit of the entire nation.

Counsel for the Association of American Railroads stated that his clients are purchasers and users of the products involved. He stated his clients are really being accused here of raising prices on parts which they would have to pay. He stated that the standard coupler was the result of the cooperation of all, and stated that the AAR was no part of the 1916 agreement, nor did it know of its 1945 dissolution until three years after it happened.

[Evidence in General]

The plaintiff has here presented its circumstantial case against defendants on the question of fixing prices, dividing business and controlling who can get into this business, and defendants have here presented their defense consisting of their refutation and explanation of the circumstances claimed by plaintiff, and by eliciting the direct and positive testimony of all witnesses so concerned, to the effect that there was never any combination amongst them to do anything unlawful.

We shall, of course, make no effort to review the testimony. We have listened to many witnesses on both sides. They were generally the executives and representatives of the defendant companies. They were all accomplished and honorable professional men. Many of them were self-made. Many started at the bottom. They all seemed to me to be honest, hard-working engineers and executives.

[Standard Coupler]

The original accomplishment of these defendant companies was unquestionably a boon to this country. To follow the Government's suggestion, they got together with all the genius they could muster, and produced the standard coupler. They made the American Railway the world's best, and they made American products the best in their field.

Their information had to be channeled through some kind of a clearing-house. They had to use such a means to assemble and perfect their finished product, as otherwise it could never have been, in all probability, produced. Their method of conducing to the country's safety met with universal success. Their lawyers assured them their method was legal, and one of these opinions came from a former Attorney General of these United States. They say that the Government checked them out and found no complaint.

But times change, and from their viewpoint it seems that, as they regarded it, legal thinking changed; and fear of such change caused them in 1944 to discontinue operating under the 1916 agreement.

After such discontinuance they, nevertheless, all continued thereafter, and up to date, to manufacture their products. Each continued to use all of the facilities for manufacture which it already had; each continued to utilize the full manufacturing capacity which it already had; each continued to do so up to this very date.

Meanwhile, Government price-fixing intervened during most of the time which has since elapsed, and was discontinued just three months before this and the criminal case, which has been here mentioned, were filed.

I think it is fair for me to say that I am one of the few people in this court room who ante-date the history of this lawsuit. I do believe that the standard coupler was a boon to our civilization. For one thing, although it is no part of this record, I can remember when our city, which was then something of a railroad city, I can remember when all the trains were on the ground and none elevated. We had a lot of men around who had lost arms and legs by the old couplers. Such amputees were noticeable when I was young. Everybody knew a few men who had been crippled in that way.

All of you Cleveland lawyers in the room will remember a splendid municipal judge who died not so long ago, David Moylan, who lost both of his arms to couplers. While it is no part of this record, it is worthy of mention, the way he overcame his handicaps as a student, as a lawyer, and as a judge, and made the local lawyers ever conscious, not only of what couplers could do to a man but equally conscious of what men could do to overcome what couplers had done to men.

I can remember when there were a lot of coupler lawsuits both in this United States Court and in our local Common Pleas Court. But in my sixteen years on the bench I have never seen one. That type of human misery seems to have quite come to its end. And while ours is the profession which theorizes on how to end human misery, it is fair to say that there can be no question here but that the engineering genius we have herein observed in this very court room is accountable for this particular improvement.

[Circumstantial Case]

At the outset here, as we have said, plaintiff's counsel informed us that theirs was a circumstantial case. Plaintiff has here undertaken to forge a chain of circumstances against these defendants, and there here appeared to be certain circumstances in plaintiff's favor, which I will list as follows, much as they have listed them:

First, the fact that for nearly 30 years defendants operated under a Trust Agreement fixing prices and allocating business;

Secondly, the fact that prices are quite uniform today;

Thirdly, the fact that a Mechanical Committee, as has been utilized in the past, is still utilized today;

Fourth, the fact that these defendants reveal costs to each other today and visit each other's plants today;

The fact that no new capital in some 30 to 40 years has ventured into the business;

The alleged improper retention of control over their patents.

Now, may I observe at this point, to digress a moment, please, that when Mr. Victor DeMarco started in with his argument he made reference to the cases he had to try in the prosecutor's office and said that cases often because much simpler than they at first blush appeared. That may well be. I once heard one of the partners of the partnership of which he and Mr. Kerr and Mr. Williams are members here, I once heard one of their partners, Mr. Patrick Mulligan, one of our greatest trial lawyers, say that a murder case was really an assault and battery case in which the victim died.

The within case is really a case in conspiracy, if there be a case, and a conspiracy whether to rob a bank in fifty seconds or to violate the Sherman Act over a continuous period of 50 years, such conspiracies are provable in exactly the same way. So that even this case may be simpler than appeared at first blush, as has been said.

[Present Conduct in Issue]

This is, as we have said, an injunction case, and the law of injunction applies. So we are here concerned with that alleged conduct now going on, improperly, the continuance of which improper conduct ought to be prevented and stopped by injunction, according to the plaintiff's theory of the case. So there must here be that improper conduct which is susceptible of injunction for the plaintiff to prevail, and the thing enjoined must be happening as of the present moment, or likely to happen in the immediate future.

Plaintiff claims there is going on at this moment, and likely to go on in the immediate future, a course of conduct on the part of all defendants which is most improper; that such defendants are in an illegal conspiracy and combination to restrain trade in interstate commerce in violation of law, and that such illegal combination has been actively violating federal laws for four or five decades.

The plaintiff's claim herein is a most serious accusation. If it is true, then the department of the Government which examined into the question on several occasions should have brought this action long ago. If it is true, it is regrettable indeed that the Government for some years under OPA and some years under OPS, consciously or unconsciously, conduced to the evil when it exercised full control over the situation. If it is true, this action and the remedy sought is long overdue.

[Circumstantial Evidence]

Now, just what is before us to prove that it is true? Well, counsel told us at the outset of the case that he was going to present here what he called a circumstantial case; that he was going to prove this active present conspiracy by a chain of circumstances. And the presentation plaintiff has made has been entirely one of circumstance alone, for no witness they have produced here has said there was ever any illegal combination. In fact, every witness who was asked—and they were all plaintiff's witnesses, and then many of them thereafter became defense witnesses—but every witness who was asked testified directly and positively to the contrary. The only one who says there is any illegal combination is plaintiff's counsel himself, and he bases his statement solely and only on the circumstances he has offered.

There have been in the case on the side of both plaintiff and defendants many circumstances which may have a tendency both to prove and to disprove plaintiff's claim. And our ultimate findings must necessarily here be based on such circumstantial evidence both ways, and on the direct and positive evidence of the witnesses who have testified before us.

Our findings of fact and conclusions of law we will herein give you verbally, leaving to counsel the task of later translating the same into appropriate written form.

[Evidence—Period of Time]

Since this is an injunction case, we might well have limited the evidence to that which has happened since December of 1944, because a 13-year period ought to have been sufficient to prove a current conspiracy, if one exists, but we have permitted the plaintiff to go back beyond the Trust Agreement of 1916 which was dissolved in December, 1944, and into some events of decades previous to that, for the purposes of showing plaintiff's claims as to the motivations, alleged illegalities, the intentions with which certain wrongs were done, habit patterns, etc., all with a view to throwing light on the current situation which plaintiff claims is here susceptible of injunction and concerning which plaintiff claims that the people of these United States cannot be otherwise protected from this 40 to 60-year-old illegal combination.

[1916 Trust Agreement]

Now we come to the first circumstance having to do with the 1916 Trust Agreement. There is no question but that the operation of this industry was conducted completely under a Trust Agreement from 1916 to 1945. It seems to have been a necessary concomitant to the production of the device which America so needed at that time. Men gave up rights for the common good; they joined together and fought a little war to save arms, legs, lives, and freight and time. They had to invent instrumentalities for that purpose, as men first invented legal entities for other purposes. They had to create a clearing-house of genius and ideas and patents and parts.

They were successful beyond expectation. And at the time the country and the world acclaimed their end result.

As to the Trust Agreement of 1916, as of the date it was made I see no illegality in it then, and since 1945 no court has ever found it to be illegal. Nor do I. Nor do I believe in the correctness of plaintiff's theory that it ended only in its outward manifestations, because the provable outward manifestations, which seem to be quite immune from plaintiff's attack, namely, the graphs which are here in the form of exhibits in evidence, and from which I will later quote—these graphs prove without any refutation whatsoever that from 1945 to date there has been a veritable, if I may use a colloquial expression, a veritable "cat and dog fight" between these defendants to get all the business away from each other that they can.

What these manufacturers did before 1916 was unique in the history of patents and inventions. For the benefit of the entire country they so gave up their exclusive rights for the use of each other as to make it possible for the development of their ultimate mechanical masterpiece.

If they didn't have this team-work for the benefit of our people, they might still be fighting over patent differences, and we might never have perfected a standard interchangeable coupler.

I can see no legal wrong in their method of mutual sacrifice of patent rights to attain this end. I find their intentions to have been perfectly lawful. I think the contention that their intentions were then improper is an unreasonable contention.

[Recurrent Violation]

I agree with Jim Davis that to prevail the Government must here prove some cognizable danger of recurrent violation on the part of the defendants, which he quoted from a United States Supreme Court citation.

Now, here the plaintiff has said the defendants can present a legal justification for every act they have done singly—or that was the way I understood Mr. Bernstein to have said, and that's the way the defense understood him to have said, and then he added that considered together they become illegal. Perhaps I should withdraw that because of what Mr. Bernstein later said.

The plaintiff claims they prove a conspiracy between 1916 and 1945 here. Mr. Davis says, and I agree with him, that if they have so proved a conspiracy between 1916 and 1945, they have equally proved, on the part of the plaintiff, that it was completely terminated in 1945.

[Activity After 1945]

The plaintiff claims other practices here ensued which constituted a continuance of the conspiracy they claimed. They claim that the agreement ended only in its outward manifestations. The evidence before us contravenes the claim. On the one side we have that accusation. On the other side we have the compilations which were translated into graphs which showed exactly what happened in this business after 1945. Some of this evidence came from the plaintiff.

[Percentage of Business]

The evidence introduced by the plaintiff proves that American, a big company, whose quota in 1944 was 20.54 percent has averaged 18 percent from 1945 through 1956. They went down 2 percent from their old quota, while Buckeye, a little company with a quota of 13.41 percent averaged 15 percent. They went up the equivalent of the loss of the big company. Symington-Gould, with a quota of 11.68 percent, averaged 14 percent —up 3 points. And this percentage is a percentage with reference to the entire business of all the coupler manufacturers in the United States. So that when Symington-Gould, for instance, goes up 3 percent of all the business in the United States, its own business may be increased 10 or 12 percent.

McConway & Torley had a quota of 10 percent in the old days and averaged 13 percent ever since. National Malleable's quota which had been 44.37 percent has averaged 40 percent ever since. So that loss of 5 percent of the total business of all coupler manufacturers, that 5 percent of all the business, might very well be 10 or 12 or 15 or 20 percent of their own business. These are percentages of a total of 100 percent of all business of all companies. As to each individual company each of these percents would average a higher percent of that company's total business. National's annual fluctuations run from 37 percent to 42 percent. But this 5 percent fluctuation of all business would be one-seventh to one-eighth of their own total, which would be 14 percent to 12½ percent.

Thus McConway & Torley, which was once on a 10 percent quota up to 1945, ran in the following years immediately thereafter, 16 percent, 12.51, 13.78, 13.89, 15.94, and so on. And this percentage of all business would rate a far higher percent of its own individual business.

Symington-Gould's quota of 11.68 has since gone to 18.23 percent, and has averaged 14.5 percent over the period of the last 12 years.

It is the claim of the plaintiff that the little companies were being bullied here, the big companies told them what to do. But, strangely, from the figures which have been compiled—there is no dispute on it, there is no claim they aren't true, not a question was asked about them, and plaintiff ignores the subject completely throughout two full days of argument—but, nevertheless, the little companies which are theoretically bullied here under the plaintiff's contention have had all the increase in business at the expense of the larger companies which, under plaintiff's theory of the case, have been doing the bullying.

None of this information is questioned. None of this evidence is rebutted. There is no question about its mathematical certainty whatsoever, and these figures, and other figures which I will later on mention, completely disprove the premise on which plaintiff bases all its claims as to quota-allocation.

For instance, on bodies Buckeye's 1944 quota was 13.41 percent, and in 1957 it became 42.5 percent. On knuckles Buckeye's quota was 13.41 percent, and in 1952 it became 42.5 percent. They multiplied their business three times over.

As I find with reference to quotas, so it may be said, from one end to the other in this case, that one must always measure what is claimed by plaintiff to have theoretically happened against what is mathematically proved by defendants to have actually happened. When the issues can be so squarely met by proof to mathematical certainties, our task becomes less difficult than as it first appeared.

[Uniform Prices]

Now we come to the second circumstance, uniform prices, and we will go to the other graphs which prove what a lively battle has been going on here since 1945. The glaring circumstance from end to end of the case seems to be the claim that prices are uniform, and business is allocated, and the combination is so satisfied that there is a complete lack of any healthy competition among these conspirators.

[Competition in Industry]

The real complaint of plaintiff's counsel is that they are doing so well as the result of their conspiracy that they don't have to fight with each other. The theory is that business has been so good for 40 years, due to their successful violation of the law, that the spirit of competition between them, so necessary to the country's well-being, is dead.

What do we find in the evidence? Let's at first ignore animate witnesses, for all animate witnesses testified positively and directly to the opposite of plaintiff's claim here. There is no question where the animate witnesses stand—and all were plaintiff's witnesses, and many were defendant's witnesses.

Let us look to a few inanimate witnesses which completely disprove plaintiff's claims in this respect—witnesses which have in no wise been refuted—witnesses which have been meticulously ignored and avoided by plaintiff in all argument.

I refer particularly to ASF Exhbit 66-165-A, and National Malleable's Exhibit 301, and Buckeye's Exhibits 383 and 384. These exhibits prove what happened to all this business from 1945 to the present date.

This Exhibit, ASF Exhibit 66-165-A, is worthy of comment. It covers 100 percent, or the total business of all involved. It shows that on the Type E couplers between 1954 and 1957 National's business is down 5 percent—not just 5 percent or one-twentieth of National's own business, but 5 percent of the total business done by all. In business that is a terrific cut.

I cannot believe that this is the result of any agreement between them, because no one would ever agree to lose that much.

At the same time ASF went up 4 percent. So they got 80 percent of National's loss. Now, ASF might like that, but National wouldn't like it.

Buckeye picks up 6 percent between 1954 and 1955; McConway & Torley went down 6 percent from 1956 to June of 1957. It looks like Buckeye got what McConway & Torley lost.

It seems to me results like these, and compilations like these, and mathematical certainties like these, talk louder than the accusations.

Again, in 1948 National had 42½ percent of all business in E couplers, new equipment, repair and maintenance sales, and in June, 1957, they were down to 35 percent of all business. This is a terrific drop because that 7½ percent loss of the total of all business done by all constitutes a reduction in National's own business of a little more than a 19 percent loss of National's own business. And Symington-Gould and American Steel Foundries gained nearly all of National's loss.

I cannot believe these losses and deficiencies are the result of any deliberate scheming, conspiracy and combination of the manufacturers, to violate the law, but I believe this is the result of natural competition, and not the result of unnatural or unlawful combination.

At the same time Buckeye's gain was approximately equal to McConway & Torley's loss. This does not look to me, gentlemen, as if the lions and lambs lay down together. It has more the appearance of what is colloquially called a cat and dog fight, for business and survival.

Every defendant is out to get all the business he can get. They have all so sworn, and the mathematical certainties prove it. And the way their businesses have gone up and down—and there is only 100 percent to fight about—the so-called largest operator loses close to 20 percent on a gradual 9-year decline. I think human nature is such that no such loss would ever be suffered by it as a result of an unlawful combination. They lost 20 percent because they had more competition than they or anybody else ever bargained for.

This doesn't sound like a situation to me in which a group of men got together and agreed not to fight. It looks to me as if the only way in which it could be fairly said that they sought to allocate work was by giving everybody the same chance to fight for it. So much for the fight on the Type E couplers.

Another graph, National Malleable's Exhibit 301, showed National's participation in the sale of all railroad specialties, which includes couplers and everything else it sells. In 1936 National had 12 percent of all such business. In 1939 it moves up to 19½ percent. In 1941 it went down to 14 percent. Nine years later it was 15 percent. And in 1956 it got back to 20 percent, approximately where it had been 20 years before, in 1936.

Such fluctuations in these percentages, which refer to the total of all the country's business, indicate, as I see it, such variations as constitute a refuting circumstance to the claim that there is here an unlawful combination by which National or any other defendant here seeks, gets or controls such particular quantity of business as is unfair or unjust to the people of these United States.

The fact is that the country gets that benefit which inures as the result of the increasing effort of these defendants to get all the business they can away from each other.

Note, gentlemen, these figures and percentages appearing on these graphs were not attacked or rebutted in any manner whatsoever by plaintiff. I take it they are correct and true in every detail.

Buckeye's Exhibits 383 and 384 give us information on changes in the number of customers to whom they sell. The customers necessarily must be railroads. They have no other customers.

Now, the AAR has 110 Class 1 members, meaning Class 1 railroads, meaning railroads with a gross of over $3,000,000 a year, and 160 associate railroads which are not in Class 1. So the number of prospective customers involved here is always limited to a possible 270.

Buckeye's graph, in Exhibit 283, indicates that between 1940 and 1957 Buckeye had 110 specific customers, and that in the 1940-1944 period, under the Board of Trustees operation, they had 37 other customers who it later lost. Those customers ceased to buy from Buckeye after 1944.

On the other hand, after the Board of Trustees dissolved, and between 1945 and 1957, Buckeye picked up 138 customers which it never had before. Considering how few prospects there are, this looks like natural competition to me. There were 270 possible customers and Buckeye picked up 138 new ones—over half of all possible prospects. I find that to be very spirited competition.

Buckeye's Exhibit 383 shows that after the 1944 dissolution Buckeye went out and gained 138 new customers and, at the same time, lost 37 of their old customers. Therefore they have a net gain of 101 customers when there were only 270 possible customers to solicit. In other words, they got more than one-third of all customers from any sources, which were also sources for the other defendants. This proves the fallacy of the claim that there is no competition here.

It did not have a proportionate increase in business, but this does prove it is highly competitive, that there is turmoil and change, that nobody lays down on the job, and there is a very sincere fight to get everybody else's customers.

Buckeye's Exhibit 384 shows, by graph, the years in which these new customers for couplers and parts were acquired between 1945 and 1957. In 1945 they picked up eleven; in 1946 they picked up eighteen; 1947 they picked up seventeen; in 1948, seventeen; in 1949, nine; in 1950, seven; in 1951, ten; in 1952, eight; in 1953, six; in 1954, eight; in 1955, eleven; in 1956, eight; and in 1957 so far, eight, for a total of 138, all out of the same 270, or more than half.

Again considering how few the prospects are this indicates that Buckeye is no more satisfied with the status quo than are its competitors. Each fights for every customer and every sale. This circumstance, so proved by these graphs, is another proof that the industry is one of ceaseless competition and not one of planned limitation.

O'Kane of Buckeye said that since 1945 they went after all the customers they could get and their coupler customers almost doubled.

To increase one's business in this industry does not mean one creates business which did not exist before. It means you must take it away from somebody else. There is only 100 percent of the business and it is limited to railroads only, and no salesman creates any new prospects. Sales ability constructs no new railroads. You have to fight for what there is. They all have to fight to get all they can from the other fellow and to hang on to what they have, and the fluctuations of sales and production in all these defendant companies proves that they are competing to the best of their capacity and illegally agreeing not at all.

[Prices—Parallelism of Action]

Buckeye's counsel says they followed National prices; that they are constrained to do so because couplers are exactly alike and completely interchangeable and fungible. All must go to the same small group of customers represented by astute purchasing agents. They know a small company can't get more money for the same thing than a large one. They followed National's prices but couldn't learn them until they were published. Moriarty never told them until he told the world. That was the plaintiff's proof, and I believe it, and I find that the parallelism of action here which plaintiff construes as constituting proof of an implied conspiracy here is really the result of a strong and informed competition.

Now, Mr. Suttie testified, he being an officer of the American Steel Foundries, that after the United States decontrolled, and OPS ended, he published his price list in the Chicago Journal of Commerce. To me, that is pretty fair evidence of a company's willingness to tell the world what its prices are. He also related that Moriarty told him that he, Suttie, was getting too much business, and he told Moriarty his superiors told him to get all the coupler business he could, and that that was what he was trying to do.

O'Kane of Buckeye said he was trying to get all the business he could and that the number of his customers had doubled since the dissolution of the agreement.

What Suttie and O'Kane said was amply factually demonstrated by ASF Exhibit 66-165A, and Buckeye's Exhibits 383 and 384, which we have previously discussed, all of which, by animate and inanimate witnesses, demonstrates that prices herein were the result of legal competition and not of illegal lack of competition.

Another circumstance here which cuts both ways, these exhibits which prove rather fierce competition since 1945, prove equally well the plaintiff's contention that there wasn't any competition before 1945.

So my question still is: what misconduct obtains and exists today susceptible of and requiring an injunction?

[Prices—Witnesses]

Now, there were some animate witnesses on price-fixing, too, and all animate witnesses testified there was never a conspiracy or combination here or any agreement to fix prices.

It may be ever natural for the accused to deny a charge against him; it may even accord with their instinct of self-defense. We have all observed that as lawyers. But it seems to me these were intelligent, educated, honorable professional men, these were men to whom dishonesty in a court room would be as alien as a deliberately false reading from one of their own slide rules. To me they tell a completely honest story of their businesses, and of the events with which we are here concerned.

I have often heard lawyers and doctors testify. I never heard testimony any more exact or cogent or correct than theirs seemed to be. And since Moriarty of National takes all responsibility of the alleged fixing of prices on couplers which he originates and which others imitate, we will consider Moriarty first.

I believe his testimony that prices went up and down from year to year, depending upon conditions. Prices are increasing on everything else. Why shouldn't they on couplers?

I believe that until he made up his own mind he did not tell his prices to anybody, as he testified, and that after that he told the world he sent copies to customers and to the public, including even his competition, as a matter of courtesy and convenience. And I think from observing him he would be courteous to anyone, even a competitor.

I believe others followed his prices, as they have testified. I believe they couldn't charge more for the same exact thing and get the business at all; that they couldn't charge less and get the business because National would have to meet their competition if they did so.

I believe in the three-month interval between OPS and the filing of this petition that it was perfectly natural for all defendants to continue to follow the uniform prices theretofore obtaining under Government control.

Mr. Moriarty testified that in his company he had complete jurisdiction in pricing; that he did not confer with any of his competition on prices; he did not even confer within his own plant, except to get the data which he needed to set a price. He assumes entire responsibility for prices. He has never had any agreement with anybody on prices. When the OPS authorized a 5 percent increase he refused to follow their suggestion because, as he testified, he couldn't justify their suggestion by his costs. That sounds like an unusually honest and honorable gentleman to me.

When he says he set his own prices I believe him. And when others say they follow his prices as a matter of uniformity because they can't make the same identical thing he makes any cheaper than he can make it. I believe them.

I think we are here dealing strictly with the law of supply and demand, the mathematics of costs and the vagaries of economics, and it is difficult for me to see wherein any of these natural results can be properly considered as susceptible of injunction.

On the other hand, when others put their prices below Moriarty's, he always followed the lowest price to meet the competition. What other method could he or they or anyone else use? He gathers together all the data he needs and he alone decides the price. And because of the position his company occupies in the field others imitate that price. It is sent to all their customers. They send it as a matter of courtesy and convenience to anybody who wants it, including competition and everybody else. Others, for the reasons given here in their testimony, as far as couplers are concerned, follow the leader, National Malleable. They all sell the same identical thing.

To me it seems a perfectly natural thing that they do so. And, indeed, from their testimony what else could they do, since they must meet their competition?

I believe nobody here conspired or combined or agreed to do anything unlawful. I believe we can't enjoin Moriarty from thinking, from figuring out what the cost ought to be based on, economic, business conditions, changing labor costs, changing commodity costs, and other data he described. We can't enjoin nature, which so operates when an article is offered for sale that whoever else offers the same thing is in a position where he can't charge much more. You can't enjoin supply and demand.

You can enjoin only such wrong as is susceptible of injunction. I think similarity or uniformity of price here has come about in a purely natural way, not the result of any combination, but the result of intense competition.

What happened in the business, as some took business away from the others, and lost it in turn, proves that. I believe the testimony of the men who said they fight for business because the business in its ups and downs, from these exhibits, proves exactly what they say.

Now Emerson once said that "What you are talks louder than anything you can say." Here the changing course of business, the way some take business away from others, the way sales go up and sales go down, the graphs which prove the degree of change, all of this talks louder and more convincingly to the effect that there is a healthy competition here and everybody is getting all the sales he can.

These facts and this evidence in exhibit form talk louder against the theory of illegal combination than do the suspicions of plaintiff's counsel or any contrary evidence which plaintiff has produced. In fact, to the evidence which I have mentioned plaintiff produced no rebutting testimony at all.

And not only do the changes in their sales so prove by circumstance that there is here no illegal combination or agreement, but every witness in the case who was inquired of on the subject without any exception so directly testified. Some witnesses testified they would learn from their customers if National had put out a new price list and they would then call or write National to get one.

I see no impropriety in that.

Mr. Suttie of American Steel Foundries said he had to follow National's prices because the parts were all to exactly the same specifications and of the same standard quality so that no railroad would pay any other price for the same identical thing. The only difference was the imprint, the name plate on the parts.

His testimony and his reasoning sounds very cogent to me. It lends credence to the defense that prices are a matter of economics and competition resulting in a price to the public which is the result of the law of supply and demand and not the result of an unlawful combination.

It is claimed here that there is today allocation of customers. I think each defendant gets all the customers and all the business he can. The graphs which we have mentioned so prove.

[Allocation of Business]

I find no convincing evidence on this subject of either quotas or allocations. The chart compilations here are irrefutable. Of course, they contain only that period of time after 1945. Plaintiff made no effort to meet this evidence. Plaintiff in argument ignored this evidence.

When I consider the preeminent capacities of plaintiff's lawyers as they have so well demonstrated throughout these weeks, I believe they stayed away from the subject because they realized that this feature of the defense is absolutely true.

I find it true. I find that since January 1st, 1945 all of these defendants have been making every effort to hold and get customers and to take them away from each other because there is no other business to get. What business there is contracts and there are no future possibilities of expansion in this business. One is limited to what he can take away from somebody else.

["Mechanical Committee"]

The third circumstance here is the Mechanical Committee, and it is suggested that its activities are circumstances here proving an illegal combination.

Mr. Kerr for the defendants said that the Mechanical Committee serves a useful and lawful purpose. I believe it does.

Its work is scientific and mathematical and precise. I do believe patent or legal considerations have no influence whatsoever on what these precise scientific engineers do in their work. Theirs is an exact science.

They were criticised a little bit here for having read the reports of the United States Supreme Court, but I do not believe that such reading had any deleterious bearing on the work they do, nor any insincere connotation in its having been read.

From my observation of these men, I do not believe any consideration would cause them ever to produce any device but the best they could put together. I do not believe they would tolerate or permit any perversion of their art for any unlawful purpose such as would endanger the men who couple trains or those who ride them.

As to the Mechanical Committee's holding its own drawings and gages and the claim of their denying others access thereto, I do believe that whatever was done in this respect was done in the interest of standardization and in the interest of protecting standardization and in the interest of the safety of passengers and crews on trains.

I agree that standardization is necessary to prevent the manufacture of obsolete or inadequate parts which would endanger those who ride and those who work that others may ride.

Plaintiff's counsel suggests there is some illegality in the way in which the Mechanical Committee holds onto its drawings and gages; that this sort of secrecy indicates some unlawfulness in the way it retains its own property. Plaintiff's counsel is under the impression that the duplication of this coupler would be a prodigious and impossible task, and that it would be a terrible injustice if a prospect who wanted to get into this business had to go to some one of these defendants or the Mechanical Committee with his hat in his hand and ask, "How to make this thing," as counsel says.

What a catastrophe that if he wants something that somebody else now has as the result of that person's own creation, that he should have to ask his so-called competitor for it. Obviously if the defendants are his competitors, they have no way of knowing it as yet, have they? And the fact that he must ask is in itself a violation, plaintiff suggests.

Just what must manufacturers do to keep within the law? Must they go around with their drawings in their hand offering them to those who might possibly be enticed into becoming their competitors? Is it wrong to create something and to possess it and to wait for someone who did none of the work to ask for it? And if you want something that belongs to somebody else, because he put it all together, and you didn't put any of it together, were we not told long ago to "ask and we shall receive"? And whether one's hat is in his hand or not, it seems to me it is more just to tell one man to go through the red tape of speaking up for himself than it is to make a criminal out of one who didn't give up his possession because a prospective manufacturer who doesn't yet exist—according to the testimony in the case to date—has coveted his neighbor's goods and is willing to take them but is not willing to go through the indignity of asking for them.

It is my impression from what I have heard here that these defendants do a beautiful job mechanically of casting their parts, because to cast something means to throw—like casting a die or casting a fishing net. And in the early days they threw or dropped the hot metal into molds wherein patterns had once been placed to form an emptiness or vacuum, and after the metal cooled they then removed the sand from the box and they had a little piece of cast iron conformed to the hole in the sand which had been put there by a pattern.

You all know the calibrations on a one-inch ruler, the twelve little parts that go to make an inch. These men have mastered their art by their genius to the point they cast or throw their hot metal into a receptacle of some kind and it emerges to within one thirty-sixth of an inch, to a point where it takes no machining to complete the article.

The little machine that we had in here, the little coupler that we had in here looked very pretty and it was intended to look pretty. When you fellows are going home on the railroads tonight, take a look at the freight train on the adjoining track and look at the couplers. You won't find any of them shined up.

What a job to make these parts to within one thirty-sixth of an inch by casting. And it comes out so perfectly it doesn't require machining and it never requires lubrication. It works till it wears out. Who could improve on that?

You lawyers who work in Cleveland are well aware that this is a machine shop city, a city of toolmakers and gage makers. We make the tools which make the tools. But whenever we get a thousandth of an inch on a part, it takes machines. Our more precise work is in ten-thousandths.

I have seen a piece of steel expand a certain number of millionths of an inch when I tapped it with my forefinger because one-twentieth of a second of the heat from your forefinger can cause a piece of metal to expand a millionth of an inch. We have machines around here which so record.

What a wonderful thing that these people can turn out their product just in the form of a cast or casting. One wonders how any of us could improve on their work.

The more I hear about the Mechanical Committee, gentlemen, the more I marvel at the perfection of its productions.

[Plant Visitation]

Now as to the circumstance of reciprocally revealing costs and of plant visits and royalties.

If there were no competition between these defendants such as has been well and mathematically proven, I could understand the suspicions of plaintiff's counsel on these subjects. But as long as they are all giving each other a well-proved battle royal to take each other's customers away from the other fellow as well as they can, I see no legal harm in their fraternizations.

There was lots of visiting back and forth here. Engineers do it, just like bar associations, just like visiting lawyers and judges.

It seemed to me that the men who did the visiting gave far more cogent and logical reasons for it, and reasons far more true than the suggestion that it was all part of an illicit combination. They went to see new furnaces, new processes, new methods, and they went to many foundries belonging to many corporations other than these particular half dozen defendant companies.

When you listen to these highly-educated and trained engineers explaining their purposes and the benefits they or their companies derive in thus learning from others, the suggestion that it is all to facilitate a 40-year-old conspiracy becomes most untenable. Indeed, instead of a circumstance tending to prove guilt, it proves the contrary.

[Cost Information]

I don't believe or find that these defendants reciprocated cost information to get prices up, as part of an illegal combination at all. I think they did it to check costs with each other so that they could get their costs down.

I believe the evidence so shows. There was no chance to get labor and material costs down, so they checked costs with each other to see what else they could get down, and they gave pertinent examples of it to me. I find that plant visitation was all for the same ultimate purpose, to improve their work, to observe new machinery, to observe new methods. All done ultimately to reduce costs, because these defendants must compete with each other even in efficiency, because labor and material was increasing costs so much in one direction that it behooved them to cut costs in every other direction, if they could.

I find getting costs down by either of these methods of imitating the other fellow to cut costs or learning more efficient methods to better compete with him ultimately keeps prices down, too.

I find that cost information was here exchanged to improve productive efficiency and to lower costs. If costs were to be lower, it could come only from such costs because labor and material costs were beyond everybody's control.

The professional meetings of accountants had to do with an exchange of technical, theoretical professional ideas of organization in the steel castings industry. From the testimony they never had any discussions of pricing problems.

[Royalty Reports]

As to royalty reports, many industries and businesses furnish reports to others of their activities, such as trade associations, credit associations and others. I can see no violation in furnishing such reports.

They all show, insofar as this case is concerned, that the little one gets more business and the big one gets less. So I cannot see wherein royalty reports have the efficacy which is here claimed by the plaintiff's side.

[Lack of New Venture Capital]

Now the circumstance that lack of new venture capital proves that others are unlawfully excluded from this industry is something we should consider here.

There was a lot of talk about why no one else gets into this business, why in all these 50 years only three or four people asked. If it's so good why does everybody keep away from it except a few that were in it in the first place?

As to any inquiries seeking to get into this business since 1945, National alone received one in these last 13 years, and no other defendant even knew they had it. And the one it received, as I will mention later, I do not believe was of any serious consequence.

Now Mr. Kerr cited some economic factors which he said would account for the failure of others to go into this industry. He mentioned that the present capacity was adequate to meet the demand; that they are in a shrinking market—they have less cars now than 25 years ago; that special rigging and equipment would be required at great expense; and that their licensing policy to give licenses to any qualified manufacturer is fair to all.

Plaintiff claims that since no new competitors have come into the business that they have therefore been kept out. That's the intimation they make and the circumstance they wish me to follow.

Not once in all these weeks of trial have we learned of anybody in particular who desired to actually get into this business and who had the competency to get in the business, who was kept out.

I find that nobody ever wanted to get in. I find that nobody was kept out.

And the evidence before us and common knowledge on the subject indicates some good reasons why new venture capital would avoid it. The circumstance that no new candidates applied is no more cogent than the circumstance that any candidate with money would be very careful about applying. Venture capital is what we call "smart money," gentlemen. It doesn't make any silly mistakes. The question here is would it not have been silly and ridiculous for them to get in this kind of a business.

Now to prove its contention plaintiff has dug up over a half century search what it considers as real applicants for the business. I find from the evidence before us that the Ohio Brass, which is one of their candidates, if I may call them that, never intended to manufacture the standard coupler at all and so stated.

I find that another of these four or five over a 50-year period is the Maritime Steel matter. No license could be given them since the license for Canada had been given to the Canadian Steel Corporation to whom they were referred. They are an outfit looking for what those in the theatrical business would call an "angel." They want somebody to finance them. They'd get into the business if someone else paid. They had their hand out, too.

In the Southern Railway matter I find no proof to show defendants combined to exert the pressure herein claimed. Southern Railway weren't serious at all, and said so. They used the expression they were only "toying" with the idea. So I find Southern Railway never asked for a license and the evidence shows they didn't want one. As they said, they were toying with the idea of getting into the manufacture of coupler parts. When people "toy" with ideas, the Court shouldn't take them any more seriously than they did themselves.

In the Pratt & Letchworth matter we find they wanted information on the necessary procedures to manufacture a yoke, namely the Y-30.

They were told to whom they should write, to Symington-Gould who designed that yoke and to Buckeye who had a patent on the pin support. They were then told to ask the Chairman of the Mechanical Committee for drawings. They asked how to do that and they were told how to do that, and they were never heard from again.

To me none of this 50-year evidence in these four isolated cases or instances constitutes any circumstance in plaintiff's favor. To me it proves the exact opposite of what the plaintiff claims for it.

[Threatened Patent Suits]

It is further said that suits were improperly threatened by some of these defendants here as a matter of pressure, patent suits. They were going to be brought in three or four instances in over a 50-year period, namely in 1921, 1924 and in 1940.

May I say, gentlemen, if that's all the patent suits that were ever threatened, there wasn't any barratry involved.

Who has a better right to sue over patents than the patentors who are given such right by another branch of our own Government? Since there has been no such suit threatened in 17 years, it doesn't concern our injunction suit here very much, does it?

[Lack of New Entries—Reasons]

Plaintiff here says others are improperly kept out of this business. The defendants have proved nobody wants in.

After so proving the defense offers some very cogent reasons as to why nobody wants to get in.

We have a 20-page exhibit here—well, I can't quite find the name of it but it is this blue book which you all have, National Malleable's Exhibit 294, indicating it would cost a little over $900,000 for a foundry already well-equipped with its own machine shop set up, a foundry already in a going business, with its own plant in operation and with space for such use to become equipped to make the type of railroad parts with which we are here concerned.

There is evidence here by defendant ASF that the railroads are in an industry which is in a condition of contraction. Defendant ASF suggests that railroads are going out of business and losing business; that planes and buses are picking up their passenger service; that trucks are picking up their freight business. It is a matter of common knowledge that the industry is in some state of contraction; that planes give much faster travel to passengers at practically similar costs; and that buses charge passengers about one-half as much; and that the trucks which carry freight from door-to-door have become a great convenience to the public. And door-to-door means you are only dealing with one transporting company, and when you deal with a freight train you have to hire somebody to take your produce to the railroad dock, you pay the railroad to move it somewhere and then you pay somebody else to move it from that railroad dock to its destination. The trucks move door-to-door. They are a great convenience, gentlemen.

On the other hand it is equally a matter of common knowledge that capital of the size required here seeks to enter businesses which have a fair chance to both profit and expand. New sciences and arts now claim the attention of prospective capitalists. The aircraft industry does not have to buy the airports. Buses use the public roads. New capital has little interest in the purchase and maintenance of heavy equipment, tracks, roadbeds, bridges, signal equipment, and depots. I do believe that no part of the railroad business today has what it takes to entice new venture capital to risk itself, because it cannot either profit or expand and its future is comparatively dismal alongside of the investment opportunities in the ventures which entice America today, such as in the electronic and nuclear fields.

None of this was in the evidence except that which was said about buses, trains and planes. We all know as a matter of public knowledge investors aren't going to put their money into anything except that which looks like a winning venture with a capacity for some ultimate actual profit. As a matter of circumstantial evidence it is far more probable that venture capital stays out of this business because it doesn't want to get in rather than it is kept out by unlawful combination.

I find that nobody of the industry here decided to keep anybody out. The ones on the outside never evinced any desire to get in, and that means that over a 50-year period not one applicant evinced such desire. The reason[s] why they wouldn't are very apparent and those reasons are not the result of any illegality.

Transportation ever changes in this great country. The Ohio Canal made our city great back in 1832. A few years later came the railroads and the Canal went out of business. Buses, planes and trucks now push these railroads around a little bit.

Railroads are selling their depots. No railroad today can afford to replace its own bridges or buildings. Since our case began here—it doesn't hurt to say it for it cannot influence any jury very much, nor will it concern any finding I am making—our oldest railroad, the B. & O., asked for the privilege of ending its passenger service, and the two biggest wish to join each other, I presume if the within plaintiff doesn't object.

It's what we call in the divorce court a business marriage and here necessity is the shotgun. Up to now these two great railroads would never get under the same roof anywhere. Every road in Cleveland goes into our Terminal Building but one, and when this lawsuit was just middle-aged back in the 1920's and 1930's, the same two built great monumental depots in New York City so they could tell the world, in a sense, that no love was lost between them. But times have changed. All of this is worthy of illustration though it is not a circumstance before us by way of evidence.

Another feature which concerns venture capital is its desire, if it can do so and it has the choice to do as it will, to avoid any business subject to Governmental regulation, even though it be common carrier.

And I ask each of you good lawyers, forgetting the record and forgetting the lawsuit, since we had rent controls, which one of you ever heard of anybody in the form of venture capital who built one single house so he could rent it? At the same time, the venture capital which will no longer go into private homes will buy into industry which produces what goes into homes, such as cement and lumber and glass. The analysis of what causes people to invest or not to invest is a study far beyond our task today. But from the viewpoint of circumstantial evidence, the fact that no serious new investor took this business seriously in half a century doesn't prove that the door was shut against them. To me it proves they were too smart to step into any such financial trap.

Mr. Bernstein in his closing argument says that the defendants here have an intent to monopolize and that in favor of his contention is the fact that no new manufacturers have come into the picture in a long time. Against this contention is all the evidence we have had showing no serious competent applicant ever has applied, in addition to which it does appear to me that venture capital would be too intelligent to get into a business with no capacity for profit and no possibility for expansion, as I have outlined. This business never looked as good to venture capital as it seems to appear to the plaintiff.

Mr. Bernstein argues as to how defendants react when prospects appear who are concerned with the business. And from the activities of these various defendants he thereupon argued they just wouldn't let anybody in.

Now the truth is, gentlemen, that applicants of no really serious nature ever appeared on the scene except at very rare intervals and many years apart.

And the strongest conclusion one comes to is not how defendants reacted to keep them out, but the strong conclusion one gets is how repugnant this business must be when it elicits so little interest. It must be repellent because nobody wants to gamble when there is no chance to win.

I believe that is why there has been no venture capital here.

[Patent Control]

Circumstance No. 6 has to do with improper patent control.

The evidence shows that after the end of the Trust Agreement in 1944 there was need to continue patent licensing to enable manufacturers to avoid infringement. They were renewed on a two-year basis up to 1956, and are still in process.

Plaintiff's great complaint on this is as to the method. Since the protection of the people requires the continuity of some system of scientific and progressive efficiency such as been hereinbefore utilized, I can find no illegality in the preservation of that efficiency in the same hands as heretofore. The suggestion of change, in what amounts to the custodial care, suggested by Mr. Bernstein, of all these instrumentalities might or might not be effective. I don't know. It certainly isn't our function to authorize such experimentation with somebody else's property and somebody else's industry. Ours is to decide whether there is such current illegality here as to require current injunction.

It is true that after 1945 non-exclusive licenses were issued by defendants to each other. Price-fixing from that time on was eliminated, quotas thereafter were eliminated, concert of action after '45 was eliminated.

Since 1945 non-exclusive patent licenses have been issued to accomplish the interchange of patent rights necessary to continue the manufacture of the standard coupler, and these have been kept up on a two-year basis to date.

I can see no illegality in that.

Mr. Bernstein objects to the method and system of those who have patented these products and who have joined their various geniuses to standardize parts in the way in which they have issued licenses.

He says, and I quote, "They impose themselves as the authority to issue licenses." Since it pertains to their own patents in which the Government has guaranteed their property rights for the purpose of inventor encouragement, who else has any better right to exercise such authority?

And if patent laws give them authority, then can it be justly complained that they impose authority on themselves just because they decide how they will share it with others? If those having rights are not to be fairly permitted to share them with those to whom such rights can be safely entrusted, then shall some other agency be invented to hold and dispose of such property rights? I find from the evidence that no applications for licenses have been made since 1945, thirteen years ago. Since nobody wants one and nobody asks for one, I cannot consider in today's case for injunction this invisible man who has been conjured up with a hat in his hand and who has been around here for twelve years, if he exists.

I must find that since there has been no evidence that anybody wants one, that for lack of such proof, nobody wants one.

The National Malleable witnesses have said it is their policy to consider any qualified manufacturer for a license. I don't believe any qualified manufacturer has applied. There has been no such evidence here. I don't believe anyone has ever been excluded except that imagined personality that was invented here in the process of the case.

We find that Buckeye holds no patent here whatsoever. It operates completely on licenses from someone else to make what they have patented. The royalties are so nominal that a non-owner is at no disadvantage whatsoever. Royalties are never equal to one-half of one percent of the selling price, so the owners have taken no advantage whatsoever of the non-owners.

The Government has here suggested that the method followed in the renewal of licenses is a factor of what they consider a conspiracy herein. The success of Buckeye since 1945 disproves the claim. Holding no patents, operating on licenses from others, receiving them without asking for them as they have testified, they give the patent owners the biggest competitive headache they get.

[Theories of Case]

There has been some argument of counsel here which deserves particular mention.

Mr. Davis in argument calls attention to the fact that plaintiffs changed their theories during the case. He says they originally charged that after 1945 the manufacturers met and by discussion would fix prices among themselves and make agreements, and that later National would announce results and others would follow. But that they didn't then claim that National would make its own independent decisions and that others would follow as the evidence they have adduced has since disclosed.

I find herein that Moriarty did make his own independent decision on prices for National, and I find from the evidence of plaintiff that all others then followed National's prices as to couplers, in particular.

It does appear that as to this phase of the case the plaintiff shifted. It does appear that plaintiff did not amend. It does leave plaintiff to some degree in a situation wherein it seeks to advance the theory here that parallel business behavior on the point of similarity of price constitutes a violation of the Sherman Act, which it does not.

Counsel for Symington-Gould suggests here that if the plaintiff is right then a lot of fine people must have committed perjury. He says they get National's price list first from a friend at the New York Central, and then they call and get a copy.

But they never got a copy until after it has gone out to the trade.

I find from all the evidence that this is how it was done. There is no evidence to the contrary and I believe all those witnesses spoke the truth.

Plaintiff here contends that two-year leases imposed quotas on the little companies. Plaintiff's Exhibit 1143-1781 shows on tons shipped little Symington-Gould had 18.23 percent of all coupler business in 1954, and ASF, a big one, had 16.59. Mathematics can be very convincing, gentlemen.

Symington-Gould's official said that after 1945 the new licenses opened the way to solicit business everywhere. The doors were opened wide. I find that the mathematics here submitted have so proven.

Mr. Sellers for McConway & Torley says that while plaintiff's counsel cited [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,209] 316 U. S. 265 and [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,205] 306 U. S. 208, he forgot to cite [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,640] 346 U. S. 540 which overrules the two cases previously mentioned.

He also denies that the defendants are dominated because licenses must be renewed, and says his company receives them every two years without even asking for them.

He says they get all the business they can and the figures which we have particularly shown for them indicates that that is true.

Now Mr. Thomas for the AAR argues that the Bernstein proposal for changing this whole operation as he outlined it in argument would undermine the standardization which the Government has heretofore approved. Mr. Kerr had previously argued it would deprive defendant manufacturers of rights guaranteed by another branch of the Government.

Frankly after I heard how Mr. Bernstein was going to put the Court into this business, and after I heard his ideas as to how the business could be run right, if they weren't only so cheap, as he stated in his argument, the more I heard of his substitute committees, the better the present system looked to me, with all due respect to Mr. Bernstein as a lawyer.

[Unwitting Conspirator]

But my first concern is always as to whether or not plaintiff has here proved its case. Mr. Thomas quotes Mr. Bernstein as saying that the AAR has done something unwittingly here in failing to police what others have done. Unwittingly means unknowingly, unconsciously and not intentionally. Defendant AAR is really here charged with intentionally doing something which it did unintentionally. They are accused of being an unwitting conspirator.

I must confess that I have participated in criminal practice many years, both in prosecution and in defense and on the bench, too, and a charge of having been an unwitting conspirator is one I do not quite comprehend. I have always believed that a conspirator had some consciousness of the existence of the conspiracy of which he was a part.

[Boycott]

Mr. Thomas says that under the AAR rules any railroad may accept cars not equipped with standard couplers, and that no rule requires purchase of any special coupler. They recommend only adoption of standards. He says that they have encouraged, approved and recommended many railroad parts whether certain defendants liked it or not, and that they boycott no one.

Mr. Thomas says, and he argued quite logically on the subject, that Mr. Bernstein's proposal if ever put into effect would result in boycotts. Mr. Thomas gave us a detailed history of events in his Association, and I believe that what he said had a ring of truth in its every word. And I believe that he spoke truly when he attested to the honorable dealings of his clients over the years.

There is something about the ring of truth, which a great writer, Alexander Dumas, mentioned as having been strange when you hear it in a court room. And in his book on Les Miserables, the miserable, he said that when truth rang out even the judge had to listen.

When Mr. Thomas gave his recital on what his Association had done, I say again it had the ring of truth in it. I agree with Mr. Thomas that Mr. Bernstein's suggestion as to how this business ought to be run would not give us in this instance any panacea.

I agree with Mr. Thomas that his people boycotted no one.

[Final Argument]

Now Mr. Bernstein in his final argument said that no one will appear on the horizon tomorrow to go into this business. Well, I think that is quite true because no one has appeared on the horizon for the last 50 years to go into the business.

I don't think there is any question but what plaintiff's witnesses here who were connected with the defendants' case also told the truth throughout when they said there was no combination. I noticed the engineers in particular—and they have come in for a little criticism in this particular—they were so anxious to explain their answers particularly on engineering problems, because in their work whoever asks a question must be given a mathematically complete answer because otherwise terrible consequences might ensue, to the point where to cut down on a lot of conversation not legally responsive, defense counsel had to ask me a number of times to strike the unresponsive answer of these witnesses. They were so anxious to talk they couldn't stop. I have always found men that did that quite honest. They are too anxious, one might say, to limit their answers, and I am not thinking of verbose individuals because engineers are not.

Mr. Bernstein asks in his final argument, would the defendants license an outsider at nominal royalties today? I don't know the answer to his speculative question. And since no competent bidder ever appeared, one doesn't know.

Mr. Bernstein says, "Let us predict the future." As I have said, gentlemen, in this business there is no future. The railroads as a class are appreciated in wartime because no one else can move heavy material in bad weather, and no one else gets through in floods or catastrophes. But other than in this one war service, as a rule their contribution to industry is quite unappreciated except by those who know them well.

It does appear to me as if the contraction in their business will result in a constriction and ultimate strangulation. I don't know what Mr. Bernstein meant when he said let us predict the future, but I do believe in this business the lack of future is what has kept others from investing in it.

[Monopoly]

Mr. Bernstein argues that there is monopoly here. One of the general characteristics of monopolies is that we find them in good businesses which are profiting and expanding, which everybody else wants to get into, and we have people on the inside who have such a good thing they do not want to let anybody else in because they are so jealous of the good thing they have. We are not dealing here with any such attractive future possibility.

This indicia of monopolies is conspicuously absent here. I see no such monopoly going on today. I see no cognizable danger of recurrent violation here.

If there has been violation in the past, and I am really not called upon to find there has or has not been up to 1945, there is surely no cognizable danger of its recurrence today, thirteen years thereafter. Whether or not there has been a violation in the past, my question here is as to whether or not injunction is required today to forestall future violations.

Mr. Bernstein talks about the American Tobacco case, [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,468] 328 U. S. 781, and instructions to a jury in such case, which instructions were approved by the Supreme Court. And he defines monopoly as being a joint acquisition or maintenance, from such case, of a conspiracy formed for the purpose and to such extent that they are able to exclude others from such business, accompanied by intention so to do.

I find no unlawful acquisition, no unlawful maintenance, no unlawful exclusion, and no unlawful intention here.

I find quite a battle for business among these defendants in an industry so unprepossing that in a period of 50 years no manufacturer of any competence was ever interested in entering the field. One or two letters evinced no such interest.

If rivalry is a stimulant to industrial success, which was another test mentioned by Mr. Bernstein as he quoted from these decisions, then surely the rivalry here over the last thirteen years indicates that this is not a monopoly.

Mr. Bernstein quotes another U. S. opinion to the effect: "No monopolist monopolizes unconscious of what they are doing."

Now, it is time the AAR learned of that because they are here accused of having gone into a monopoly unwittingly.

[How To Run Business]

As to Mr. Bernstein's final suggestion as to how this industry should be run; I must say I cannot agree with him that the Court should experiment to the extent he asks, and I must say I see no particular efficacy in the suggestion. I can understand his opinion on the law, and I can understand his opinion on evidence, but when it comes to running somebody else's business, gentlemen, even if it isn't in the record here, it is worthy of comment that there is a human tendency to recognize a weakness in another when he's on the job—and every time you sit and look at television you imagine how much better you could do if you were only in that boxing contest, you can tell exactly when some fighter should have ducked, you can tell exactly how he should have swung and what kind of uppercut he should have brought up from the floor; when you watch a football game you can see so many opportunities of interception and you wonder why these athletes don't intercept and you figure you could have intercepted; it's got so we build special places, at least in this town, for observers who are called sidewalk superintendents to watch buildings going up and figure how much better it could be done—and I do not say this critically.

I am trying to get at the proposition that we lawyers cram our minds for a lawsuit this week and empty it Sunday afternoon and get ready to cram our minds for another lawsuit next week. Our great art is the capacity to fill our minds and then empty them as if it were a sieve to get ready for the next case.

Jim Davis had to argue a case in the United States Supreme Court within the last week in the middle of trial here. He had to forget all about this six-week venture in this room and go down there, and then he had to forget about his case there—and he hasn't yet told us how he came out—and get back here and then cram himself about this. Our art is to get it together and then tear it apart for the next lawsuit.

We should leave the engineers to their own field, because generally, and I do not say this unkindly.

I have noticed all my life when lawyers become businessmen or turn into real estaters or insurance brokers they always become that much less of a lawyer, and I think we should go on the assumption here that these people have done a good job and they know better how to protect and preserve their industry for the benefit of these United States than we who learned it for the purpose of a lawsuit and must forget it for the immediate purpose of the following lawsuit.

[Cases]

I find that the case of Cole v. Hughes Tool [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,857], 215 Federal 2nd 924 has application here. In the facts which it outlines it has more facts resembling ours than any other case in the books, I believe.

I do not find the Interstate Circuit case [1932-1939 TRADE CASES ¶ 55,205], 306 U. S. 208, of application. I cannot find for the plaintiff on it that as a matter of law, as plaintiff suggests, he is entitled to such finding. I see no cogent similarity between that case and ours.

I think the case of U. S. v. Grant [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,493], 345 U. S. 629 is of direct application here. It requires a cognizable danger of recurrent violation of which I here find none.

The same is true of U. S. v. Oregon Medical Society [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,264], 343 U. S. 326, stating that the sole function of injunction is to forestall future violations of which I here see no danger.

[Court Observation]

I would like to make one observation here. I believe that of all the graphs before us, all the information before us as to the proof of the intense competition between these parties since 1945, and the fluctuation of their sales as they all fought to take some part of that 100 percent of the business away from each other for there was no other business they could take or procure, if all the proof before us here about the efforts these defendants have been making in competition with each other since the wraps of the Trust Agreement have ceased to limit them, if all that was known to Lewis Bernstein before the civil and criminal actions were filed, I do not believe they would ever have been filed.

In our war with the criminal class we always ask them what they have to say about any crime of which they are accused. In criminal procedure we give all a chance to talk so that if their defense be that their act was excusable or justifiable or accidental or in self-defense or intentional or not, they may have the privilege of saying so.

Here it seems that all these defendants were ever asked was to furnish information against themselves. And our legal life is so constituted that the defense later on didn't dare expose its defense after these actions were filed.

It is a shame that somewhere along the line Mr. Bernstein didn't know of the compilations of these graphs showing the fluctuations of these sales as appear in this particular exhibit showing how some went up and some went down and only one appeared to be stationary whatsoever, and how the big ones went down here and how the little ones crept up in the years particularly between '48 and '57. This complete mathematical demonstration of the falsity of the premise of the plaintiff here in assuming that just because there are so many people in the business they must keep everybody out, and because they once fix prices they must now be fixing prices in the same way as was outlined, as Mr. Davis claimed, in the petition here. Of course the proof had to do with a different matter, namely, that of following the leader, as it is called.

It seems unfair that men of the high standing with which we here dealt, and companies of the high standing with which we have here dealt, should suffer such stigma and disgrace and publicity, and financial loss, and they and their familiaries [sic] and friends should be so chagrined, when it was all avoidable in the first place, had all the facts been known—and I blame nobody because that seems to be the regular system.

But it does seem comparatively unfair that they do not get the same rights as would be given anyone else accused of any other kind of crime. I will say again, having observed the competency and fairness and courage of Government counsel here, I do not believe if he originally knew the material which was evolved on this defense that we would be here at all. And I say that because I honor and respect him.

Now all of you lawyers must appreciate that I cannot here cover every possible difference of opinion between your contending sides on each and every item on which you have differed over all these weeks.

I have tried to keep track of this evidence with voluminous notes, and I have sought to follow and digest or agree with or disagree with every point all counsel has made for the purpose of telling you crystal clear what I ultimately find from all the evidence in the case and all the law you have cited to me.

[Findings]

I find no conspiracy and no unlawful combination here whatsoever, nor any unlawful price-fixing or quotas or improper controls over littler companies.

I find that the evidence discloses that lack of any inquiries since 1945 as to the possibility of getting into the coupler manufacturing business is due to economic causes which have been mentioned, and not to any illegalities on the part of these defendants. I see no requirement whatsoever that injunction be here granted.

I find that there is no activity going on at the present time or likely to occur in the near future which is either properly susceptible of injunction or which would justify equitable relief in any form.

I cannot recognize any need for this Court's attempting to operate this industry along the lines of Mr. Bernstein's plan.

[Judgment]

I find that this complaint should be dismissed in its entirety and judgment rendered for defendants.

I now ask counsel at your early convenience—and it applies to all counsel—to submit written findings of fact and conclusions of law and journal entry in accordance with my verbal findings herein.

I thank counsel for the honor of your having graced our court room for these past two months.

All of which is said to the objection and exception of plaintiff.

Now, is there anything else, gentlemen?

Mr. Bernstein: Plaintiff has nothing further, your Honor.

The Court: Anything else, gentlemen? (No response.)

The Court: We will now take an adjournment, Mr. Rogers.

[¶ 68,891] John P. O'Shea, et al. v. Tile Layers Union, Local 19, et al.

In the California District Court of Appeal, First District, Division Two. Civ. No. 17386. Dated November 21, 1957.

Appeal from a judgment of the Superior Court of Alameda County and from an order granting an injunction. CHARLES WADE SNOOK, Judge. Modified and affirmed.

California Cartwright Act

Combinations and Conspiracies Under State Laws—Labor Unions—Picketing—Legality of Collective Bargaining Provision Restricting Methods of Tile Installation—Preliminary Injunction.—Tile contractors were entitled to a preliminary injunction restraining a union of tile layers from striking or picketing for the purpose of securing or enforcing a provision of a proposed collective bargaining contract which would prohibit the application of tile in any area exposed to water unless setting beds were first installed in mortar backing by qualified tile layers. Evidence that an association of competing tile contractors secured the contract provision, that the plaintiff contractors competed with members of the association, and that the plaintiff contractors' competition would be restricted if they were unable to use an assertedly cheaper method of tile installation could warrant the inference that a combination was formed by the union and the association to restrict trade in violation of the Cartwright Act. The business of installing tile is trade or commerce within the meaning of the Cartwright Act. The Act embraces far more than the mere sale of tangible commodities. The defendants' contention that their activity was exempt from the operation of the Cartwright Act was rejected.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2385, 2449.05.

Combinations and Conspiracies Under State Laws—Procedure—Right to Injunctive Relief—Preliminary Injunction Against Labor Union—Scope of Injunction.—A preliminary injunction was modified to prohibit a union of tile layers from striking or picketing for the purpose of securing or enforcing a provision of a proposed collective bargaining contract which would prohibit the application of tile in any area exposed to water unless setting beds were first installed in mortar backing by qualified tile layers. The trial court erred in making an injunction which would prohibit any strike or picketing by the union, even for objectives wholly unrelated to the issue in dispute. Also, the court erred in prohibiting the union and an association of tile contractors from enforcing such a provision in an existing agreement between them because their agreement was not the subject of attack in the instant action.

Although the Cartwright Act does not specifically provide for injunctive relief, such relief is available to one injured by a violation of the Act.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2421.05, 2453.05.

For the appellants: P. H. McCarthy, Jr., F. Nason O'Hara, and Herbert S. Johnson.

For the respondents: Wallace B. Colthurst and Orlando J. Bowman.

Action for injunction and for damages under the Cartwright Act. Judgment for plaintiffs modified and affirmed.

[Parties]

DRAPER, Justice [In full text]: This is an action for injunction and damages under the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 16700-16758). Plaintiffs are tile contractors, and are nine of the approximately 25 members of Tile Contractors Association of Northern California, Inc. (hereinafter called "association"). Defendant Peninsula Tile Contractors Association has about 30 tile contractor members, who do business principally in San Mateo, Santa Clara and San Benito Counties. Defendant Tile Layers Union, Local 19, has jurisdiction extending to 16 counties of Northern California. The remaining defendants are officers and members of defendant union. Upon affidavits and brief oral testimony preliminary injunction was issued. Defendants appeal from that injunction and the order granting it.

[Contract Provision—Picketing]

Association and union were parties to a collective bargaining agreement which was to expire March 31, 1956. The agreement between union and Peninsula, by its terms, was to continue into 1957. However, it was reopened a year before its expiration date, and the parties then added a provision that "in order to protect the public from failures resulting from inferior installations, no tile will be applied in any shower, tub back, or other area exposed to water unless setting beds are first installed in mortar backing by qualified tile layers." In its negotiations with association, the union sought a comparable provision, which association refused. Picketing of respondents' business places began, and this action was commenced.

[Merits of Methods]

It appears that the "conventional" method of installing ceramic tile is in mortar. In recent years, a method of installing tile by use of mastic adhesives has been developed. This method permits use of gypsum and plasterboard backings. Many pages of the affidavits in this case are devoted to the respective merits of the two methods. Appellants do not object to the use of mastic, but contend that affixing of tile to plasterboard and gypsum backings result in "failures" because the backings deteriorate when water reaches them. Respondents assert that, when properly used, this method results in fewer failures than does the mortar backing method. Each side insists it is serving the public interest, appellants in preventing the falling of the homeowner's shower tile, and respondents in saving him money while preventing the addition of tile to his bathwater. It would seem that this issue should be determined by the building codes or in the market, rather than the courts. However, to the extent that it is relevant, the issue has been determined against appellants in the trial court. Under long established rules, it is the trial, rather than the appellate, court which resolves the fact issues.

[Right to Injunctive Relief]

The statute here in question prohibits "a combination of capital, skill or acts . . . to create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce" (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16720, subd. (a)), and authorizes civil action by "any person who is injured in his business or property" by such combination (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16750). Although the act does not specifically provide for injunctive relief, such relief is available to one injured by a violation of the Cartwright Act (Kold Kist, Inc. v. Amalgamated Meat Cutters etc., Local No. 421 [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,695], 99 Cal. App. 2d 191 [221 P. 2d 724]).

[Trade Restriction]

In the case at bar, there is some evidence that it was Peninsula which sought and secured the contract provision limiting use of mastic adhesives upon plasterboard or gypsum backings. There is also some evidence that respondents compete with the members of Peninsula, and that their competition will be restricted if they are unable to use the assertedly cheaper method of plasterboard backing. On appeal from granting of a preliminary injunction, we do not have the benefit of findings. There was evidence contradicting that summarized above, but we must assume that the trial court resolved the conflict in respondents' favor. The evidence, thus viewed, could warrant an inference that appellants' combination was formed to restrict trade.

[Cartwright Act]

Appellants argue that the restriction here is merely upon the use of mastic adhesives, and not upon trade or commerce in them. They cite federal cases (Industrial Association v. United States, 268 U. S. 64 [45 S. Ct. 403, 69 L. Ed. 849]; United States v. Bay Area Painters etc. Committee, 49 F. Supp. 733) for the rule that restriction of the use of a commodity is not restriction upon its sale. But those cases deal with the federal antitrust acts, and hold that limitation upon local use of a product manufactured outside this state is not a restriction upon interstate trade in the product. Here the gravamen of the complaint is not the limitation of sales of mastic adhesives, but is the restriction of use of a construction method in the building of houses. The business of installing tile is itself trade or commerce. The Cartwright Act embraces far more than the mere sale of tangible commodities (Speegle v. Board of Fire Underwriters [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,493], 29 Cal. 2d 34 [172 P. 2d 867]).

Of course, whether that trade or commerce is restricted turns upon fact issues.

Appellants also argue that the Cartwright Act does not apply to a combination of laborers for the purpose of improving conditions of employment. "[L]abor . . . is not a commodity" within the meaning of the act (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 16703). Full freedom of employees to associate to negotiate the terms and conditions of their employment is the declared policy of this state (Lab. Code, § 923). These provisions have been held to except from the operation of the Cartwright Act combinations of laborers for the purpose of furthering their interests (Schweizer v. Local Joint Executive Board [1953 Trade Cases ¶ 67,620], 121 Cal. App. 2d 45 [262 P. 2d 568]), and this exception is recognized where the object of the labor combination is reasonably related to wages, hours, or conditions of employment (C. S. Smith Met. Market Co. v. Lyons, 16 Cal. 2d 389 [106 P. 2d 414]; Los Angeles Pie Bakers Assn. v. Bakery Drivers [1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,657], 122 Cal. App. 2d 237 [264 P. 2d 615]).

There is evidence that the use of mortar setting beds in tile laying requires more time than the use of board backings and mastic adhesives. The federal rule appears to be that it is a legitimate labor objective to oppose the use of time-saving devices which will reduce employment (United States v. Bay Area Painters, supra, 49 F. Supp. 733; United States v. Carrozzo, 37 F. Supp. 191 [affirmed without opinion in United States v. International Hodcarriers, 313 U. S. 539 (61 S. Ct. 839, 85 L. Ed. 1508)]). However, the particularly strange anomaly of this case is that respondents plead and offer proof that the union's objection is based upon the theory of preserving work time, while appellants plead and offer proof to the contrary. We can only asssume that the trial court decided the issue in favor of respondents, although against their contention. Appellants do argue that their purpose is to improve the quality of tilework afforded to the public, that this is a legitimate labor objective, and that thus this agreement is excepted from the operation of the Cartwright Act. The cases cited for this view do not appear to support it. Minkoff v. Jaunty Junior, Inc., 36 N. Y. S. 2d 507, upheld a collective bargaining contract which provided for contributions from employers and union to support an advertising campaign to increase public use of garments manufactured in the New York area. Bay Area Painters etc. Committee v. Orack [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,774], 102 Cal. App. 2d 81 [226 P. 2d 644], upheld an agreement of employers for the purpose of policing their industry to assure that contractors lived up to the terms of their collective bargaining agreements. Neither situation is comparable to that presented here. In any case, the evidence was in conflict as to the relative advantage to the purchaser of the two methods, and this conflict was resolved against appellants.

[Trial Court's Discretion]

Upon appeal from the granting or denial of a preliminary injunction, not only is the trial court's determination of fact issues binding, if supported by substantial evidence (Palm Springs etc. Co. v. Kieberk Corp., 37 Cal. App. 2d 642 [100 P. 2d 346]), but a broad discretion is vested in the trial court as to the action to be taken upon the facts it finds (People v. Gordon [1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,916], 105 Cal. App. 2d 711 [234 P. 2d 287]; People v. Black's Food Store [1940-1943 Trade Cases ¶ 56,058], 16 Cal. 2d 59 [105 P. 2d 361]). Still further, the burden is upon the appellant to make a clear showing of abuse of that discretion (Remillard Brick Co. v. Dandini, 47 Cal. App. 2d 63 [117 P. 2d 432]; People v. Gordon, supra). In the light of these principles, reversal is not warranted here. Of course, nothing herein contained is to be construed as expressing any view as to the weight of the evidence, or as to the proper ultimate disposition of the action.

The ultimate rights of the parties are not determined by granting or denial of a preliminary injunction (27 Cal. Jur. 2d 114). Appeal from such granting or denial can settle little in a case where the trial court's exercise of its discretion rests in any substantial part upon the determination of fact issues. In the end, the case is returned to the trial court for the full trial which has not yet been had, with the prospect of still another appeal from that judgment. In view of the priority accorded such actions, the case could be disposed of in the trial court and be well on the way to final disposition long before the appeal relating to the preliminary stages is completed. The value of injunctive relief as a means of settling labor disputes has been doubted (Park & T. Import Corp. v. International etc. of Teamsters, 27 Cal. 2d 599, 608-609 [165 P. 2d 891, 162 A. L. R. 1426]).

[Legitimate Objective Claimed]

Appellants also contend that their demand for restriction of use of plasterboard backings is a legitimate labor objective because of a proposed contract provision that defects must be repaired by the workman on his own time. But the only fair construction of this provision is that it applies only where the workmanship is faulty, and where the material is inadequate. Thus the burden on the employee is unrelated to the backing used.

[Scope of Injunction]

Appellants also assert that the injunction issued is too broad in its scope. On its face, the injunction would prohibit any strike or picketing by appellant union, even for objectives wholly unrelated to the issue here in dispute. The prohibition should be limited to such strike or picketing as is for the purpose of securing or enforcing the disputed section 2(a) of the proposed agreement (Park & T. Import Corp. v. International etc. of Teamsters, supra). Also, the injunction bars the union and Peninsula from enforcing the agreement now in effect between them. That agreement is not the subject of attack in this action. Indeed, respondents allege that it is the extension of like provisions to them which will diminish competition, and the inference is inescapable that enforcement of the existing agreement will have the opposite effect. Thus respondents are not parties injured by the Peninsula agreement, if it be not extended to them. This prohibition should be eliminated.

The preliminary injunction is modified in the respects just outlined. As so modified, the injunction and the order granting it are affirmed. In accordance with stipulation on file each party shall bear his own costs.

KAUFMAN, P. J., and DOOLING, J., concurred.

[¶ 68,892] In Re: Petroleum Industry Investigation.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, at Alexandria. Dated December 23, 1957.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Grand Jury Proceedings—Production of Documents—Subpoena Duces Tecum—Motion To Quash or Modify.—A motion to quash or modify a subpoena duces tecum directing a petroleum company to produce records before a grand jury investigating alleged violations of the antitrust laws in the petroleum industry was granted to the extent that the court found that the universality of descriptions rendered certain subpoena items oppressive and unsustainable. The court found that, in other items of the subpoena, this fault was avoided by connecting the demand, through reference, to a certain product or aspect of the business.

In considering a motion to quash or modify a subpoena duces tecum served in a grand jury investigation, the court can be guided only by general principles. "With the inquiry plainly within the province of the grand jury, the guides of the court are these: the papers sought must be relevant to the inquiry, they must be 'particularly' described, and the demand must not impose an 'unreasonable' burden upon the citizen." "Particularly" is "a commensurate term—not absolute—with its breadth never greater than the purpose and knowledge of the inquisitor require."

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8021.625.

For the United States: Gordon V. Spivack and John E. McDermot, Jr., Department of Justice, Washington, D. C.

For the petitioner: John J. Wilson, Washington, D. C., and Amzy B. Steed, New York, N. Y., for The Texas Co.

For a prior opinion of the U. S. District Court, Eastern District of Virginia, see 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,774.

Memorandum by the Court on Motion of the Texas Company To Quash Subpoena Duces Tecum

ALBERT V. BRYAN, District Judge [In full text]: The subpoena duces tecum directed to The Texas Company and returnable before the grand jury on December 13, 1957 is assailed by the respondent as in part unreasonably broad, hence oppressive. It calls for documents under twenty-eight headings. A motion to quash the subpoena, or in the alternative to restrict its sweep, in regard to fourteen of the items, details the objections and invokes the Fourth Amendment. Rule 17(c) Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

Compliance with these items, Texas says, would entail a search of so wide a field, and require an examination of such a vast number and volume of records, that the task would noticeably impede the conduct of regular business. The fourth subpoena against the Company, this one spans more than eight years. Counsel estimates that the documents to be canvassed would run into the thousands. The great expense of the undertaking is avouched as an additional element of the subpoena's oppressiveness. Some 35,000 papers, counsel asserts, have on the previous demands in this case been produced by Texas. This, he says, necessitated the inspection of hundreds of thousands of documents.

[Policy Considerations]

Uncommon difficulties arise in the consideration of a motion of this kind. The court must maintain a counterpoise between freedom of inquiry for the grand jury and security from unreasonable search for the citizen; yet, unlike, proceedings in its open forum, the court does not know the immediate aim and object of the grand jury's quest. Interrogation of the grand jury to the point is hardly practicable. Additionally, it might violate the policy of privacy long accorded a grand jury inquest.

[General Principles]

In this limited light the court can be guided in decision only by general principles. By analogy these would seem to be, mutatis mutandis, those prescribed by the Fourth Amendment for a valid search. With the inquiry plainly within the province of the grand jury, the guides of the court are these: the papers sought must be relevant to the inquiry, they must be "particularly" described, and the demand must not impose an "unreasonable" burden upon the citizen. Hale v. Henkel, 1906, 201 U. S. 43, 76; Wilson v. United States, 1911, 221 U. S. 361, 376; Okla. Press Pub. Co. v. Walling, 1946, 327 U. S. 186, 209. Of course, "particularly" is here a commensurate term—not absolute —with its breadth never greater than the purpose and knowledge of the inquisitor require.

[Grand Jury Inquiry]

The inquiry before the grand jury is whether the Federal antitrust laws have been violated. As outlined in the warrants of the Deputy Attorney General to the attorneys appearing for the Government before the grand jury, the inquiry is especially directed to "the manufacture, distribution, purchase, sale, processing and storage of petroleum and petroleum products." While the grand jury is not tethered to that exploration, it is indisputably the issue by which relevancy here must be judged.

[Generality of Subpoena]

Generality is the first ground of the attack of The Texas Company's motion. It charges that the designation of the papers adopted in items 13-19, 21-26 and 28 of the subpoena is so expansive that it infolds utterly irrelevant records. Without foregoing its objection of oppressiveness, Texas suggests that if the call were more specific, the hardness of the subpoena would be eased. It points out that its business has multiple phases not within the ambit of the inquiry, such as tires, real estate, advertising, office supplies, personnel, employees' equipment and a myriad of other categories. Initially the court required production of Texas' master file index, but Texas explains that even the indication of the documents by index number is not sufficiently explicit. The reason is that all of the Company's lines of endeavor as they affect a single subject are referenced under the title or number of that topic, thus placing thereunder files of numerous fields in no wise akin to the theme of the investigation.

[Government's Contentions]

Counsel for the Government, in equal earnestness and sincerity, believes that the subpoena is as particular, and as considerate of the respondent, as the compass of the inquiry will allow. He emphasizes that the designation now used proved quite effectual in the subpoena of July 15, 1957, which for a briefer period asked for records on the same subjects as now listed. Texas readily admits that it did not demur to the previous call, mainly because of the relative reasonableness of the period—twelve months. But it cites that experience as demonstrating both the irrelevance and oppression of the instant subpoena—the irrelevance appearing from the paucity of germane documents found among the thousands embraced by the descriptions, the oppression evidenced by the tremendous time and effort required for the answer. A priori, Texas contends, the burden of an eight-year space of discovery would be unbearable.

[Ruling]

Whether, rid of this irrelevance, the subpoena would not be unfairly onerous is not now decided. At present the court rules only that the universality of their descriptions renders subpoena items 13-19, 21-26 and 28 oppressive and unsustainable. In other items this fault has been avoided by connecting the demand, through reference, to a certain product or aspect of the business. No reason appears why more precise language cannot be employed in the disputed sections, conceding that only reasonable and relative exactitude of description is required. Each of the designations in question should be suitably limited. The wanted material should be related to crude petroleum or certain of its products and, at the same time, related to some activity of The Texas Company immediately a part of, or some conduct directly affecting, "the manufacture, distribution, purchase, sale, processing and storage" of crude petroleum or the product or products named. To this extent the motion of Texas will be granted.

[¶ 68,893] E. L. Bowen and Company, Incorporated v. American Motors Sales Corporation, Hudson Motor Division, Successor in title to Hudson Sales Corporation.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, Norfolk Division. Civil Action No. 2088. Filed July 9, 1957.

Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts

Combinations and Conspiracies—Monopolies—Refusal to Renew Automobile Dealer Franchise—Legality.—An automobile dealer's action charging, among other things, that an automobile sales company cancelled its dealer franchise, not during the term of the franchise, but at the termination of the franchise in violation of the Clayton and Sherman Antitrust Acts was dismissed on the authority of Schwing Motor Co., Inc. v. Hudson Sales Corp., et al., 1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,564, 68,292.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.785; Monopolies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2610.720; Exclusive Dealing, Vol. 1, ¶ 4009.

For the plaintiff: LeRoy T. Canoles, Jr., Norfolk, Va., and Goldblatt & Lipkin, Norfolk, Va.

For the defendant: Williams, Cocke, Worrell & Kelly, Norfolk, Va.

Memorandum

[Causes of Action—State Law]

WALTER E. HOFFMAN, District Judge [In full text except for omissions indicated by asterisks]: The complaint filed herein by an enfranchised dealer in Hudson automobiles alleges six causes of action against defendant as successor in title and interest to Hudson Sales Corporation. From 1937 until September 30, 1953, plaintiff was known as a "Master Dealer" handling new and used cars in the City of Portsmouth, Virginia, and surrounding areas, under annual contracts, the last of said contracts continuing the franchise from September 24, 1952, to September 30, 1953. Summarizing the allegations of the complaint and the motion to dismiss, it appears:

1. As to first cause of action:

A. Plaintiff claims damages for cancellation of the franchise, not during the term of said contract, but at the termination thereof, in alleged violation of § 46-534(3) of the Code of Virginia, 1950, as amended, which reads as follows:

"It is unlawful for any manufacturer, factory branch, distributor or distributor branch, or any field representative, officer, agent or any representative whatsoever of any of them:

. . .

"(3) Unfairly, without due regard to the equities of a dealer and without just provocation, to cancel the franchise of such dealer."

Plaintiff states that by reason of the violation of the quoted statute said cancellation occurring contemporaneously with or subsequent to the termination of the contract on September 30, 1953, plaintiff lost future profits, good will, equipment and fixtures purchased in furtherance of its dealership, and has, in effect, been put out of business. The cancellation is alleged to be without just provocation in that defendant's predecessor, Hudson Sales Corporation, acted unlawfully, maliciously, wilfully, wantonly and unfairly, without due regard to the equities of the dealer.

* * *

2. As to second cause of action:

A. Incorporating by reference the allegations of the first cause of action, plaintiff asks damages for defendant predecessor's unlawful, malicious, wilful and wanton acts in coercing, or attempting to coerce, plaintiff to accept delivery of automobiles, parts and accessories, not ordered by plaintiff, in violation of § 46-534(1) of the Code of Virginia, 1950 (the first paragraph of which has been heretofore quoted and will not be repeated); § 46-534(1) reading:

"(1) To coerce, or attempt to coerce any dealer to accept delivery of any motor vehicle or vehicles, parts or accessories therefor, or any other commodities, which shall not have been ordered by such dealer."

* * *

3. As to third cause of action:

A. Again incorporating by reference all prior allegations, plaintiff alleges that defendant's predecessor unlawfully, maliciously, wilfully and wantonly threatened to cancel plaintiff's franchise unless it accepted delivery of vehicles, parts, accessories and other commodities not ordered by plaintiff, in violation of § 46-534(2) of the Code of Virginia, 1950 (the first paragraph of which has been heretofore quoted and will not be repeated); § 46-534(2) reading:

"(2) To coerce, or attempt to coerce any dealer to enter into any agreement with such manufacturer, factory branch, distributor or distributor branch, or representative thereof, or do any other act unfair to such dealer, by threatening to cancel any franchise existing between such manufacturer, factory branch, distributor, distributor branch or representative thereof and such dealer."

* * *

It will be noted that the foregoing three causes of action are grounded upon the Virginia statutes referred to above.

The fourth cause of action, after incorporating all prior allegations, alleges certain acts of defendant's predecessor allegedly having taken place during the period of the contract where lists of plaintiff's customers and prospective customers were submitted to other dealers by Hudson Sales Corporation, and advertising data was sent to said customers and prospective customers in behalf of plaintiff's competitors; all of which is alleged to be in violation of the final contract between the parties. Plaintiff seeks a recovery under this cause of action for loss of profits, loss of value of equipment and fixtures, loss of value of good will, and loss of value of its repair shop and used car trade, allegedly by reason of defendant's unlawful, malicious, wilful and wanton acts. * * *

In the fifth cause of action, after incorporating by reference all prior allegations, plaintiff asks damages by reason of the alleged failure of defendant's predecessor to repurchase parts, accessories and special tools as allegedly provided by the final contract between the parties. * * *

[Alleged Antitrust Violations]

The sixth cause of action, after incorporating by reference all prior allegations, is grounded upon the alleged violations of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, 15 U. S. C., § 1-7 and the Clayton Anti-Trust Act, 15 U. S. C., § 1-27, relating to a conspiracy in restraint of trade and the creation of a monopoly.

[Motion to Dismiss Granted]

The defendant's motion to dismiss the sixth cause of action is well founded. The factual situation is substantially similar to Schwing Motor Co. v. Hudson Sales Corp. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,292], 138 F. Supp. 899, affirmed per curiam by the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,564], 239 F. (2d) 176. But for the provisions of the Virginia law as referred to in the first three causes of action, Schwing would be authority for the dismissal of all except the fourth and fifth causes of action in this controversy.

* * *

* * * Under authority of Schwing Motor Co. v. Hudson Sales Corp., supra, the motion to dismiss the sixth cause of action will be granted.

* * *

[¶ 68,894] General Electric Co. v. Two Guys From Massapequa, Inc.

In the New York Supreme Court, New York County, Special Term, Part I. 138 N. Y. L. J., No. 122, page 4. Dated December 24, 1957.

New York Fair Trade (Feld-Crawford) Act

Fair Trade—Enforcement of Fair Trade Prices—Violation of Injunction—Contempt.—A fair trader's motion to punish a corporate defendant for making retail sales below the agreed price in violation of an injunction was held in abeyance and the matter referred to a referee where there was a conflict in facts as to whether the corporation was the proper party defendant, whether the sales were made with its knowledge, and whether the fair trader, if the corporation was the wrong party, had knowledge of that fact.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3380.34.

[Contempt Proceeding]

CONLON, Justice [In full text]: In this matter the plaintiff seeks an order to punish the defendant for contempt for making retail sales below the agreed price, in violation of an injunction heretofore entered by this court. The defendant by order to show cause moves to vacate the prior order of the court which vacated a stay of payment of a fine and directed payment forthwith. They contend that the corporate defendant is the wrong party defendant and that the proper defendant is an unincorporated firm doing business under a similar name. From the papers submitted a sharp conflict of fact is indicated as to whether the proper party defendant was the corporation, whether the sales were made with its knowledge, consent and under its authority, control and supervision, and whether the plaintiff, if the defendant is the wrong party, had knowledge of that fact. These matters should not be decided on affidavits; accordingly, they are referred to Hon. Jacob Marks, official referee, to hear and report together with his recommendations. The motions will be held in abeyance pending said report. Settle order.

[¶ 68,895] United States v. Morris Wolf, also known as Pete Wolf doing business as Wolf & Co.; John P. Godchaux; George H. McFadden & Bro.; Geo. H. McFadden & Bro., Inc.; Weil Brothers-Cotton Incorporated; A. Campdera & Co., Inc.; J. A. Baker & Co.; E. F. Creekmore Co., Inc.; Sternberg-Martin & Company, Inc.; R. L. Dixon & Bro., Inc.; Crespi & Company; and Pell Cotton Company.

In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana, New Orleans Division. Civil Action No. 5858. Filed December 26, 1957.

Case No. 1281 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Consent Decree—Practices Enjoined—Bidding Practices—Preventing Competition—Cotton Merchants.—Cotton merchants were prohibited by a consent decree from entering into any understanding to fix prices on bids or to allocate bids for the purchase of Commodity Credit Corporation cotton; to submit bids, fix bid prices, or allocate bids for the purchase of such cotton by or through a defendant cotton broker or any other person; or to prevent any person from engaging in the cotton catalogue business. Each of the merchants was prohibited from disclosing to any person the price bid (other than in open auction situations) or to bid for Commodity Credit Corporation cotton prior to the expiration of the time specified by the Commodity Credit Corporation for the filing of bids; suggesting to or determining for any other person the prices to be bid for such cotton; submitting bids on such cotton through or for any other person; actively preventing any person from engaging in the cotton catalogue business; or utilizing any persons to give advice as to the price to be bid on specific Commodity Credit Corporation cotton where such person is at the time engaged in giving similar advice to another merchant, broker, or other person eligible to bid.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.503, 2005.660, 2011.065.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Permissive Provisions—Action Directed by United States (Commodity Credit Corporation)—Bona Fide Transactions.—A consent decree entered against cotton merchants provided that the terms of the decree should not be construed to prevent any of the merchants from taking action, or refraining from taking action, affirmatively directed by the United States Government in connection with the purchase or sale of Commodity Credit Corporation cotton. Also, specified bona fide transactions by the cotton merchants were not prohibited by the decree.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8321.48, 8421.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Modification by Defendants.—A consent decree entered against cotton merchants provided that, in the event that any regulation or ruling of the United States Government, in connection with the purchase or sale of Commodity Credit Corporation cotton, operates to cause any merchant undue hardship as a result of compliance with the decree, such merchant may apply to the court for a modification or termination of any terms of the decree to the extent necessary to eliminate such hardship.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8361.37.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Consent Decrees—Applicability of Provisions of Decree—Intra-Company Activities.—A consent decree entered against cotton merchants provided that the provisions of the decree should not apply to transactions solely between any defendant and its officers, directors, agents, employees, subsidiaries, affiliates, successors, and assigns or any of them.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8241.15.

For the plaintiff: Victor R. Hansen, Assistant Attorney General; M. Hepburn Many, United States Attorney; and W. D. Kilgore, Jr., Baddia J. Rashid, Max Freeman, Charles L. Beckler, Lewis J. Ottaviani, Charles H. McEnerney, Jr., and William P. Cassedy, Attorneys, Department of Justice.

For the defendants: Ashton Phelps and Taggart Whipple for Geo. H. McFadden & Bro. and Geo. H. McFadden & Bro., Inc.; Louis Oberdorfer and Lloyd N. Cutler for Weil Brothers-Cotton Inc.; Robert R. Ritchie for A. Campdera & Co., Inc.; Harry B. Kelleher for J. A. Baker & Co., E. F. Creekmore Co., Inc., R. L. Dixon & Bro., Inc., and Crespi & Co.; Morris I. Jaffe for Sternberg-Martin & Co., Inc.; and Saul Stone for Pell Cotton Co.

Final Judgment

J. Skelly Wright, District Judge [In full text]: The plaintiff, United States of America, having filed its complaint herein on May 17, 1956, and each of the defendants signatory hereto having appeared and filed an answer herein denying the material averments of the complaint, and asserting its innocence therein, and the plaintiff and the said defendants, by their respective attorneys, having consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and without admission by any party in respect to any such issue;

Now, Therefore, before any testimony or evidence has been taken herein, and without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and upon the consent of the parties signatory hereto, it is hereby

Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed as follows:

I.

[Sherman Act]

This Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this action and of the parties signatory hereto. The complaint states a claim for relief against the defendants signatory hereto under Section 1 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Act, as amended.

II.

[Applicability of Judgment]

The provisions of this Final Judgment applicable to any defendant signatory hereto shall apply to each such defendant and to its officers, directors, agents, employees, subsidiaries, successors and assigns, and to all persons in active concert or participation with any defendant who shall have received actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise, but shall not apply to transactions solely between any such defendant and its said officers, directors, agents, employees, subsidiaries, affiliates, successors and assigns or any of them.

III.

[Definitions]

As used herein:

(A) "CCC cotton" shall mean cotton owned and which is offered for sale by the Commodity Credit Corporation;

(B) "Cotton merchant" shall mean a person engaged in the business of buying, selling or otherwise trading in cotton;

(C) "Cotton merchant defendants" shall mean all defendants, except defendants Morris Wolf and John P. Godchaux, and each of them;

(D) "Cotton catalogue business" shall mean the collecting, compiling, publishing, disseminating or communicating of any list or catalogue setting forth or listing CCC cotton available for sale by the Commodity Credit Corporation, indicating quantities and location of each grade and staple;

(E) "Person" shall mean an individual, partnership, firm, association, corporation or any other business or legal entity, other than a common or contract carrier;

(F) "Subsidiary" shall mean in respect of any company, a corporation, 50 per cent or more of whose stock entitled to vote for the election of directors is owned or controlled directly or indirectly by that company;

(G) "Affiliate" shall mean a person which is, directly or indirectly, through one or more intermediaries, controlled by, or under common control with, another person, control for the purpose of this subsection being ownership in a corporation of 80 per cent or more of the stock entitled to vote for the election of directors, or an interest in a partnership of 80 per cent or more.

IV.

[Collusive Bidding Practices]

Each defendant signatory hereto is enjoined and restrained from entering into, participating in, adhering to or maintaining, directly or indirectly, any contract, combination, concert of action, agreement, understanding, plan or program between such defendant and any other defendant, any broker or any other person eligible to buy CCC cotton to:

(A) fix prices on bids to be submitted for the purchase of CCC cotton;

(B) allocate bids between or among any persons for the purchase of CCC cotton;

(C) submit bids, fix bid prices or allocate bids between or among any persons for the purchase of CCC cotton by or through Morris Wolf or any third person;

(D) prevent or deter, or attempt to prevent or deter, any person from entering into or engaging in the cotton catalogue business.

V.

[Disclosure of Bid]

Each defendant signatory hereto is enjoined and restrained from disclosing or transmitting to any person (other than Commodity Credit Corporation) the price bid (other than in open auction situations) or to be bid for CCC cotton prior to the expiration of the time specified by Commodity Credit Corporation for the filing of bids.

VI.

[Individual Bidding Practices]

Each defendant signatory hereto is enjoined and restrained from:

(A) suggesting to or determining for any other person the prices to be bid for CCC cotton;

(B) submitting bids on CCC cotton through or for any other person;

(C) actively preventing or deterring any person from entering into or engaging in the cotton catalogue business;

(D) utilizing any person to give advice as to the price to be bid on specific CCC cotton where such person is at the time engaged in giving similar advice to another cotton merchant, broker or other person eligible to bid.

VII.

[Transactions Not Prohibited]

The terms of this Final Judgment shall not be construed to prohibit bona fide transactions:

(A) With respect to "rights" to purchase CCC cotton. For the purposes of this section VII(A), a bona fide transaction in "rights" shall mean a transaction in which a cotton merchant submits, or directly causes to be submitted, a bid for specific CCC cotton at a price disclosed to, agreed to, or suggested or determined by, any person from or to whom such cotton merchant has bought or sold, contracted to buy or sell, or assigned the "right" to bid upon and purchase from Commodity Credit Corporation, CCC cotton in a quantity equal to a quantity of substitute cotton exported in foreign commerce;

(B) In which a cotton merchant submits or causes to be submitted for a customer a bid for specific CCC cotton at a price disclosed to, agreed to, suggested or determined by, such customer;

(C) In which a defendant signatory hereto submits or causes to be submitted a bid, not contrary to any Commodity Credit Corporation regulation or announced policy, for specific CCC cotton at a price disclosed to, agreed to, or suggested or determined by, the defendant and either (1) one other cotton merchant who shares in the profits and losses on the purchase and sale of such CCC cotton, neither of whom would otherwise have bid for such CCC cotton, or (2) one other person not a cotton merchant (excluding from the meaning of the term cotton merchant a person primarily engaged in the spinning or ginning of cotton who buys or sells cotton incidentally thereto) who shares in the profits and losses on the purchase and sale of such CCC cotton.

VIII.

[Government Action—Modification]

(A) The terms of this Final Judgment shall not be construed to prevent any defendant signatory hereto from taking action, or refraining from taking action, affirmatively directed by the United States Government in connection with the purchase or sale of CCC cotton.

(B) In the event that subsequent to the entry of this Final Judgment, any of the regulations or rulings of the United States Government in connection with the purchase or sale of CCC cotton operate to cause any defendant signatory hereto undue hardship, with respect to the bidding for CCC cotton, as a result of its compliance with this Final Judgment, such defendant may apply to this Court, with ten days' notice thereof to the plaintiff, for a modification or termination of any of the terms of this Final Judgment to the extent necessary to eliminate such hardship; provided that the burden of establishing that this Final Judgment so operates shall be on the defendant making such application; and provided further that the plaintiff reserves the right to oppose such application.

IX.

[Inspection and Compliance]

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division, and on reasonable notice to any defendant signatory hereto made to its principal office, be permitted, subject to any legally recognized privilege, (a) access, during the office hours of such defendant, to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda, and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of such defendant, relating to any of the matters contained in this Final Judgment; and (b) subject to the reasonable convenience of any defendant, and without restraint or interference from it, to interview officers and employees of such defendant who may have counsel present, regarding any such matters; and upon such written request, any such defendant shall submit such written reports with respect to any of the matters contained in this Final Judgment as may be reasonably necessary for the purpose of enforcement of this Final Judgment. No information obtained by the means permitted in this section IX shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department except in the course of legal proceedings for the purpose of securing compliance with this Final Judgment in which the United States is a party or as otherwise required by law.

X.

[Jurisdiction Retained]

Jurisdiction of this cause is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to the Court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this Final Judgment, for the modification or termination of any of the provisions thereof, for the enforcement or compliance therewith and for the punishment of violations thereof.

[¶ 68,896] Winfield Drug Stores, Inc. v. Needleman.

In the New York Supreme Court, New York County, Special and Trial Term, Part XX. 138 N. Y. L. J., No. 115, page 8. Dated December 13, 1957.

New York Fair Trade (Feld-Crawford) Act

Fair Trade—Enforcement of Fair Trade Prices—Injunctive Relief—Person Who May Maintain Suit—Retailer.—A drug store was entitled to an injunction restraining a competing store from selling fair traded merchandise below its established prices.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3330.34.

[Injunction]

COLEMAN, Justice [In full text]: The defendants on many occasions, as disclosed in the affidavits on the motion for a temporary injunction, and also last month sold merchandise in their store at prices below those fixed by prevailing fair trade contracts with manufacturers—a store which was in competition with the plaintiff's store. The plaintiff is entitled to a decree, with costs, enjoining the defendants from continuing their practice. Settle decree.

[¶ 68,897] Dox Drug Co. Inc. v. Loblaws Inc.

In the New York Supreme Court, Monroe County. Dated November 18, 1957.

New York Fair Trade (Feld-Crawford) Act

Fair Trade—Indirect Methods of Price Violation—Trading Stamps—Stipulation—Permanent Injunction.—A plaintiff was entitled to a permanent injunction restraining a retailer from giving trading stamps with the purchase of fair traded articles where the retailer violated a stipulation with the plaintiff that it would discontinue the giving of trading stamps with the purchase of fair traded articles.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3294.34.

For the plaintiff: Ark, Brennan & Centner, by Jacob Ark, Rochester, N. Y.

For the defendant: Chamberlain, D'Amanda, Bauman & Brundage, by Arthur V. D. Chamberlain, Rochester, N. Y.

Decision

[Trading Stamps]

ROBERTS, Justice [In full text]: This action was brought by the plaintiff for a permanent injunction restraining the defendant from giving trading stamps, coupons, rebates or other allowances on certain fair traded items.

[Stipulation]

When the action was reached for trial before Mr. Justice Brasser at an Equity Term of this Court on September 25, 1957 the parties entered into a stipulation which so far as is here pertinent, provided as follows:

"Mr. Chamberlain: This is an action brought by the plaintiff to restrain the defendant Loblaws Inc., from alleged violation of the Fair Trade Act, it being claimed that certain fair-traded articles were being sold at a discount.

"The particular procedure complained of was the issuance of trading stamps on certain articles. The defendant has discontinued the issuance of trading stamps on all fair-traded articles, and it is stipulated on the record that they will permanently discontinue the said use of fair-traded articles.

"With that understanding, the plaintiff, as I understand it, is willing to discontinue and withdraw the action with this understanding, that the action shall not die, but shall remain alive, and in the event that Loblaws again resume this practice, that the plaintiff may apply for and have a permanent injunction upon notice to us of the making of such application.

"The Court: What proof would be required or would be submitted to suffice the granting of permanent injunction?

"Mr. Chamberlain: Proof by affidavit and a notice on us giving us an opportunity to investigate the truth of the allegations will be sufficient. We would have no objection to an injunction under those circumstances."

[Permanent Injunction]

The present motion was made returnable before me at an Equity Term of this court on the 14th day of November, 1957 and on that day adjourned to November 18, 1957. The motion is by the plaintiff for a permanent injunction based upon the claim that the defendant has not discontinued, or has resumed, the practice of giving trading stamps in violation of the terms of said stipulation. The affidavits submitted by the plaintiff in support of the motion indicate that subsequent to the making of the stipulation on September 25, 1957 purchases of fair traded items were made at various stores of defendant on October 4, October 24, November 5, November 6 and November 16, and on each occasion trading stamps were given with the purchase. These various purchases were made at seven different stores of the defendant. None of the facts set forth in the moving affidavits are denied by the defendant and no affidavits on behalf of said defendant have been submitted in opposition to this motion. Counsel for the defendant on the argument of the motion did hand to the Court a notice dated October 8, 1957 and a memorandum dated November 13, 1957 which he stated had been issued by the defendant instructing its employees that the giving of trading stamps on certain items be discontinued.

The Court on this motion is not concerned with the good faith of the defendant but must determine merely whether there has been a violation of the stipulation which entitles the plaintiff to an injunction. The stipulation is very definite that "The defendant has discontinued the issuance of trading stamps on all fair-traded articles, and it is stipulated on the record that they will permanently discontinue the said use on fair-traded articles." The evidence presented by the affidavits is undisputed that the practice of giving the stamps still continues although more than a month and a half has elapsed since the making of said stipulation. Pursuant to said stipulation plaintiff is entitled to judgment without costs permanently enjoining the defendant from giving trading stamps on fair traded articles.

Motion is granted without costs. Settle proposed judgment on two days' notice.

[¶ 68,898] Herman Schwabe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp.

In the United States District Court for the District of Columbia. Misc. No. 33-57. Dated November 23, 1957.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Pretrial Procedures—Subpoena Duces Tecum—Production of Grand Jury Minutes—Jurisdiction of Court. —A subpoena duces tecum, served by a defendant in a private antitrust action, directing the Attorney General to produce a copy of grand jury minutes in his custody in the District of Columbia was vacated by the District Court for the District of Columbia for lack of jurisdiction, where the grand jury proceeding had taken place in the District of Massachusetts. Rule 6(e) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, which forbids all disclosure of matters occurring before a grand jury unless so directed or permitted by the court, should be construed as meaning that only the court that has jurisdiction over the grand jury may direct or permit a disclosure of the grand jury minutes. "Obviously, the Court that has jurisdiction over the grand jury is in a better position to determine whether there should be a disclosure of the grand jury minutes than any other court." The mere fact that a copy of the minutes happened to be in the Attorney General's office in the District of Columbia was purely a fortuitous circumstance that should not affect the situation.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8021; Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9013.975.

For the plaintiff: James N. Mallory, Boston, Mass.

For the defendant: Ralph M. Carson, New York, N. Y., and Paul F. McArdle, Washington, D. C.

For the United States: Marshall C. Gardner and Worth Rowley, both of the Department of Justice, Washington, D. C.

Opinion

[Grand Jury Minutes]

Alexander Holtzoff, District Judge [In full text]: This motion involves a question of novel impression concerning the construction of Rule 6(e) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. The defendant in a private action under the antitrust laws seeks a right to inspect the grand jury minutes containing the testimony given before a grand jury some years ago by the president of the plaintiff corporation.

[Subpoena—Motion to Quash]

It is sought to attain this objective by service of a subpoena duces tecum on the Attorney General in whose custody there is a copy of the original grand jury minutes. The action is pending in another district, but in aid of the action it is sought to take the depositions of the Attorney General, or his representatives in this District, and a subpoena duces tecum for the production of the minutes in question at the taking of the deposition has been issued. The Government moves to quash and vacate the subpoena.

[Issue]

The grand jury proceedings at which the president of the plaintiff corporation testified were had in the United States District Court for the District of Massachusets. The question of procedure is whether the District Court for any other district than that for the district which had jurisdiction of the grand jury has authority to direct the disclosure of the grand jury minutes. Rule 6(e) forbids all disclosure of matters occurring before a grand jury unless so directed by the Court or permitted by the Court. The specific point to be determined is whether the words "The Court" as used in Rule 6(e) are limited to the Court having jurisdiction of the grand jury, or include any United States District Court to which an application may be made.

[Secrecy]

In approaching the construction of this rule it must be borne in mind that the secrecy of grand jury proceedings is one of the keystones of the grand jury system. Disclosure and inspection of grand jury minutes is not favored, and is rarely permitted, and then only on a strong, affirmative showing that this course is in the interest of justice, and only under the circumstances stated in Rule 6(e).

[Proper Court]

Obviously, the Court that has jurisdiction over the grand jury is in a better position to determine whether there should be a disclosure of the grand jury minutes than any other Court. It might lead to conflicts and possibly to chaos if any one of the ninety or more United States District Courts could direct the disclosure of the minutes of a grand jury sitting in any other District. The mere fact that a copy of the minutes happens to be in the Attorney General's office in this District is purely a fortuitous circumstance that should not affect the situation.

The Court is of the opinion that Rule 6(e) should be construed as meaning that only the Court that has jurisdiction over the grand jury may direct or permit a disclosure of the grand jury minutes. Accordingly, the motion to vacate the subpoena is granted solely on the ground of lack of jurisdiction, without expressing any opinion on the merits, and without prejudice to an application to the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts.

[¶ 68,899] United States v. Maine Lobstermen's Association and Leslie Dyer.

In the United States District Court for the District of Maine, Southern Division. Criminal Action No. 57-35. Dated December 20, 1957.

Case No. 1362 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Sufficiency of Indictment—Elements of Offense.—An indictment charging that a lobstermen's association and its president conspired to fix the prices for live lobsters sold to lobster dealers contained all of the allegations necessary to charge a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act and sufficiently stated facts constituting a criminal offense against the United States; therefore, a motion to dismiss the indictment on the ground that it was insufficient was denied. An indictment is sufficient if, when construed as a whole, it informs the accused of the nature of the charges against him so that he can prepare a defense and plead double jeopardy in a second prosecution for the same offense. Also, the indictment contained a plain, concise, and definite statement of the essential facts constituting the offense charged. It contained more than a mere statement of the offense in the terms of the Sherman Act.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8025.570.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Indictment—Defendants' Motion for Bill of Particulars.—A motion by a lobstermen's association and its president for a bill of particulars was denied where the court found that the defendants were adequately informed of the crime with which they were charged and were in a position to plead to the indictment, to prepare their defense, to avoid undue surprise and to be protected against a second prosecution for the same offense. The indictment informed the defendants of the specific crime with which they were charged, that is, a conspiracy to fix prices of live Maine lobsters in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, and of the specific conspiracy with which they were charged, including the time of the conspiracy, the persons involved, and the terms of the conspiracy. A motion for a bill of particulars under an indictment charging a conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act must be tested by principles singular to such cases, since in antitrust prosecutions overt acts need not be pleaded or proved, so long as the conspiracy itself is sufficiently charged and established. Matters which are essentially evidentiary need not be set forth.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8025.800.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Indictment—Joinder of Defendants—Severance for Prejudicial Joinder.—In an action charging that an association and its president engaged in a conspiracy to fix prices, the president's motion that the indictment against him and the association be severed for the reason that the joinder of the causes is prejudicial to him was denied on the ground that the president did not substantiate his claim of prejudice. A joint trial would not prejudice the president. The indictment charged a continuing conspiracy between the defendants, and it would seem to follow that substantially the same evidence would be used to prove the charges against both of the defendants. If a separate trial were allowed, the only result would be two trials of almost identical content, which would unreasonably burden the court without providing any relief from prejudice to the defendant. In conspiracy cases, it has been held that a severance should not be granted except for strong and cogent reasons.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8025, 8029.750.

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Immunity from Prosecution—President of Association—Production of Association's Records Before

Grand Jury—Production of Evidence or Testimony Under Oath.—In a criminal action charging that an association and its president engaged in a conspiracy to fix prices, the president of the association was not immune from prosecution by reason of his having, pursuant to a grand jury subpoena duces tecum directed to the association, produced records of the association before the grand jury and answered, not under oath, certain questions concerning the identification of the records. The Immunity of Witness statute provides that immunity shall extend only to a natural person who, in obedience to a subpoena, gives testimony under oath or produces evidence under oath. The president, in his appearance before the grand jury, neither gave testimony nor produced evidence under oath. The court, while not ruling upon, noted its concurrence with the Government's further contention that the president merely acted as a representative of the association in producing, before the grand jury, the documents belonging to the association which were called for by the subpoena; that his testimony was limited to the identification of such documents; and that under such circumstances, the president was not entitled to immunity.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8029.

For the plaintiff: Peter Mills, U. S. Attorney, Portland, Me.; and John J. Galgay and Alan L. Lewis, Antitrust Division, Department of Justice, New York, N. Y.

For the defendants: Stanley P. Tupper, Augusta, Me.; Philip F. Chapman, Jr., Portland, Me.; A. Alan Grossman, Rockland, Me.; and John L. Knight, Rockland, Me.

Opinion and Order of the Court

[Indictment]

EDWARD T. GIGNOUX, District Judge [In full text]: On October 15, 1957, an indictment was returned in the United States District Court for the District of Maine, charging the Maine Lobstermen's Association, and Leslie Dyer, its president, with a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act (26 Stat. 209, 15 U. S. C. Sec. 1). The indictment alleged that the defendants combined and conspired with each other, and others, to fix and establish a minimum selling price for live Maine lobsters sold to lobster dealers; to refrain from catching lobsters until such minimum price was obtained; and to induce and compel all Maine lobstermen, including non-members of the defendant Association, to adhere to the terms of the conspiracy charged, all in unreasonable restraint of the interstate trade and commerce in live Maine lobsters.

[Motions]

On October 25, 1957, the defendants filed five motions and a document entitled "Interrogatories," as follows:

1. Motion to Dismiss by both defendants on the ground that the indictment does not state facts constituting a criminal offense against the United States.

2. Motion to Dismiss by the defendant Dyer on the ground that he had obtained immunity.

3. Motion for Relief for Prejudicial Joinder by the defendant Dyer.

4. Motion for Bill of Particulars by both defendants.

5. Motion to Dismiss by the defendant Association on the ground that it had obtained immunity.

6. A document entitled "Interrogatories" filed by both defendants.

Hearing on the aforesaid motions and document was held before this Court on December 3, 1957, all parties being represented by their respective attorneys. At the hearing the attorneys for the defendant Association requested permission to withdraw its motion to dismiss on the ground that it had obtained immunity, and the attorneys for both defendants requested permission to withdraw the document entitled "Interrogatories." Both requests were granted by this Court, and argument was limited to the four remaining motions, which the Court will now consider in the order in which they are listed above.

I. The Defendants' Motion To Dismiss on the Ground that the Indictment Does Not State Facts Constituting a Criminal Offense Against the United States

Rule 7 (c) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure provides that the indictment "shall be a plain, concise and definite written statement of the essential facts constituting the offense charged." Although it has been stated that an antitrust indictment may be subject to dismissal if the defendant is charged only in terms of the Sherman Act, Frankfort Distilleries, Inc. v. United States [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,286], 144 F. 2d 824, 830 (10th Cir. 1944), reversed on other grounds, [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,338] 324 U. S. 293 (1945), it is fundamental that an indictment is sufficient if, when construed as a whole, it informs the accused of the nature of the charges against him so that the defendant can prepare a defense and plead double jeopardy in a second prosecution for the same offense. United States v. Northeast Texas Chapter, National Electrical Contractors Ass'n [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,596], 181 F. 2d 30 (5th Cir. 1950); United States v. Josephson, 165 F. 2d 82 (2d Cir. 1947), cert. denied 333 U. S. 838 (1948); Wilson v. United States, 158 F. 2d 659 (5th Cir. 1947), cert. denied 330 U. S. 850 (1947); United States v. Armour & Co. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,288], 137 F. 2d 269 (10th Cir. 1943).

This Court is satisfied that the instant indictment contains all the allegations necessary to charge a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act and meets the requirements of Rule 7(c) and the additional requirements established by judicial decision for Sherman Act cases.

The indictment only contains one count, the essential allegations with respect to the conspiracy being set forth in Paragraphs 12, 13 and 14. In Paragraph 12 the defendants are charged in the generic language of the statute with having from on or about June, 1957, to the date of the return of the indictment:

> ". . . engaged in a combination and conspiracy to fix, stabilize and maintain the prices for live Maine lobsters sold by both MLA member and nonmember lobstermen to lobster dealers, in unreasonable restraint of . . . trade and commerce . . . in violation of Section 1 of the . . . Sherman Act. . . ."

In Paragraph 13 of the indictment the elements of the alleged combination and conspiracy are specified in the following language:

> "13. The aforesaid combination and conspiracy has consisted of a continuing agreement and concert of action among the defendants, the co-conspirators described herein, and other persons to the Grand Jury unknown, the substantial terms of which have been and are that the defendants and the co-conspirators agree:
>
> "(a) To fix and establish a minimum selling price for live Maine lobsters sold to lobster dealers;
>
> "(b) To refrain from catching lobsters until said minimum price was obtained;
>
> "(c) To induce and compel all Maine lobstermen, including non-members of MLA, to adhere to the terms of the conspiracy hereinbefore charged."

In Paragraph 14 of the indictment it is further alleged that:

> "14. During the time covered by this indictment the defendants and the co-conspirators, by agreement, understanding and concert of action, have done those things which, as hereinbefore charged, they conspired and agreed to do."

In United States v. Minneapolis Electrical Contractors Ass'n., 99 F. Supp. 75 (D. C. Minn. 1951), appeal dismissed, 207 F. 2d 782 (8th Cir. 1953), the court upheld an indictment under Section 1 of the Sherman Act for conspiracy to restrain trade which was substantially identical to the indictment in the present proceeding. The court pointed out that, as in the instant indictment, the indictment not only charged an offense in the language of the statute, but also set forth the substantial terms of the alleged unlawful conspiracy and agreement and the purpose which was sought to be accomplished. The court held that the indictment was sufficient, saying (at p. 78):

> "Although an antitrust indictment may be subject to dismissal if the defendant is charged only in the terms of the Sherman Act, Frankfort Distilleries, Inc. v. United States . . . it is fundamental that the indictment need not be detailed or evidentiary . . . The allegations go far past the mere words of the statute and apprise the defendants of the agreements charged against them so that they can recognize what the Government claims were the terms of the conspiracy and what conspiracy was involved. To require the indictment to contain the detail now sought by defendants would render the indictment considerably evidentiary and would make purposeless the rules permitting the bill of particulars which defendants also seek . . . ."

To the same effect see Las Vegas Merchant Plumbers Ass'n. v. United States [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,673], 210 F. 2d 732 (9th Cir. 1954), cert. denied, 348 U. S. 817 (1954); American Tobacco Company v. United States [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,317], 147 F. 2d 93, 117 (6th Cir. 1944), aff'd. [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,468], 328 U. S. 781 (1946); cf. United States v. Employing Plasterers Ass'n. of Chicago [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,692], 347 U. S. 186 (1954).

In view of the plain language of Rule 7(c) and the decisions testing indictments brought under the Sherman Act, this Court is of the opinion that the indictment in this proceeding contains all the allegations necessary to charge a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act and sufficiently states facts constituting a criminal offense against the United States. Accordingly, the defendants' motion to dismiss on the ground that the indictment does not state facts constituting a criminal offense against the United States is denied.

II. The Defendant Dyer's Motion to Dismiss on the Ground That He Had Obtained Immunity

Defendant Dyer in his motion to dismiss the indictment on the ground that he had obtained immunity states that he "was compelled under process of subpoena issued by this Honorable Court to appear and give evidence to the Grand Jury for their proceedings and deliberations which said deliberations resulted in this said indictment against your defendant."

This representation by the defendant is not true, and the claimed immunity is clearly without any legal basis. The Government requested and, with the consent of counsel for the defendants, was granted permission to file with the Court the affidavit of John J. Galgay, Esq., trial attorney in the Antitrust Division of the United States Department of Justice, disclosing the facts and circumstances surrounding Dyer's appearance and testimony before the Grand Jury. As appears from this affidavit, a subpoena duces tecum, dated August 14, 1957, directed to the "Maine Lobstermen's Association, 427 Main Street, Rockland, Maine," was served on the same date by a Deputy United States Marshal at the indicated address upon Dyer, president of the Association, who accepted such service on behalf of the Association. The subpoena duces tecum directed the Association to produce certain documents relating to the Association's organizational structure and membership activities. On August 20, 1957, Dyer appeared at the United States Courthouse, Portland, Maine, and informed government counsel that he had in his possession the documents called for in the subpoena. He was, thereupon, called into the Grand Jury room to produce the subpoenaed material before the Grand Jury. He was not placed under oath. While in the Grand Jury room, he was asked his name and address; he was asked if he appeared pursuant to a subpoena served on the Association and if the subpoena called for the production of certain Association documents, to both of which questions he replied in the affirmative. After starting to enumerate the various documents, he was asked whether the folder which he held in his hand contained all of the documents requested and demanded by the subpoena, and he replied that it did. He, thereupon, handed the folder containing the documents to Government counsel, and the folder was marked by the Grand Jury reporter as "Grand Jury Exhibit No. 1." No further questions were asked of Dyer, and he was thereupon excused.

Counsel for this defendant raise no issue as to the factual correctness of the above-mentioned affidavit and in their brief specifically concede that Dyer "was not administered the oath when he was interrogated before the Grand Jury concerning the documents which he had produced." At the hearing before this Court, however, Dyer's counsel filed with the Court an affidavit of Dyer stating, in substance, his understanding and belief that the subpoena duces tecum, although directed to the Association, was served upon him personally; that he appeared before the Grand Jury believing that he was a witness and was entitled to the "immunities as held out by the United States Attorneys through the Press"; and that in appearing and producing documents before the Grand Jury he believed that he was "subject to the penalties of perjury."

His counsel contend that under these circumstances the defendant Dyer is entitled to the protection of the Immunity of Witness Statute, 15 U. S. C. A., Sections 32 and 33, specifically relating to the Sherman Act.

The relevant language of the Immunity of Witness Statute is as follows:

> "Section 32. No person shall be prosecuted or be subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, in any proceeding, suit, or prosecution under sections 1-7 of this title . . .

"Provided, that no person so testifying shall be exempt from prosecution or punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

"Section 33. Under the immunity provisions in Section 32 of this title, immunity shall extend only to a natural person who, in obedience to a subpoena, gives testimony under oath or produces evidence, documentary or otherwise, under oath."

It is evident from a simple reading of this statute, that the claim of the defendant Dyer for immunity is without legal justification. Section 33 specifically provides that the immunity granted by Section 32 shall extend only to a natural person who "in obedience to a subpoena gives testimony under oath or produces evidence, documentary or otherwise, under oath" (Emphasis supplied). In the instant case it explicitly appears from the Government's affidavit and is conceded by the defendant's counsel that Dyer in his appearance before the Grand Jury neither gave testimony nor produced evidence, documentary or otherwise, under oath. Under these circumstances, it is clear from the plain and inescapable language of the statute that Dyer received no immunity, and the motion to dismiss the indictment as against the defendant Dyer on the ground that he obtained immunity must be, and hereby is, denied.

In view of the foregoing ruling, it is unnecessary to pass upon the further contentions of the Government with respect to the non-application of the immunity statute to a natural person whose appearance before a Grand Jury is in obedience to a subpoena directed to an association, or other distinct legal entity, of which the natural person is an officer, when the sole purpose of such appearance is to deliver documents belonging to the association, and testimony is limited to the identification of the documents thus produced. The Court will note, however, its concurrence with the position of the Government that in the instant case Dyer merely acted as a representative of the Association in producing before the Grand Jury the documents and papers belonging to the Association which were called for by the subpoena directed to it; that this testimony was limited to the identification of such documents; and that under these circumstances the defendant was not entitled to the immunity provided by the statute. See United States v. Monia [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,251], 317 U. S. 424, 430 (1943); Lumber Products Ass'n, Inc. v. United States [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,281], 144 F. 2d 546, 553 (9th Cir. 1944), reversed on other grounds sub nom, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America v. United States [1946-1947 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,545], 330 U. S. 395 (1947); United States v. Detroit Sheetmetal & Roofing Contractors Ass'n., Inc. [1953 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,596], 116 F. Supp. 81, 90 (E. D. Mich. 1953); United States v. Greater Kansas City Retail Coal Merchants Ass'n. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,480], 85 F. Supp. 503, 513 (W. D. Mo. 1949). See also, United States v. White, 322 U. S. 694 (1944); Brown v. United States, 276 U. S. 134 (1928).

III. The Defendant Dyer's Motion for Relief for Prejudicial Joinder

Rule 14 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure provides, in part, that

"If it appears that a defendant . . . is prejudiced by a joinder . . . of defendants in an indictment or information or by such joinder for trial together, the court may . . . grant a severance of defendants or provide whatever other relief justice requires." [1]

Apparently acting under Rule 14, the defendant Dyer, in his motion for relief for prejudicial joinder, requests that the indictment against him and the defendant Association be severed "for the reason that the joinder of said causes is prejudicial" to him.

A motion for relief from prejudicial joinder is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court. Opper v. United States, 348 U. S. 84 (1954); See 4 Barron, Federal Practice and Procedure, Section 2011 (Rules Ed. 1951). And in conspiracy cases it has been frequently stated that a severance should not be granted except for strong and cogent reasons. See United States v. Lebron, 222 F. 2d 531, 535 (2d Cir. 1955); United States v. Brandt, 139 F. Supp. 367, 369 (N. D. Ohio 1955); United States v.

[1] Rule 8(b) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure provides for the joinder of defendants, as follows:

"(b) Joinder of Defendants. Two or more defendants may be charged in the same indictment or information if they are alleged to have participated in the same act or transaction or in the same series of acts or transactions constituting an offense or offenses. Such defendants may be charged in one or more counts together or separately and all of the defendants need not be charged in each count."

Silverman, 129 F. Supp. 496, 500 (D. C. Conn. 1955).

In United States v. Atlantic Commission Co., Inc., 45 F. Supp. 187 (E. D. N. C. 1942), the Court specifically applied the foregoing rule in a criminal prosecution under the antitrust laws and denied a motion for severance, saying (at p. 190):

> ". . . the general rule is that it is inadvisable to split a case into many parts, to be disposed of piecemeal, in the absence of very strong and cogent reason therefor. This is especially true in conspiracy charges."

In United States v. Silverman, supra, the court thus stated the prevailing law (at p. 500):

> ". . . In a conspiracy case where the charge against all the defendants may be largely proved by the same evidence and results from a similar series of acts, as is alleged here, a severance should not be granted except for strong and cogent reasons. . . . Moreover, evidence relating to acts and declarations of all the conspirators in furtherance of the conspiracy are admissible against all whether or not each defendant is tried alone or jointly . . . ."

The defendant Dyer, in his motion, does not attempt to substantiate his claim of prejudice. He has submitted no affidavits in support of his contentions, nor were his counsel able to suggest for the Court's consideration in what respects he might be prejudiced by a joint trial with the defendant Association.

After careful consideration of the arguments presented by counsel in support of this motion, this Court is unable to find that the defendant Dyer will be prejudiced by a joint trial. The indictment charges a continuing agreement and conspiracy between the defendants, and it would seem to follow that substantially the same evidence will be used to prove the charges against them both. A severance could in no way lessen the evidence against Dyer or remove from the jury's consideration the Government's evidence against the Association. If the defendant were to be allowed a separate trial, the only result would seem to be two trials of almost identical content, which would unreasonably burden the court without providing any relief from prejudice to the defendant.

No definite situation having been presented for the Court's consideration to substantiate this defendant's claim of prejudice, the motion for relief for prejudicial joinder must be, and hereby is, denied.

IV. The Defendants' Motion for Bill of Particulars

In their motion for a bill of particulars, the defendants state that the gist of the criminal offense alleged in the indictment is contained in paragraphs numbered 12, 13 and 14, and that the statements and allegations contained in said paragraphs are "vague, indefinite and uncertain, and represent conclusions rather than factual statements relating to transactions," because of which the defendants cannot be fairly apprised of the crimes alleged against them so that they can adequately prepare their defense and plead to the indictment. The defendants request that the government be directed to furnish them with particulars relating to the indictment, setting forth with certainty and definiteness the matter of "times and places, events and things" allegedly constituting the conspiracy charged.

Rule 7(f) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure provides that "The Court for cause may direct the filing of a bill of particulars." Such a motion is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court. Wong Tai v. United States, 273 U. S. 77, 82 (1927); American Tobacco Company v. United States, supra, 117.

The fundamental purpose of a bill of particulars is to inform the accused of the charges against him with sufficient definiteness to permit him to prepare for trial, to prevent undue surprise and to protect him against a second prosecution for the same offense. Wong Tai v. United States, supra; United States v. General Electric Co., 40 F. Supp. 627, 632 (S. D. N. Y. 1941). And it has been frequently stated that a motion for a bill of particulars under an indictment charging a conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act must be tested by principles singular to such cases, since in anti-trust prosecutions overt acts need not be pleaded or proved, so long as the conspiracy itself is sufficiently charged and established. United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 41 F. Supp. 347 (S. D. N. Y. 1941); United States v. General Electric Co., supra, 632. See also in this regard United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., Inc. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,031], 310 U. S. 150, pp.

225 N. and 252 (1940); Nash v. United States, 229 U. S. 373, 378 (1913).

In United States v. General Petroleum Corp. of California, 33 F. Supp. 95 (S. D. Cal. 1940) these general principles were applied to a motion for particulars under an indictment charging a violation of the Sherman Act. In denying the motion, the court there stated (at p. 97):

> "As we believe it is merely surplusage to enter into a minute discussion of the office of a bill of particulars in a criminal case, we will briefly state our reasons for refusing to require the government to amplify the allegations of the indictment except as hereinafter ordered. Because the demands of defendants for enlargement of an accusation of a criminal offense cannot be considered or dealt with in the abstract, the applicability of this form of pretrial criminal procedure must be viewed in the light of the specific case as it is laid in the indictment that is immediately before the court for consideration. This is especially true in charges of conspiracy to violate the anti-trust laws of the United States. In such prosecutions, if the indictment, considering the record history of the case, adequately states the alleged unlawful combination or conspiracy so as to enable all accused to clearly understand it, to properly prepare for trial within a reasonable time, and to avoid prejudicial surprise at the trial, a court order requiring detailed enlargement or expansion of the essential ultimate facts sufficiently pleaded may operate to cripple and nullify the established national policy of prohibiting or treating as illegal all contracts or combination of individuals or corporations substantially restrictive of free competition, or to fix prices of commodities, in the channels of interstate business."

Examining the instant indictment in light of the fundamental purposes of a bill of particulars, with particular reference to anti-trust prosecutions, as hereinabove stated, this Court is satisfied that these requirements are met and that the defendants are sufficiently informed of the charges against them for every purpose enumerated above.

In Paragraph 12 of the instant indictment the defendants are informed that they are charged with a combination and conspiracy among themselves, the co-conspirators (identified in Paragraph 4 of the indictment as the remaining officers, delegates, executive council and members of the Association), and other persons to the Grand Jury unknown, to fix, stabilize and maintain the prices for live Maine lobsters in unreasonable restraint of interstate trade and commerce, in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. The conspiracy is alleged to have commenced on or about June, 1957, and to have continued to the date of the return of the indictment, which was October 15, 1957.

Paragraph 13 of the indictment further sets forth the substantial terms of the combination and conspiracy, involving an agreement: (a) to fix and establish a minimum selling price for live Maine lobsters sold to lobster dealers; (b) to refrain from catching lobsters until said minimum price was obtained; and (c) to induce and compel all Maine lobstermen, including non-members of the Association, to adhere to the terms of the conspiracy.

In Paragraph 14 of the indictment the defendants are informed that they are charged with having in fact done those things which they are charged with having conspired and agreed to do.

Paragraphs 12, 13 and 14 of the indictment thus inform the defendants of the specific crime with which they are charged, to wit: a conspiracy to fix prices of live Maine lobsters in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, and of the specific conspiracy with which they are charged, including the time of the conspiracy, the persons involved, and the terms of the conspiracy. It is the opinion of this Court that the defendants are thereby adequately informed of the crime with which they are charged and are in a position to plead to the indictment, to prepare their defense, to avoid undue surprise, and to be protected against a second prosecution for the same offense. Further particulars as to "times and places, events and things" allegedly constituting such conspiracy would require the specification of matters which are essentially evidentiary, would unduly hamper and restrict the Government in the presentation of its case, and are wholly unnecessary for any legitimate purpose which the defendants might have either in pleading to the indictment or in preparing their defense for trial.

For the reasons stated, after careful consideration of the arguments presented by the defendants, the Court is satisfied that in the exercise of its sound discretion the defendants' motion for a bill of particulars must be, and it hereby is, denied.

[¶ 68,900] United States v. Maine Lobster Co., Inc.; Benson Lobster Company; Willard-Daggett, Inc.; E. C. Palmer Inc.; Samuel L. Armstrong; Charles E. Olsen; and John E. Willard, Jr.

In the United States District Court for the District of Maine, Southern Division. Criminal Action No. 57-36. Dated December 20, 1957.

Case No. 1364 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Grand Jury Proceeding—Dismissal of Grand Juror on Occupational Grounds—Effect on Indictment.—A motion to dismiss an indictment against lobster dealers on the ground that one of the members of the grand jury which returned the indictment was dismissed from participation in the grand jury proceedings because he was a lobster fisherman was denied. The defendants' contention that the dismissal of the juror constituted an intentional exclusion from the grand jury of a class of workers and was prejudicial to the defendants' interests was rejected. Good cause was shown for the discharge of the juror, and there was no abuse of discretion by the court. At the time, the grand jury was about to investigate charges that lobster dealers had conspired to victimize lobster fishermen and charges of a price fixing conspiracy among lobster fishermen themselves. Also, the grand jury had returned an indictment against a lobster fishermen's association. There was no systematic exclusion of all lobster fishermen at the time of the organization of the grand jury. More than the requisite number of twelve grand jurors concurred in the finding; therefore, even if the discharge had been improper, there having been no systematic exclusion of a class, it would not have vitiated the indictment.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8021.

For the plaintiff: Peter Mills, U. S. Attorney, Portland, Me.; and John J. Galgay and Alan L. Lewis, Antitrust Division, Department of Justice, New York, N. Y.

For the defendants: Jacob Agger, Philip G. Willard, and Frank P. Preti, all of Portland, Me.

Opinion and Order of the Court

[Indictment]

EDWARD T. GIGNOUX, District Judge [In full text]: On October 15, 1957 an indictment was returned in this court charging the four corporate and three individual defendants with a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act (26 Stat. 209, 15 U. S. C. Sec. 1). It charged that the defendants combined and conspired with each other, and others, including various Maine lobster dealers located in Portland and Rockland, Maine, to fix and establish a maximum price at which they shall purchase live Maine lobsters during the shedder season; to adopt, maintain and adhere to the maximum purchase price so fixed; and to invite, solicit and induce other lobster dealers in the Rockland, Maine area to join in the combination and conspiracy, all in unreasonable restraint of the interstate trade and commerce in live Maine lobsters.

[Motion to Dismiss]

On December 6, 1957 the defendants filed a motion to dismiss the indictment for the reason that Leroy Ames, of Vinalhaven, Maine, a regular and otherwise qualified member of the Grand Jury which returned the indictment, was dismissed from all participation in the proceedings on the sole ground that he was, by occupation, a lobster fisherman. The defendants contend that, Ames being the only member of the Grand Jury engaged in the lobster industry, his dismissal constituted an intentional exclusion from the Grand Jury of a class of workers and was prejudicial to the defendants' interests.

Hearing on the aforesaid motion was held before this Court on December 16, 1957, all parties being represented by their respective attorneys, and written briefs and oral arguments were presented for the consideration of the Court. Filed with the Government's brief was the affidavit of Richard B. O'Donnell, Esquire, trial attorney in the Anti-Trust Division of the United States Department of Justice, setting forth the circumstances surrounding the discharge and excuse of Grand Juror Ames from the Grand Jury. At the hearing the defendants introduced in evidence the testimony of Morris Cox, Esquire, Clerk of this Court with reference to Ames' discharge.

[Discharge of Grand Juror]

On the basis of Mr. O'Donnell's affidavit, Mr. Cox's testimony and the records of this Court relating to these proceedings, this Court finds that the facts concerning Grand Juror Ames' discharge from the Grand Jury, are substantially without dispute and are as follows:

1. Grand Juror Ames was duly impaneled as a member of the Grand Jury drawn for service at the April, 1957 Term of this Court and sat as a member of this Grand Jury from April 15, 1957 until formally excused from service by the Clerk of this Court on August 15, 1957. During the period of his service Ames participated in the deliberations of the Grand Jury on various matters submitted to it, but he did not participate in the Grand Jury deliberations which led to the return of the indictment in the instant proceeding.

2. Ames was listed on the Grand Jury roster as a lobster fisherman at Vinalhaven, Maine, and he was in fact such at the time of his excuse.

3. On August 15, 1957 Mr. O'Donnell, who was duly authorized to conduct Grand Jury proceedings in the District of Maine, conferred with the United States Attorney for the District of Maine and Mr. Cox regarding the presentation to the Grand Jury of evidence of possible violations of the antitrust laws in the lobster industry. Learning that Ames was on the roster of the Grand Jury, Mr. O'Donnell asked John J. Galgay, Esquire, one of his associates, so to inform the Honorable George C. Sweeney, United States District Judge for the District of Massachusetts, who had been duly designated to act as a United States District Judge for the District of Maine. Mr. Galgay thereupon telephoned Judge Sweeney, who was on vacation in Wolfsboro, New Hampshire. He informed him of the proposed investigation of the lobster industry, reported the presence of a lobster fisherman on the Grand Jury and called to Judge Sweeney's attention that under Rule 6(g) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure a grand juror could be excused by the court for cause shown.

4. After hearing Mr. Galgay's statement of the problem, Judge Sweeney discussed the matter by telephone with Mr. Cox and instructed him to verify Ames' occupation, and if he were in fact a lobster fisherman, to excuse him from further Grand Jury duty. Mr. Cox verified Mr. Ames' occupation by telephone conversation with Mrs. Ames on the same day and through Mrs. Ames notified Mr. Ames that he was excused from Grand Jury duty. This was confirmed by letter on August 16, 1957.

5. Evidence concerning possible violation of the anti-trust laws in the lobster industry was presented to, and heard by, the Grand Jury between August 20 and October 15, 1957. On October 15, 1957 the Grand Jury returned the indictment in the instant case, in which various corporate and individual lobster dealers are named as defendants. On the same date it returned a second indictment charging the Maine Lobstermen's Association, an association of lobster fishermen, and Leslie Dyer, its President, with an illegal conspiracy to fix and maintain a minimum price for live Maine lobsters, in violation of the anti-trust laws. (United States of America v. Maine Lobstermen's Association, et al., United States District Court for the District of Maine, Criminal No. 57-35).

6. The records of this Court show that more than twelve Grand Jurors concurred in the finding of the indictment in the instant proceeding.

["Good Cause"]

In the opinion of this Court the defendants' contention that the dismissal of Grand Juror Ames because he was a lobster fisherman "constituted an intentional exclusion from the Grand Jury of a class of workers and was prejudicial to the defendants' interest" is wholly without warrant. Rule 6(g) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure specifically provides that "At any time for cause shown the court may excuse a (grand) juror either temporarily or permanently . . .". From the circumstances as herein above stated concerning Judge Sweeney's excuse of Grand Juror Ames, it can only be concluded that he believed there was "good cause" which warranted the discharge or excuse of this juror from the Grand Jury. See also 28 U. S. C. A. Sec. 1863.

One of the circumstances involved was that the Grand Jury was about to investigate charges that lobster dealers, including those later named as defendants in this case, had conspired to victimize lobster fishermen by fixing the prices at which they would purchase live lobsters from the fishermen. As a lobster fisherman, it was reasonable to suspect that Grand Juror Ames might have been one of the aggrieved parties against whom the alleged conspiracy was directed, a position from which bias or prejudice might well be presumed. Another circumstance involved was that the Grand Jury was also about to investigate an alleged price-fixing conspiracy among the lobster fishermen themselves. As a lobster fisherman, it was reasonable to suspect that Grand Juror Ames might have been at least a possible prospective defendant, an intolerable position in which to place any juror.

Rule 6(g) vests a broad discretion in the court with respect to the excuse of a Grand Juror, particularly where the interests of fair and impartial administration of justice are concerned, and this Court cannot conclude that Judge Sweeney's excuse of Grand Juror Ames in the instant proceedings constituted an abuse of this discretion. In the opinion of this Court Judge Sweeney's action was wholly within both the letter and the spirit of Rule 6(g).

[No Systematic Exclusion]

The defendants, in supporting their contention that Ames' discharge constituted "an intentional exclusion from the Grand Jury of a class of workers" rely on such cases as United States v. Foster, 80 F. Supp. 479, 483 (S. D. N. Y. 1948), where the court speaks of "a systematic exclusion of all working people and all members of the colored race from the Grand Jury" at the time of the organization of the grand jury. These cases condemn any such systematic exclusion. The present case, however, in no way parallels such cases. In order to bring the present case within the reasoning of the Foster case, the defendants would have to show a systematic exclusion of all lobster fishermen at the time of the organization of the grand jury. There is nothing in the circumstances surrounding the dismissal of Grand Juror Ames to support such a theory. See also United States v. Dennis, 183 F. 2d 201, 216 (2d Cir. 1950); Mamaux v. United States, 264 Fed. 816 (6th Cir. 1920); United States v. Fujimoto, 102 F. Supp. 890, 894 (D. C. Hawaii 1952).

[Possibility of Prejudice]

There appear to be two controlling cases relating to the discharge of a grand juror and the effect on the subsequent indictment returned by the remaining grand jurors. United States v. Mitchell, 136 Fed. 896 (C. C. D. Oregon 1905) establishes that if a grand juror has been discharged "for good cause shown to the court," and if the requisite number of grand jurors concurred in the indictment, then the defendants cannot speculate on any possible prejudice to them from such discharge. The court there stated (at p. 904):

> "The record shows that these jurors were discharged 'for good cause shown to the court'. Since there was necessarily an affirmative vote of 12 jurors to find a bill, the absence of these jurors could not have affected the result. It was suggested that they might, if present, have influenced a change in the affirmative vote by persuasion, but it goes without saying that there is no presumption against the indictment that these jurors would have endeavored to exert such influence, or would have succeeded in so doing; and, before the court can consider any objections made, it must at least appear, not from the belief expressed, but from the facts stated, that the defendant has suffered some impairment of a substantial right or some prejudice, or that the things complained of violate the requirements of a positive statute. Moreover, the power of the court to discharge a juror for good cause shown is undoubted, and the possible or probable effect of the absence of such a juror on the subsequent proceedings of the grand jury does not admit of inquiry."

And, even assuming that the discharge of a grand juror had been improper, the court in Jones v. United States, 162 Fed. 417 (9th Cir. 1908) thus stated the applicable law (at p. 421):

> "It has been many times decided that the improper discharge of a juror will not vitiate an indictment, provided that the number necessary to find it remain. U. S.

v. Belvin (C. C.) 46 Fed. 381; Gladden v. State, 12 Fla. 623; Smith v. State, 19 Tex. App. 95; Portis v. State, 23 Miss. 578; State v. Wilson, 85 Mo. 134; Commonwealth v. Burton, 4 Leigh (Va.) 645, 26 Am. Dec. 337.

See also United States v. Fujimoto, supra, 896.

As has been noted, more than the requisite number of twelve grand jurors, required by Rule 6(f) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure concurred in the finding of the instant indictment. Thus, even if the discharge of Grand Juror Ames had been improper, there having been no systematic exclusion of a class, it would still not have vitiated the indictment.

[Motion Denied]

For the foregoing reasons the defendants' motion to dismiss the indictment must be, and it hereby is, denied.

[¶ 68,901] Sunbeam Corporation v. Masters, Inc.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. No. 57-54. Filed December 30, 1957.

McGuire Act and New York Fair Trade (Feld-Crawford) Act

Fair Trade—Selling Below Fair Trade Prices—Sales by Subsidiary from Non-Fair Trade Jurisdiction to Fair Trade Jurisdiction—Violation of Injunction Against Parent Organization—Scope of Federal and State Fair Trade Laws.—A New York retailer did not violate an injunction prohibiting it from selling a fair trader's products below their established prices in violation of the New York Fair Trade Act by organizing a subsidiary mail order company in the District of Columbia (a non-fair trade jurisdiction) which sells the fair trader's products below their established New York fair trade prices to New York residents. An application to adjudge the retailer in contempt was denied on the authority of General Electric Co. v. Masters Mail Order Co. of Washington, D. C., Inc., 1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,715, wherein, in an action by another fair trader against the above District of Columbia mail order company, it was held that sales below New York fair trade prices by the District of Columbia mail order company to New York residents were not violative of the New York Fair Trade Act and that the McGuire Act did not extend to such interstate transactions. The scope of the ruling in the General Electric Co. case was such that there was no basis upon which to bottom a contempt by reason of the organization of the subsidiary and the sales made by it and participated in by the retailer. The New York Fair Trade Act is necessarily limited by the McGuire Act with respect to interstate transactions where the sale is consummated in a non-fair trade jurisdiction. The New York law derives its authority from the Federal McGuire Act, and, in any conflict between the two, the Federal law prevails.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3262.34, 3262.75, 3262.80.

Fair Trade—Enforcement of Fair Trade Prices—Violation of Injunction—Contempt.—In denying an application to adjudge a defendant in contempt for violation of a fair trade injunction, the court noted that, in determining whether or not the injunction was violated, it must be kept in mind that the injunction is limited to those activities which violate the state fair trade law, and, if the conduct charged as a contempt does not violate that law, the conduct is not within the prohibition of the injunction.

See Fair Trade, Vol. 1, ¶ 3380.34.

For the plaintiff: Rogers, Hoge & Hill (George M. Chapman, of counsel), New York, N. Y.

For the defendant: Arnold, Fortas & Porter (Norman Diamond, of counsel), Washington, D. C., and Joseph F. Ruggieri, Brooklyn, N. Y.

For prior opinions of the U. S. District Court, Southern District of New York, see 1954 Trade Cases ¶ 67,841 and 1950-1951 Trade Cases ¶ 62,824, 62,653.

Opinion

[Contempt Action]

EDWARD WEINFELD, District Judge [In full text]: Reference is made to the Court's earlier opinion on an application by the plaintiff to punish the defendant for contempt of court for violation of the injunctive provisions of a final decree, entered by consent, which enjoined the defendant from selling or offering for sale plaintiff's products in violation of New York State's Fair Trade Law.[1] Sunbeam Corporation v. Masters, Inc. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,841], 124 F. Supp. 155.

As the opinion indicates a factual conflict existed as to the circumstances of the organization by the defendant of a wholly owned subsidiary in the District of Columbia, a non-fair trade jurisdiction, and also the circumstances under which sales were made by it to New York residents and participated in by the defendant. Accordingly, final decision was withheld pending an inquiry into these matters and in particular into the circumstances of sales to New York residents by the subsidiary, Masters Mail Order Co. of Washington, D. C.

The parties in a desire to avoid hearings before a special master on the factual issues, agreed to stipulate the facts; it took almost two years before they reached an accord.

[Action Against Subsidiary]

In the meantime, our Court of Appeals had under consideration, and has since decided, an action brought against the subsidiary. General Electric Co. v. Masters Mail Order Co. of Washington, D. C. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,715], 2 Cir., 244 F. 2d 681, cert. denied 26 U. S. Law Week 3114. The facts there presented are substantially identical with those presented on the instant application. The very mail order house operation shown here, including the present defendant's participation therein to the extent, and in the manner, stated in the stipulation of facts entered into by the parties herein, was passed on in that case. It was urged there, as it is here, that this operation was a mere device conceived to circumvent the New York Fair Trade Law. The Court of Appeals rejected this contention and held that the critical and operative acts took place in the District of Columbia, a free trade jurisdiction, and were, therefore, beyond the reach of the New York Law. In short, the Court held that the acts complained of were not violative of New York State's Fair Trade Law with respect to goods moving in interstate commerce where the sales were consummated in a non-fair trade jurisdiction such as the District of Columbia; that the McGuire Act granting certain exceptions to Sherman Act prohibitions against resale price maintenance agreements did not extend to such interstate transactions.

The General Electric case is thus an authoritative determination that the activities of the mail order house as revealed in the record now before the Court, do not violate the New York Fair Trade Law. The plaintiff insists, however, that notwithstanding the lawful character of these activities, nevertheless the defendant in so far as it furthered them, violated the injunction herein. It is true that the defendant, the parent corporation, Masters, Inc. was not a party to the General Electric suit. However, the close relationship with its subsidiary, the mail order house, was fully established, and, as already mentioned, heavily relied on by General Electric in support of its position. The absence of the parent corporation, the defendant herein, as a formal party in the General Electric suit cannot obliterate the plain fact that this defendant's part in the mail order house operation was taken into account and was held not to alter the legal effect of that operation.

[Injunction Not Violated]

The injunctive provisions of the final decree are to be read in context. It must not be forgotten that the original action was brought to enforce the plaintiff's rights under the New York Fair Trade Law. The relief sought and given within the framework of that law was the supression of acts forbidden, not of those permitted, by it. So construed, the injunction must be held limited to those activities which violated the New York Fair Trade Law. It having been determined that the conduct here charged as a contempt does not violate that law, it follows that it is not within the prohibition of the injunction. An injunction framed in terms of the statute upon which it is based adds nothing to the command of the statute.[2] This is particularly so in a [1] N. Y. General Business Law, §§ 369-a et seq.

[2] Douds v. I. L. A., 2 Cir., 224 F. 2d 455, 460, cert. denied 350 U. S. 873.

contempt proceeding.[3] As the Supreme Court has said:

"In contempt proceedings for its enforcement, a decree will not be expanded by implication or intendment beyond the meaning of its terms when read in the light of the issues and the purpose for which the suit was brought and the facts found must constitute a plain violation of the decree so read".[4]

The scope of the holding in the General Electric case is such that I am of the view there is no basis upon which to bottom a contempt of this Court's decree by reason of the organization of the subsidiary and the sales made by it and participated in by the defendant upon which the plaintiff's present motion was founded—activities found not to offend New York State's Fair Trade Laws. This conclusion avoids the anomaly of a ruling that acts which could not have been enjoined in the first instance may nonetheless be adjudged violative of the injunction herein and punished as a contempt.

[McGuire Act]

The plaintiff has urged the case of Eastman Kodak Co. v. Masters, Inc. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,351], 153 N. Y. S. 2d 433, wherein under substantially the same facts as here presented, it was held that mere advertising and offering for sale was a violation of an identical decree of the New York State Supreme Court. However, the authority of the case is undermined by the holding in the General Electric case that the New York statute is necessarily limited by the McGuire Act with respect to interstate transactions where the sale is consummated in a free trade jurisdiction. Plaintiff urges the continuing authority of the Eastman Kodak case on the ground that jurisdiction in the instant case rests upon diverse citizenship and accordingly, the federal court is bound by the state court interpretation of a state statute. However, the state statute derives its authority from the federal statute, the McGuire Act, and in any conflict between the two the federal law prevails. The limitation the McGuire Act places on state fair trade laws is not determined by the state courts; on the contrary on this issue federal law is supreme.[5] It is also noted that Judge Clark in the General Electric Co. case was of the view that apart from the controlling effect of the McGuire Act, the Courts of the State of New York would reach the same result by application of the conflicts rule.[6]

Whatever loopholes now exist in so far as enforcement of state trade fair laws are concerned is a subject for the legislature and not for the courts. Indeed, the McGuire Act was enacted in an effort to close the gap in the Miller-Tydings Law, which followed the ruling in Schwegmann Bros v. Calvert Distilleries Corp. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,823], 341 U. S. 384.

[Application Denied]

The application to adjudge the defendant in contempt is denied.

[¶ 68.902] United States v. Central States Theatre Corporation, Center Drive-In Theatre Co., Midwest Drive-In Theatre Co., and Frank D. Rubel (Additional Defendant).

In the United States District Court for the District of Nebraska. Civil No. 0117. Dated December 5, 1957.

Case No. 1276 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Motions and Defenses—Pretrial Determination of Defenses.—Government motions for a hearing and a determination before trial of defenses, relating to service of process and jurisdiction of the court over the defendants and subject matter of the action, were denied. Rule 12(d) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides for a pretrial determination of such defenses, but whether or not such a procedure should be pursued in a particular

---

[3] Terminal R. R. Ass'n v. United States, 266 U. S. 17; Douds v. Local 1250, 2 Cir., 173 F. 2d 764, 768; Star Bedding Co. v. Englander Co., 8 Cir., 239 F. 2d 537.

[4] Terminal R. R. Ass'n v. United States, 266 U. S. 17, 29.

[5] Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1; Testa v. Katt, 330 U. S. 386; Sola Electric Co. v. Jefferson Electric Co. [1940-1943 TRADE CASES ¶ 56,245], 317 U. S. 173.

[6] 244 F. 2d at 686.

case rests in the court's discretion, which should be judicially exercised with due regard to the circumstances of the case.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8229.

For the plaintiff: Earl A. Jinkinson and Francis C. Hoyt, Chicago, Ill., and William C. Spire, United States Attorney, Omaha, Neb.

For the defendants: Yale C. Holland (Kennedy, Holland, DeLacy & Svoboda), Omaha, Neb., for Central States Theatre Corp. and Frank D. Rubel.

For a prior opinion of the U. S. District Court, District of Nebraska, see 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,662.

Memorandum

[Nature of Action]

Delehant, District Judge (Retired, serving by assignment) [In full text]: This action to obtain injunctive relief was brought by plaintiff under Section 4 of the Sherman Act, Title 15 U. S. C., section 1 et seq., on account of, and to obtain the termination of, alleged violations of section 1 of the Act in the way of an alleged combination and conspiracy in restraint of interstate trade and commerce. The present ruling is made only in relation to a preliminary procedural step in the case.

[Answers]

In its answer to the complaint (filing No. 16), defendant Central States Theatre Corporation, among other things, in paragraph I

> "denies that it transacts business in the District of Nebraska, and that it is found in the District of Nebraska, and alleges that valid service of summons cannot be made and has not been made in this action upon defendant in the District of Nebraska."

and in paragraph VIII,

> "alleges that the averments of plaintiff's complaint are insufficient to state a claim upon which the relief prayed for herein could be granted. And defendant alleges that the court is without jurisdiction over the person of this defendant and is without jurisdiction to grant the relief herein prayed for."

The quoted portions of such answer in part respond to and dispute allegations touching the same subject matter of plaintiff's complaint.

Similarly, though not identically, defendant, Frank D. Rubel, also responding to allegations against him in the complaint, as amended and supplemented, in paragraph VII of his answer (filing No. 37):

> "alleges that the averments of plaintiff's complaint are insufficient to state a claim upon which the relief prayed for herein against this defendant could be granted. Defendant alleges that this court is without jurisdiction over the person of this defendant and is without jurisdiction to grant the relief prayed for."

[Government Motions]

Those answers having been served and filed, plaintiff served and filed the motions which precipitate this ruling. The earlier of these (filing No. 21) asks that, within Rule 12(d) hearing be had, and determination before trial made, upon the following defenses asserted in the answer of Central States Theatre Corporation, namely:

> "the defense of insufficiency of service of process appearing in paragraph I of said answer;" and
>
> "the defense of lack of jurisdiction of the person and of the subject matter appearing in paragraph VIII of said answer."

Similarly, the motion later filed (filing No. 39), aimed at the answer of defendant, Frank D. Rubel, prays for like hearing and determination on:

> "the defenses of lack of jurisdiction over the person and of the subject matter appearing in paragraph VII of said answer."

Those two motions have been submitted upon oral arguments of counsel and typewritten briefs. Both orally and in their briefs, counsel saw fit to argue not so much the appropriateness, or imprudence, as the case may be, in the present setting of a pretrial adjudication upon the tendered special defenses, as the course upon the merits which any such determination should take. The court understands that the answering defendants, especially Central States Theatre Corporation, do not directly resist, in fact, probably invite, such pretrial determination. And defendant, Central States Theatre Corporation has filed certain affidavits by way of a showing which it considers to support its position on the merits of the special defenses tendered by it. Plaintiff has made no countershowing.

[Pretrial Hearing Discretionary]

But despite the probable willingness of the litigants to have a pretrial hearing and determination upon those issues, whether such hearing and determination shall be had and made has to be—and is being—decided by the court. It retains control over its own calendar and administrative course.

Without unnecessary quotation, it may be observed that Rule 12(b) allows certain identified defenses, including those asserted by the present defendants, to be made either by answer or by motion. They are here tendered as parts of the answers of the affected defendants. It is then provided by Rule 12(d) that:

> "The defenses specifically enumerated (1)-(7) in subdivision (b) of this rule, whether made in a pleading or by motion . . . shall be heard and determined before trial on application of any party, unless the court orders that the hearing and determination thereof be deferred until the trial."

Thus, the course which plaintiff urges upon the court is by rule made available, and even accorded a recommended status. But it is not made imperative. Whether it should be pursued in a particular case rests in the court's discretion, which should be judicially exercised with due regard to the circumstances of such case. Montgomery Ward & Co. v. Schumacher (D. C. Cal) 3 F. R. D. 368; S. Hepworth Co. v. Western States Machine Co. (D. C. NY) 3 F. R. D. 493; Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States v. Saftlas (D. C. Pa.) 35 F. Supp. 62.

In the exercise of such discretion the court, in this instance, is persuaded that it should deny and overrule each of the motions of the plaintiff for pretrial determination, and affirmatively order that the hearing and determination of the tendered defenses be deferred until the trial. An order is being made and given accordingly. With no attempt at exhaustiveness or adequacy, some of the reasons supporting that action are now mentioned.

[Reasons for Denial]

While legal considerations are, and will be, involved in the eventual determination of the defenses upon which pretrial rulings are sought, the issues tendered are basically factual. Moreover, they involve, in part at least, the denial by each of the defendants, Central States Theatre Corporation and Frank D. Rubel, of averments against it or him, as the case may be, made by plaintiff in its complaint as modified and supplemented. Now, the court is not under the impression that issues thus arising may not possibly be tried and determined in advance of the final trial of an action upon its merits. Such a motion would be mistaken. But the court is persuaded that, in this particular case, the pretrial determination to which it is invited by the motions under consideration would be expensive both in money and in time, and administratively indiscreet and unwise. The whole evidence available upon the disputed points, in whatever form it may eventually be available, should be before the court, and the determination should be made upon it with consequent finality.

If the court were to proceed to a pretrial determination upon the issues tendered in the answers, and already pointed out, the factual background for the determination would have to be provided in either of two ways, (a) by affidavits and counter affidavits, or (b) by evidence and testimony in like manner as upon a regular trial.

Towards the former of those methods, the writer hereof acknowledges his entertainment of a considerable inhospitality. Factual submissions in that manner too frequently degenerate into "an ex parte swearing match," a matching of skills as between the contesting attorneys who prepare the showings. The result is a ruling based, not on testimony and evidence in any realistic sense, but on legal craftsmanship. And the showings made are almost invariably characterized by opinion, conclusion, hearsay and argument. It is a notoriously unsatisfaction [unsatisfactory] method of coming by a firm finding respecting disputed facts.

The court in the present controversy is strongly disposed to require its solution on the basis of evidence presented in the usual way. And, that being true, and the matters in dispute having at least partially to do with factual allegations of the complaint, it appears to be highly desirable to receive such evidence only once and that during the regular trial of the action. Any other course would involve two trials, in both of which, to some extent and probably in considerable measure, the same evidence would be offered. A duplication of trial sessions, especially of the presentation of the same evidence, is intolerably costly in time and money. A court generally acts prudently when it resolves to "take only one bite at the cherry." Lastly, there is greater assurance of finality in a judgment—even upon a jurisdictional issue—made and given after all possible evidence is before the court, and the evidentiary record is unquestionably closed. One entered by way of a pretrial determination is exposed to the hazard of the reception in the final trial of further evidence which may substantially discredit—even though it may not compel the vacation of—the judgment rendered along the way towards the eventual trial.

[¶ 68,903] United States v. Owens-Illinois Glass Company.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio, Western Division. No. 7686 Civil. Filed December 16, 1957.

Case No. 1310 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Pretrial Procedures—Interrogatories.—In an action charging that a container manufacturer violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act by acquiring a competitor, Government objections to certain interrogatories propounded by the manufacturer were sustained on the ground that some of the interrogatories were premature and on the ground that one of the interrogatories, if answered, would require the Government to present its case in advance of trial.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8225.260.

For the plaintiff: Donald F. Melchior, Antitrust Division, Department of Justice, Washington, D. C.

For the defendant: Fred E. Fuller and Ross W. Shumaker, Toledo, Ohio.

Memorandum of the Court Re Plaintiff's Objections to Defendant's Interrogatories

[Merger]

FRANK L. KLOEB, District Judge [In full text]: On August 10, 1956, an agreement of merger was entered into between defendant and National Container Corporation. The merger became effective on October 4, 1956. On December 4, plaintiff filed its complaint, in which it seeks divestiture, injunction and other relief. It appears that, beginning about July 10, 1956, general counsel for defendant was in correspondence with plaintiff with respect to the proposed merger and was then engaged in supplying certain information concerning it.

[Interrogatories]

On June 27, 1957, defendant propounded 46 interrogatories of plaintiff and, on August 19, plaintiff filed its objections to interrogatories Nos. 21 to 33, both inclusive, and Nos. 44 and 46. On August 20, plaintiff answered the remaining interrogatories.

A memorandum was filed in support of plaintiff's objections to the above numbered interrogatories and, on October 10, defendant filed its memorandum opposing plaintiff's objections. On November 15, plaintiff filed its reply to defendant's memorandum and, on November 18, plaintiff answered defendant's interrogatory No. 46.

On October 18, and prior to the filing of plaintiff's reply to defendant's memorandum, a pretrial conference was held, at which time counsel supplemented their memoranda with oral argument on the objections to the interrogatories.

The Court has carefully studied the memoranda and the transcript of the oral arguments offered at pretrial.

[Rulings on Objections]

It is felt that the objection to interrogatory No. 44 ought to be and is sustained on the ground that, if answered, plaintiff would be required to itemize the evidence and enumerate each fact upon which it relies in support of its various allegations. In other words, it would, in effect, be required to present its case in advance of trial.

The objections to interrogatories Nos. 21 to 33, both inclusive, are at this time sustained on the ground that, considering the nature of this action, they are premature. The Court so concludes, without passing upon the objection that they call for conclusions. It would seem that, in all fairness and in the public interest, plaintiff should have ample opportunity for discovery before committing itself by way of answers to these interrogatories. This does not preclude plaintiff from voluntarily furnishing answers to some or all of these interrogatories at a future date and when it is in a position to do so, nor does it preclude defendant from renewing these interrogatories at a future date and after plaintiff has been afforded a reasonable opportunity to pursue its discovery proceedings.

An order may be drawn accordingly.

[¶ 68,904] H. A. Sprowls v. Texas Gas Transmission Corporation.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of Indiana, Terre Haute Division. No. TH 56-C-49. Filed December 6, 1957.

Clayton and Sherman Antitrust Acts

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Treble Damages—Defenses—Statute of Limitations—Applicability of Federal and State Statutes—Nature of Treble Damage Action.—An Indiana two-year statute of limitations, covering actions for the recovery of statutory penalties, was held applicable to a treble damage action brought in a United States District Court in Indiana. The Federal four-year statute of limitations for treble damage actions does not apply to actions previously barred by applicable state statutes. The instant action was barred by the Indiana statute prior to the effective date of the Federal statute of limitations. In determining the applicable Indiana statute of limitations, the District Court found that the Indiana courts have consistently regarded as penal a statute which permits a recovery in excess of the amount of damage actually sustained and would regard an action for treble damages and attorney's fees as in the nature of a statutory penalty within the meaning of the Indiana statute. The court noted that the Indiana antitrust law provides for the recovery of "a penalty of three-fold the damages which may be sustained together with the costs of suit and attorney's fee."

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9010, 9010.100.

For the plaintiff: Dix, Dix, Patrick & Ratcliffe, Terre Haute, Ind., and Noll, Traynor & Hendricks, Springfield, Ill.

For the defendant: Barnes, Hickam, Pantzer & Boyd, Indianapolis, Ind.

Opinion

[Motion to Dismiss]

WILLIAM E. STECKLER, District Judge [In full text except for omissions indicated by asterisks]: The above entitled cause came before the Court upon the defendant's motion to dismiss the action and each court thereof because the complaint fails to state a claim against the defendant upon which relief can be granted. The ground upon which dismissal is sought is that it appears upon the face of the complaint that both counts were barred by the applicable provisions of the limitations statute at the time the action was commenced.

[Count I—Antitrust Claim]

Count I is an action for treble damages under 15 U. S. C. 15. It alleges in substance that in 1941 plaintiff, an individual residing in Vincennes, Indiana, together with associates whose interest he later acquired, entered into a contract with a group of individuals residing in Illinois, designated as the Phebus Group. Plaintiff and his associates agreed to assign to the Phebus Group an interest in certain leaseholds in Illinois believed to contain natural gas. The latter group undertook to furnish the financing to develop natural gas wells. The arrangement, referred to in the complaint as the "Phebus Project," also contemplated, if the development was successful, the obtaining of a Certificate of Public Convenience from the Federal Power Commission for the building of a pipeline to Vincennes, Indiana, and the execution of a contract to supply such gas to a distributing company serving that area. Such a Certificate was obtained in 1941 for a period expiring October 3, 1949, unless renewed, and a contract with the distributing company was entered into and gas was supplied thereunder for several years.

It is also alleged that defendant is an interstate natural gas company which, as a result of a merger in 1948, became the successor company of three predecessors, and that since 1941 and prior to the merger, one of such predecessors, and the defendant thereafter, have engaged in a course of conduct for the purpose of destroying the Phebus Project and monopolizing the interstate transportation and sale of natural gas in the Vincennes area in violation of the Sherman Act. Among other things, defendant is alleged to have caused the Phebus group to organize the Phebus Pipe Line Corporation to which their interest in the project was transferred, and defendant then acquired the stock of such corporation. By various acts and by means of the control so acquired defendant is alleged to have terminated the transmission of gas by Phebus to Vincennes, and to have permitted the Certificate of Public Convenience to expire in 1949 without attempting to renew it. On November 14, 1952, no gas having been supplied by Phebus for more than three years, defendant entered into a total requirements contract with said distributing company. The execution of the contract is alleged to have completed defendant's monopoly and destroyed the only market available to Phebus.

[Stautes of Limitation]

Prior to the enactment of 15 U. S. C. Section 15b on July 7, 1955, effective six months thereafter, there was no applicable federal limitation period for treble damage actions, and when such an action was barred depended upon the laws of the state in which the action was commenced. Section 15b provides a four year limitation period for such actions, but by its terms does not apply to actions previously barred by applicable state statutes. Burns' Ann. Stat., Section 2-602 provides that actions for the recovery of statutory penalties must be commenced within two years after their accrual date. If applicable to actions for treble damages and attorney's fees, the claim alleged in Count I was barred prior to the effective date of the federal four-year statute it accrued not later than November 14, 1952.

[Nature of Treble Damage Action]

The question of whether such an action is one to recover a statutory penalty within the meaning of the Indiana limitations statute has not been previously decided. The Court of Appeals for this Circuit has decided that the similar provisions of the Illinois and Wisconsin statutes apply to treble damage actions brought in those states, but since the basic question is how Indiana would classify such an action, these decisions are not controlling. They are important, however, in that they indicate certain principles upon which the proper solution of the problem depends.

[Decisions in General]

In Chattanooga Foundry & Pipe Works v. City of Atlanta (1906), 203 US 390, it was held on the basis of Huntington v. Attrill, 196 US 657, that an action for treble damages under the Sherman Act was not an action to recover a penalty within the meaning of the federal five-year statute, and that the Tennessee two-year statute, similar to Section 2-602, for actions for statutory penalties was also inapplicable. The Supreme Court recognized, however, that in the absence of an applicable federal statute, the question was what limitation period the particular state would determine to be applicable, and that the answer must be sought in the state court decisions.

In Hoskins Coal & Dock Co. v. Truax Traer Coal Co. (7 Cir.) [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,925], 191 F 2d 912, cert. den. 342 US 947, it was held that the Illinois two-year limitation provision for actions to recover statutory penalties was applicable to treble damage actions under 15 U. S. C. 15 brought in Illinois. In reaching that conclusion the Court of Appeals made use of two distinct lines of Illinois decisions. One line represented by C. B. & Q. R. Co. v. Jones, 149 Ill. 361, 37 NE 247, had held that actions for treble damages and attorneys' fees under an Illinois statute giving such an action to railroad shippers who had been charged more than the rates fixed by law, were barred by the Illinois two-year statutory penalty limitation provision. Neither Indiana nor Wisconsin appears to have a similar decision.

However, the Court of Appeals also cited Vestal v. Robertson, 277 Ill. 425, 115 NE 629, to the statement that

> "When the object is clearly to inflict a punishment on a party for violating the statute, it is penal in character, and the circumstance that in punishing, remedy is likewise afforded to those having an interest in the observance of the statute is unimportant."

Vestal v. Robertson was an action against corporate directors under a statute making them responsible for all debts of the corporation upon a failure to comply with a requirement of the corporation law that the capital stock be fully subscribed before the corporation assumed to act as such. The two-year limitation period for actions for statutory penalties was held applicable.

In Schiffman Bros. Inc. v. Texas Co. (1952) [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,270], 196 F 2d 695, where an unsuccessful effort was made to persuade the Court of Appeals that the Hoskins decision was erroneous, the court said:

> "It is to be observed that Illinois has specifically refused to follow the limited definition of penalty prescribed by Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657 . . ., but rather has held that a statutory recovery of damages not actually sustained but permitted in addition to accrued damages is not compensatory but in the nature of a statutory penalty within the meaning of the Illinois statute. Thus, in M. H. Vestal Co. v. Robertson, 277 Ill. 425, 115 N. E. 629, the court held that an action to recover damages for failure to perform certain statutory duties is within the two-year limitation."

It is clear from the foregoing statement that the Court of Appeals regards decisions such as Vestal Co. v. Robertson, as evidencing a refusal to follow the limited definition of the term "statutory penalty" prescribed by Huntington v. Attrill, and as a holding instead that a statutory recovery of damages not actually sustained, but permitted in addition to accrued damages, is not compensatory but in the nature of a statutory penalty within the meaning of a statute such as Section 2-602.

In Sun Theatre Corp. v. R. K. O. Radio Pictures, Inc. (7 Cir. 1954) [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,722], 213 F 2d 284, where a further attempt was made to persuade the Court of Appeals to reconsider the Hoskins and Schiffman cases, the plaintiff attempted to avoid the bar of the two-year statute by limiting the prayer to actual damages. It was held, however, that an action under 15 U. S. C. 15 is not an action to recover compensatory damages plus a penalty, but to recover a single penalty measured by trebling the actual damage. The principles stated in the foregoing decisions are important in considering the pertinent Indiana cases.

[Indiana Decision and Statutes]

In Brown v. Clow, 158 Ind. 403, the Supreme Court of Indiana held that an action based upon a statute requiring the subscribed capital stock of a corporation to be paid into the treasury within eighteen months from the incorporation, and making the directors liable in the event of a violation whereby the corporation was rendered insolvent, for all debts contracted after the violation, was an action for a statutory penalty within the meaning of Section 2-602. It was said since the liability imposed did not exist at common law, and does not attach to the directors as an ordinary incident of their office, it is a penalty or punishment for violation of the duties with which they are expressly charged. A prior decision of the court American etc. Co. v. Ellis, 156 Ind. 212 which held certain other sections of the corporation act remedial, and not penal, was distinguished on the ground that under such sections the actions were founded upon fraud and deceit which the creditor was required to allege and prove, and that recovery was expressly limited to the amount of the damages sustained.

There is no substantial difference either between the statutes involved, or the conclusions reached by the Supreme Courts of Indiana and Illinois, respectively, in Brown v. Clow, supra, and Vestal v. Robertson, supra, and there is no basis for giving them a different significance with respect to the meaning of actions for statutory penalties as used in the respective statutes of limitations of those states. There are no later Indiana cases which in any respect overrule, modify, or even question Brown v. Clow.

As previously stated the Court of Appeals reached the same result as to the meaning of the term "statute penalty" in the Wisconsin statute. Grengs v. Twentieth Century Fox Film Corp. (1956) [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,318], 232 F 2d 325, cert. den. 352 US 871. Not only was there no Wisconsin decision holding that actions for treble damages and attorneys' fees are actions for statutory penalties within the meaning of the Wisconsin statute, but Wisconsin apparently had no case involving a statute such as that held to create an action for a statutory penalty in Vestal v. Robertson and Brown v. Clow. The Grengs opinion does not discuss the Wisconsin cases and it is necessary to examine the briefs in that case to determine the basis for the holding that treble damage actions are actions for statutory penalties within the meaning of the Wisconsin limitations statute. Wisconsin has multiple damage statutes of various types and the Wisconsin courts have been required to determine for various purposes (not including the applicable limitations provision) whether they are penal or remedial. They have consistently held them penal where the issue was whether they should be strictly or liberally construed.

Burns' Ann. Stat. 1952 Repl., Section 40-102 provides that when wages are wrongfully withheld an action may be brought for the amount due, together with an additional amount as "liquidated damages" equal to 10% per day of the unpaid amount not exceeding double the amount of wages due. After the expiration of 20 days the permitted recovery would be treble the amount of the unpaid wage. Notwithstanding the legislative characterization of the amount in excess of the actual wage due as "liquidated damages," and notwithstanding the amount actually due is included in the recovery, and furnishes a yardstick in measuring the total recovery just as in treble damage actions under 15 U. S. C. Section 15, the Indiana courts have consistently held such statutes to be penal and consequently subject to strict construction. Standard Liquors v. Narcovich, 121 Ind. App. 600, trans. den.; U. S. Reduction Co. v. Neusbaum, 112 Ind. App. 330, trans. den.; Cf. Superior Laundry Co. v. Rose, 193 Ind. 138.

It is also of some significance that Indiana has a state antitrust statute which contains a provision for treble damage actions obviously modelled after 15 U. S. C. 15 (Ch. 243, Section 7, Acts of 1907, Burns' Ann. Stat. 1950 Repl. Sect. 23-122) and the recovery provided is "a penalty of three-fold the damages which may be sustained together with the costs of suit and attorney's fee." Since the issue in what the Indiana Legislature meant when it used the term "statutory penalty" in the Indiana limitations statute, the fact that it has expressly characterized a recovery of the same nature as that afforded by 15 U. S. C. 15 as a "penalty" is an indication of the legislative understanding of the meaning of the term.

[Dismissal Granted]

For the reasons stated the Court has concluded that the Indiana courts have consistently regarded as penal a statute which permits a recovery in excess of the amount of damage actually sustained, and would regard an action for treble damages and attorney's fees as in the nature of a statutory penalty within the meaning of Burns' Sect. 2-602, and that provision is therefore applicable. This conclusion makes it unnecessary to determine whether Count I would be barred under Burns' Ann. Stat. Sect. 2-606, or whether the claim alleged therein accrued prior to November 14, 1952 and more than four years before the commencement of the action as defendant also contends. The motion to dismiss Count I must be sustained for the reasons stated.

[Count II—Cause of Action]

Count II alleges substantially the same facts as Count I and charges that defendant and Phebus Pipe Line Company wrongfully and maliciously conspired and combined to destroy the Phebus Project, terminate its contract with the distributing company, and deprive plaintiff of a livelihood and earnings derived therefrom, and that as a direct and proximate result plaintiff has been damaged by the loss of his share of the profits of the enterprise. No violation of the antitrust laws is claimed. * * *

* * *

[¶ 68,905] Eastern Fireproofing Co., Inc. v. United States Gypsum Company and National Gypsum Company.

In the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts. Civil Action No. 57-938-A. Dated December 27, 1957.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Pretrial Procedures—Interrogatories—Priority.—Where a defendant, prior to filing its answer, served interrogatories on a plaintiff, and, subsequently, the plaintiff served interrogatories on the defendant, the plaintiff and defendant were required to file their sealed answers to each other's interrogatories with the clerk of the court on or before a specified date, and the court would then notify the parties to serve their answers on each other, unless the answers appeared plainly inadequate. In view of the circumstances of the case, the court did not follow the general disposition rule that the one who first serves notice has priority. The only material advantage that the defendant could gain from examining the plaintiff's answers before filing its own would be to learn how much the plaintiff knows or does not know. Since antitrust violations are normally secret as well as difficult to prove, this would not be an advantage to be fostered.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9013.875.

For the plaintiff: Endicott Peabody and Joseph M. Koufman, of Peabody, Koufman & Brewer, Boston, Mass.

For the defendants: G. D'Andelot Belin, Conrad W. Oberdorfer, Maurice H. Richardson, and Robert Proctor, Boston, Mass., for U. S. Gypsum Co.; and Leonard Wheeler, Frank B. Wallis, and Walker B. Comegys, Jr., Boston, Mass., for Natl. Gypsum Co.

Opinion

[Interrogatories]

ALDRICH, District Judge [In full text]: This is a private treble damage action for violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. The complaint, alleging damages in the amount of $975,000, (single), was filed on September 24, 1957. On October 9 the time to answer or otherwise plead was extended by the court, on consent of the plaintiff, to December 2nd. On November 7 the defendant* filed extensive interrogatories to the plaintiff. On November 13 plaintiff filed interrogatories to the defendant. On November 18 plaintiff filed extensive objections to defendant's interrogatories, and on November 22 defendant filed objections to plaintiff's. On consent of the parties the court has ordered that the interrogatories which were not objected to need not be answered until further order of court. Such further order has not yet been made. On December 9 the court heard the objections of both parties, and took them under advisement. They have been passed on this day. There is now pending a motion by plaintiff that all answers of both parties be filed and exchanged simultaneously. The court has express power under Rule 30(b) to grant such a motion. The defendant opposes, on the ground that it should not lose the advantage of the priority in time it had gained by its "diligence."

[Priority]

I confess that my first reaction with regard to plaintiff's motion was to deny it, on the analogy of the generally-recognized "first served, first come" deposition rule. But on reflection it seems to me that each case must be considered in relation to its own problems. Normally only one deposition can proceed at a time, and it is logical that the one who first serves notice should be the one to have the priority. But what advantage should defendant here receive from having first served interrogatories? Obviously it is not speed in disposing of the case. Nor am I impressed by its self-styled diligence. What defendant did was to obtain a courtesy from the plaintiff to extend for seven weeks what was otherwise its obligation to do, and employ that time to beat plaintiff to the draw by six days in the preparation of interrogatories.

* Only the defendant United States Gypsum Company is involved in this opinion.

Plaintiff's interrogatories to defendant do not appear such that plaintiff's answers to defendant's interrogatories are substantially needed to enable defendant to reply. Without in any way implying that this is its purpose, the only material advantage that it seems to me defendant could gain from examining plaintiff's answers before filing its own would be to learn how much plaintiff presently knows, or does not know. Having in mind that anti-trust violations are normally secret, as well as difficult to prove, this would not be an advantage to be fostered.

[Ruling]

Under the circumstances it is ordered that both parties shall answer all interrogatories to which objections have not been sustained, on or before January 31, 1958, and file the answers with the clerk in sealed envelopes, without serving copies on the other side. When both parties have answered I will open the envelopes and, unless the answers appear plainly inadequate, notify the parties to make service.

[¶ 68,906] United States v. Gulf Coast Shrimpers and Oystermans Association, Louis Simmons, Leon Strong, and Walter McVeay.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi, Biloxi Division. Criminal Action No. 7192. Dated October 18, 1957.

Case No. 1158 in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure—Criminal Prosecutions—Convictions—Prison Sentences—Probation.—The execution of nine-month prison sentences imposed on two defendants who were found guilty of violating the Sherman Act was suspended where the court found that society and the welfare of the defendants would be best subserved by the suspension of such sentences. The court, in placing the defendants on probation for a period of nine months, noted that a large number of testimonials indicated that the defendants were not criminals in the acceptation of that term, but were, of course, guilty of the violations of law charged to them.

See Department of Justice Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8029.700.

For the plaintiff: Henry M. Stuckey, Special Assistant to the Attorney General, Washington, D. C.; and Robert E. Hauberg, United States Attorney, Jackson, Miss.

For the defendants: Howard A. McDonnell, Biloxi, Miss.; C. Paul Barker, New Orleans, La.; and Albert Sidney Johnston, Jr., Biloxi, Miss.

For a prior decision of the U. S. Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit, see 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,469.

[Petition for Probation]

S. C. MIZE, District Judge [In full text]: This matter comes on before the Court upon a petition of Louis Simmons and Walter McVeay, Jr., to grant them probation and suspend the execution of the sentence of nine months that was heretofore imposed upon the defendants by this Court. After the conviction of the defendants they were sentenced by the Court to serve a term of nine months in prison. The case was appealed [to] the Court of Appeals and was affirmed by the Court of Appeals, and upon application for certiorari the application was denied. The mandate has now come back to this court to put into effect the sentence that was imposed.

The defendants, not having entered upon the service of their sentence up until this time, have timely filed the petition to suspend the execution of the sentence and place them upon probation.

[Hardships]

The defendants have filed a large number of letters testifying to the good character of the defendants and to the present cordial relationship existing between the packers and the union, and to the hardships that would be imposed upon the defendants if they are required to serve the sentence and if probation should be denied them.

The defendant Walter McVeay, Jr. is the father of eleven children, some of whom are dependent upon him for support, and also has an aged mother to whose support he contributes and gives his personal attention to her welfare. The defendant Louis Simmons has a family consisting of his wife and three children who are dependent upon him for support; and at this time there is a mortgage upon his home for a substantial amount which he probably would lose if he is required to serve the sentence. The petition for suspension of sentence has been supported by letters from several of the packers, by prominent business men, City officials and County officials; and upon careful and thorough consideration the Court is of the opinion that justice would better be subserved by suspending the execution of the sentence and granting the defendants probation.

The Government has interposed an objection to the suspension of the sentence and the Court has taken that into consideration; but considering all of the facts and circumstances I am of the opinion that society first would be best subserved by granting the suspension, and undoubtedly the welfare of the defendants would be better subserved. The large number of testimonials indicate that the defendants are not criminals in the acceptance of that term, but were, of course, guilty of the violations of law charged to them.

[Suspended Sentence]

An order may therefore be drawn suspending the execution of the sentence that was imposed heretofore upon them and that they be placed upon probation for a period of nine months, and that they shall follow out the instructions of the Probation Officer.

[¶ 68,907] Electric Pipe Line, Inc. v. Fluid Systems, Incorporated.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. No. 29—October Term, 1957. Docket No. 24536. Argued November 12, 1957; decided December 30, 1957.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Connecticut, Robert P. Anderson, Judge.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies—Patents—Combination Patent—Required Purchase of Unpatented Components from Patentee.—In reviewing the method by which damages were computed for the infringement of a combination patent covering a thermal electric system, the court rejected the infringer's contention that the patentee must apportion profits resulting from the sale of the system to exclude revenues derived from the unpatented component parts since, to do otherwise, was tantamount to saying that the patentee was entitled to use the patent to compel its customers to buy the unpatented components from it. The court noted that this was precisely what it previously had held (Electric Pipe Line, Inc. v. Fluid Systems, Inc., 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,300) the patentee could do and not violate the antitrust laws.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2013.500.

For the plaintiff-appellant: James E. Nolan, Washington, D. C. (T. Clay Lindsey and John Prutzman, of Lindsey & Prutzman, Hartford, Conn., on the brief).

For the defendant-appellee: Edmond M. Bartholow, of Rockwell & Bartholow, New Haven, Conn.

For a prior opinion of the U. S. Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, see 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,300, affirming a decision of the U. S. District Court, District of Connecticut, 1955 Trade Cases ¶ 68,043.

Before: Clark, Chief Judge, Moore, Circuit Judge, and Leibell, District Judge.

[Appeal]

Electric Pipe Line, Inc., appeals from a judgment against it, D. C. Conn., 146 F. Supp. 262, for damages for infringement of Lines Patent, No. 2,224,403, belonging to Fluid Systems, Incorporated, and from a determination that its five modified fuel transportation systems also infringe this patent. Affirmed.

[Patent Infringement—Damages]

CLARK, Chief Judge [In full text except for omissions indicated by asterisks]: Plaintiff, Electric Pipe Line, Inc., originally instituted this action for a declaratory judgment that its system for reducing the viscosity of heavy fuel oils did not infringe defendant's patented system designed for the same purpose. Plaintiff also maintained that defendant's patent, Lines No. 2,224,403, was invalid. Defendant counterclaimed for infringement, asking for damages and injunctive relief. The district court upheld the validity of the patent, determined that plaintiff's system was infringing, enjoined plaintiff from further use of its system, and referred the issue of damages to a Special Master for hearing and report. Electric Pipe Line v. Fluid Systems, D. C. Conn. [1955 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,043], 132 F. Supp. 123, affirmed 2 Cir., [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,300] 231 F. 2d 370. During the pendency of the damages proceeding, plaintiff devised five modifications of its infringing system which it claims do not infringe defendant's patent. This issue was also referred to the Special Master, who fixed damages for the original infringement and held that the five modified systems also infringed defendant's patent. The district court adopted the Special Master's report in substance, and plaintiff appeals from the resulting judgment awarding defendant $22,538.43, together with injunctive relief, interest, and costs.

* * *

[Antitrust Defense]

The business of the parties is to furnish plans and parts for fuel transportation systems. A substantial portion of their profits results from the sale of the parts. These parts include transformers, thermostats, tank assemblies, insulated flanges, control panels, and electric immersion heaters. Many of these items have separate uses outside the systems and can be purchased separately for other purposes. In the original infringement action plaintiff maintained that defendant violated the antitrust laws by requiring that its customers purchase all these items from it. We rejected this contention, finding that "the sale of unpatented components is incidental to the sale of the system as a whole, even though Fluid's revenue is derived from the sale of the components." Electric Pipe Line v. Fluid Systems, 2 Cir. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,300], 231 F. 2d 370, 372. We went on to say that "[w]here the owner of a combination patent designs the installation and guarantees its performance, it is not an unreasonable use of the patent to insist that the components of the patented system be obtained from it." Ibid. Now plaintiff renews its argument under a new guise. It contends that defendant must apportion profits resulting from the sale of the system to exclude revenues derived from the unpatented component parts. To do otherwise, says plaintiff, is tantamount to say that Fluid Systems was entitled to use the patent to compel its customers to buy their accessories from it. But this is precisely what we held Fluid Systems could do and not violate the antitrust laws. Therefore, the inclusion of profits from the sale of all the components seems proper, because Fluid Systems' revenues would have reflected these sales had it not been for Electric Pipe's infringement.

Further, the patent here involved gave value to the components which otherwise would have been useless for the purposes involved and would not have been sold by Electric Pipe or anyone else. As Judge Anderson said, D. C. Conn., 146 F. Supp. 262, 263, 264: "The facts and circumstances of this case come under the rule that where the entire marketable value of the thing sold is dependent on the patent, its entire value is included in computing infringement damages." The Goulds Mfg. Co. v. Cowing, 105 U. S. 253; Hurlbut v. Schillinger, 130 U. S. 456; Wales v. Waterburg Mfg. Co., 2 Cir., 101 F. 126, certiorari denied 177 U. S. 693; Westinghouse v. New York Air Brake Co., 2 Cir., 140 F. 545, certiorari denied 201 U. S. 648. Defendant was under no duty to apportion profits, and the component parts properly were included in the computation of lost profits.

Judgment affirmed.

[¶ 68,908]. Scientific Living, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission.

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. No. 12,265. Dated August 12, 1957 and September 3, 1957.

Federal Trade Commission Act

Federal Trade Commission Enforcement and Procedure—Unfair Practice Proceeding—Compliance with Cease and Desist Order—Enforcement of Subpoena Duces Tecum—Timeliness of Appeal.—An appeal from a Federal District Court order requiring a corporation to comply with a subpoena duces tecum served on the corporation by the Federal Trade Commission, in the course of an investigation to ascertain whether or not the corporation was complying with a cease and desist order issued against it under the Federal Trade Commission Act, was dismissed for want of timely prosecution.

See FTC Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 8741, 8741.10, 8741.20, 8741.55.

Dismissing an appeal from a judgment of the U. S. District Court, Middle District of Pennsylvania, 1957 Trade Cases ¶ 68,673, ordering compliance with a Federal Trade Commission subpoena in Dkt. 6099.

[Order of August 12, 1957]

Present: BIGGS, Chief Judge, and GOODRICH and KALODNER, Circuit Judges.

BIGGS, Chief Judge [In full text]: And now, to wit, this 12th day of August, 1957 it is Ordered that the motion of the appellee to dismiss the appeal for want of timely prosecution be and the same hereby is granted and the appeal hereby is dismissed.

[Order of September 3, 1957]

Present: BIGGS, Chief Judge, and GOODRICH and KALODNER, Circuit Judges.

BIGGS, Chief Judge [In full text]: Upon consideration of the motion by appellant, filed August 19, 1957, to vacate the order of this Court dismissing the above entitled appeal, to reverse the judgment of the district court, and to restrain and enjoin the Federal Trade Commission from any further interference with appellant.

It is Ordered that the motion be and it is hereby denied.

[¶ 68,909] Radiant Burners, Inc. v. American Gas Association, Inc., et al.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. No. 57 C 1167. Dated December 20, 1957.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Necessary Averments to State Cause of Action—Restraint of Interstate Commerce—Public Injury.—A manufacturer's complaint charging that gas utility companies, gas burner manufacturing suppliers, and a trade association engaged in a conspiracy, pursuant to which the association refused to approve its gas burner and the utilities consequently refused to supply gas for its burners, was dismissed on the ground that the complaint failed to allege any restraint on interstate commerce and any injury to the public. The only commerce referred to as restrained was the business of the plaintiff manufacturer, and there was no allegation that it was interstate. While there was an allegation that the defendants were engaged in interstate commerce, there was no allegation, nor was it probable, that they were restraining their own business. Also, there were no allegations from which it could be inferred that there was an injury to the public. The antitrust laws were not intended to promote the vindication of purely private wrongs.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9009.475, 9009.600.

For the plaintiff: Joseph Keig, Sr., Chicago, Ill.

For the defendants: Ross & O'Keefe; James J. Gaughan; Haft, Shapiro & Davis; and Jesse Holland, all of Chicago, Ill.

Memorandum

[Motion to Dismiss]

PHILIP L. SULLIVAN, District Judge [In full text]: This complaint charges defendants with violations of the Sherman Act, citing Sections 1, 15 and 26 of Title 15 U. S. C. Defendants have moved to dismiss the complaint on the ground that it fails to state a cause of action. Since this motion will be allowed it is not necessary to consider other motions made by defendants.

[Complaint]

The complaint alleges that: Plaintiff "is an Illinois corporation and is in the business of manufacturing, selling and distributing gas burners for space heating in homes and commercial and industrial places of business." Defendants are gas utility corporations and gas burner and appliance manufacturing suppliers, some of whom are engaged in interstate commerce, and the American Gas Association, Inc., a trade association of which the other defendants are members. The Association, which tests and approves gas burner appliances, has capriciously and wrongfully refused to approve plaintiff's burner. As a consequence of the absence of this approval, various of the defendants have refused to provide gas for plaintiff's burner, and have withdrawn certification of dealers who sell plaintiff's product. All this has been pursuant to a conspiracy among the defendants, and resulted in the loss to plaintiff of "substantial profits which it otherwise would have obtained."

[Interstate Commerce]

The complaint patently fails to state a cause of action. The gist of an action under the Sherman Act must be the "restraint" or "monopolizing" of "trade or commerce among the several states" (Title 15 U. S. C. § 1 and 2). There is no allegation here from which it can be deduced that any interstate commerce was restrained. (Cf. Robinson v. Lull [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,521], 145 F. Suppl. 134, 137 (N. D. Ill. 1956.) The only commerce referred to as restrained is the business belonging to the plaintiff, and there is no allegation that it is interstate. Although the plaintiff's brief emphasizes the allegation that defendants are engaged in interstate commerce, there is no allegation, nor is it probable, that they were restraining their own businesses.

[Public Injury]

By the same token, there is no allegation from which it can be inferred that there has been any injury to the public, and this is an essential element (Fedderson Motors Inc. v. Ward [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,579], 180 F. 2d 519 (C. A. 10, 1950). The anti-trust laws, providing as they do the harsh penalty of triple damages, were not intended to promote the vindication of purely private wrongs, but to protect the public and the economy of the country from the crippling effects of monopoly.

[Dismissal]

The complaint fails to state a cause of action, and it will be dismissed.

[¶ 68,910] Carney, et al. v. Liebmann Breweries, Inc., et al.

In the New York Supreme Court, New York County, Special Term, Part I. 138 N. Y. L. J., No. 63, page 5. Dated September 27, 1957.

New York Antitrust (Donnelly) Act

Combinations and Conspiracies Under State Laws—Procedure—Examination of Defendants Before Trial—Bill of Particulars—Priority.—In an action charging that brewers of beer formed an organization to fix prices in violation of the New York antitrust law, the plaintiffs were permitted to examine the defendants before trial and such examinations were to take place prior to the service of bills of particulars. If a price fixing arrangement was effected, only the defendants would know all of the details concerning such an arrangement. In the interest of orderly procedure, the plaintiffs should not be required to furnish bills of particulars until after the examination of the defendants. To require a bill of particulars in advance of obtaining the necessary information is futile.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2425.34.

For a prior opinion of the New York Supreme Court, New York County, see 1956 Trade Cases ¶ 68,556.

[Motion]

McGivern, Justice [In full text]: On this motion the plaintiffs request an examination before trial of the defendants, together with the production of books and documents, and further seek an order vacating or modifying several demands for bills of particulars, or if not vacated, that said bills be served after the plaintiffs have completed their examinations of the defendants.

In opposition thereto one of the defendants, Piel Brothers, objects on the ground that the branch of the motion to vacate or modify is untimely as to them because they had refused to extend the time by stipulation; the other defendants do not urge this as they had consented to extensions of time. This contention of Piel Brothers, predicated on the timeliness of the plaintiffs' motion to vacate or modify the demand in the bill, is rejected.

[Cross-Motions]

By cross-motions, the defendants ask for an examination before trial of the plaintiffs, prior to their examination before trial of the defendants, but after service of the bills of particulars by plaintiffs.

In general opposition to plaintiffs' motion, the defendants argue that all of plaintiffs' objections to defendants' demands for particulars should be overruled, that plaintiffs be required to serve their bills prior to any examinations before trial, and that the defendants are entitled to priority of examinations in these cases. While the plaintiffs have challenged the propriety of various items of the demands for particulars and the requested examinations, the defendants have not questioned items, but do assert that the entire examinations of them should be denied.

[Antitrust Claim]

The action on which these motions and cross-motions are based charges a violation of section 340 of the General Business Law. It is alleged that six of the defendants, brewers of beer, entered into an arrangement to form an organization, the seventh defendant, Metropolitan Brewers Institute, to fix prices in restraint of trade and monopoly; injunctive relief and damages are demanded. The defendants deny the material allegations, particularly as to the alleged price-fixing arrangement, and set up defenses consisting of the statute of limitations.

Rule XI, paragraph 8, of the New York County Supreme Court Rules states "Where a party to be examined has made a timely demand or motion after joinder of issue for a bill of particulars, the party seeking the examination will generally be required to serve his bill of particulars before proceeding with the examination of the adverse party." It is recognized this is subject to the discretion of the court, and may for good cause be disposed of otherwise. The amended complaint, which has successfully withstood attack by the defendants, contains twenty-nine paragraphs and nine demands for judgment. The defendants' answers contain fifteen paragraphs, and each has six separate and partial defenses. The individual demands for bills of particulars contain from 13 to 19 items with as many as 7 subdivisions, in all a total of approximately 225 items.

[Examination of Defendants]

The plaintiffs have asked for an examination of all defendants as to 31 items and argue that the items are material and necessary due to the nature of the case, i.e., illegal monopoly, knowledge of which is allegedly within the singular possession of the defendants and of which the plaintiffs have no information. The defendants state that after exhaustive investigations, there is no basis for the charges made in the complaint and that the defendants have no facts within their knowledge concerning said charges. They do not question the individual items of the examination except to state in their brief that items A, B, and C, relating to the production of papers, indicate a "fishing expedition," as they are unlimited in both time and subject matter. However, the professed lack of knowledge of a party does not bar an examination nor does a denial of the charges contained in the complaint; neither does the plaintiffs' lack of knowledge; in fact, it may be a strong supporting reason for allowing an examination of defendants before trial (Evenga v. Herrick, 3 App. Div., 2d, 110, 112). The court is of the opinion that the plaintiffs are entitled to the examinations before trial, and that said examinations should be had prior to the service of the bills of particulars.

The rules of this court state that generally a bill must be served before the opposite party may have an examination. Also, the court may direct that a bill be served before the examination (and the plaintiffs state under oath that they do not have the knowledge at this time) and permit the service of a further bill after completion of the examination (Schlank v. East River Savings Bank, 272 App. Div., 56). It is clear that most of the information sought herein is within the defendants' knowledge and control, and no useful purpose would be served by requiring plaintiffs to serve the bills sought prior to the examinations (Zelboorg v. Zelboorg, 131 N. Y. S., 2d 192). Since conspiracy, if it does exist, is generally the result of a secret agreement between the conspiratorial parties it is not likely that others may know all the details. The court, from the papers submitted, believes that if a price fixing arrangement was effected, only the defendants do in fact know all the details, and in the interest of orderly procedure the plaintiffs should not be required to serve their bills until after the examinations of the defendants (Lustig v. Longchamps, 279 App. Div., 928). To require a bill of particulars in advance of obtaining the necessary information is futile (Weber v. Columbia Amus. Co., 154 App. Div., 882). Therefore, upon the termination of the examination, the plaintiffs should be able to furnish an accurate and comprehensive bill of particulars.

[Procedure]

Accordingly, the examination before trial of the defendants, pursuant to the notice of motion, shall proceed at Special Term, Part II, of this court, at 10 A.M., on October 8, 1957. The defendants will be examined by such officer, agent, or employee as may possess sufficient knowledge of the facts, and will be examined in the order in which they appear in the title of the action, and they will produce on the examination such books and papers as are necessary pursuant to section 296 of the Civil Practice Act. The examinations before trial of the plaintiffs will take place immediately following the conclusion of the defendants' examinations pursuant to the notice of cross-motions served by the defendants. It is also to be observed that this is an action in equity, and hence comes within subdivision 4 of Rule XI of New York County Supreme Court Rules (cf. Cornell v. Eaton, 286 App. Div., 1124) wherein the court stated: "In an equity action no harm can come from a broad examination of a party, and the trial will be materially shortened to the extent that the facts are developed beforehand."

In so far as the plaintiffs' motion seeks to vacate or modify defendants' demands for bills of particulars, it is denied, without prejudice to renewal after the completion of plaintiffs' and defendants' examinations before trial. The plaintiffs are directed to furnish the bills or move in relation thereto within ten days after completion of said examinations. Settle orders consistent with this decision.

[¶ 68,911] The A. L. B. Theatre Corporation v. Loew's Incorporated, et al.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. No. 56 C 727. Dated December 31, 1957.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Injunctive Relief—Pretrial Procedures—Filing of Amended Complaint—Delay—Prejudice.—A plaintiff was granted leave to file an amended and supplemental complaint for treble damages where the defendants made no showing that they would be prejudiced by the filing of such a complaint and where the plaintiff's relationship with the defendants had changed since the initiation of its original action for injunctive relief. Injunctive relief would no longer have been of any benefit to the plaintiff because of the change of relationship. The fact that the motion was presented more than a year and a half after the filing of the original complaint did not bar the granting of the motion to amend. Delay, in itself, does not warrant the refusal of leave to amend, and the defendants did not show that they would be prejudiced.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9013.100, 9026.

For the plaintiff: Seymour F. Simon and Howard Hoosin, Chicago, Ill.

For the defendants: Francis E. Matthews, Robert W. Bergstrom, John F. Caskey, Miles G. Seeley, Bryson P. Burnham, Louis Nizer, Samuel W. Block, Wesley G. Hall, and Arthur A. Goldberg, Chicago, Ill.

Memorandum

[Amended Complaint]

JULIUS J. HOFFMAN, District Judge [In full text]: The plaintiff, The A. L. B. Theatre Corporation, has moved for leave to file an amended and supplemental complaint under Rule 15(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. This motion was presented more than a year and a half after the filing of the original complaint; consequently it was taken under advisement for careful consideration. Nothwithstanding the substantial lapse of time prior to filing of the motion, however, leave to amend is granted.

Under Rule 15(a) a pleading to which a response has been filed may be amended only by leave of court or with the consent of the adverse party. The Rule expresses a mandate that "leave shall be freely given when justice so requires. * * *" A motion to amend is addressed to the sound discretion of the court. Emich Motors Corp. v. General Motors Corp. [1956 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,249], 229 F. 2d 714 (7th Cir. 1956); Arrow Petroleum Co. v. Johnston, 162 F. 2d 269 (7th Cir. 1947), cert. denied, 332 U. S. 817 (1947). Therefore, the decisions cited in the briefs of the parties are advisory only, and the case must rest upon its particular facts. Armstrong Cork Co. v. Patterson-Sargent Co., 10 F. R. D. 534 (N. D. Ohio 1950).

[Antitrust Claim]

This action is predicated upon alleged antitrust violations by the defendants resulting in the inability of the plaintiff, operator of the Belmont motion picture theater, to obtain an adequate film supply. On April 20, 1956, the plaintiff filed its original complaint seeking injunctive relief. Since that time the plaintiff has lost its lease on the Belmont Theater. Unprofitable operations caused by inability to obtain pictures from the defendant distributors allegedly resulted in the plaintiff's eviction for failure to pay rent on January 31, 1957.

[Differences Between Complaints]

There are three significant differences between the original and amended complaints. The first is that the new complaint seeks treble damages under the Clayton Act instead of injunctive relief as originally prayed. The plaintiff notes that in view of its eviction from the Belmont Theater an injunction against the defendants' practices would no longer be of any benefit to it. The second difference lies in the allegations concerning the nature of the conspiracy with which the defendants are charged. The original complaint asserts that the defendants are engaged in a continuing conspiracy to monopolize and restrain commerce in the licensing of motion pictures in the City of Chicago. It describes the distribution system for films employed by the defendant distributors since about 1947. The amended complaint adds to the former conspiracy allegations assertions that the combination originated prior to 1935; it contains detailed descriptions of the practices of the defendants between 1935 and 1947 and avers that the findings and decrees of United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., Civil Action No. 87-273 in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, are prima facie evidence of the truth of the allegations concerning this earlier period. The third difference between the complaints is found in the charges concerning the rental prices paid by Balaban & Katz theaters to obtain films from the defendant distributors. These charges as made in the amended complaint are somewhat modified from those originally stated.

[Prejudice]

The principal argument advanced by the defendants in opposition to the plaintiff's motion rests upon several cases holding that leave to amend a pleading will not be granted if the moving party has delayed in presenting its amendment without showing an adequate reason for the delay. See, e.g., Frank Adam Electric Co. v. Westinghouse Electric and Mfg. Co., 146 F. 2d 165 (8th Cir. 1945); Shick v. Finch, 8 F. R. D. 639 (S. D. N. Y. 1944). The defendants maintain that the plaintiff could have offered its amendment shortly after its eviction on January 31, 1957; instead, the defendants note, the plaintiff waited about eight months before moving to file the new complaint.

With respect to a similar argument the court stated in Armstrong Cork Co. v. Patterson-Sargent Co., supra [10 F. R. D. 534, 535 (N. D. Ohio 1950)] that > "Some of the above cases plaintiff contends stand for the proposition that delay itself will defeat the motion. The correct rule, however, may be found in Woldow v. Edgemoor Realty Co., D. C., 81 F. Supp. 800, 803, where it was held that: 'The timeliness of motions to amend obviously depends upon the facts of each case and the legal pantomime in getting the case to issue.'

>
> "Time of itself is not important. Other reasons must attach and in this case there is no reason that prevents a favorable ruling on this motion."

The opinions of the Court of Appeals for the 7th Circuit have consistently employed as the criterion for granting or refusing leave to amend a pleading the test of whether the adverse party would be prejudiced by filing of the amendment. See e.g., Goldenberg v. World Wide Shippers and Movers of Chicago, Inc., 236 F. 2d 198 (7th Cir. 1956); Huse v. Consolidated Freightways, Inc., 227 F. 2d 425 (7th Cir. 1955); Aiken v. Insull, 122 F. 2d 746 (7th Cir. 1941), cert. denied, 315 U. S. 806 (1941). No case in this circuit has been found which holds that delay in itself warrants refusal of leave to amend. In the Goldenberg case, supra, the district court had permitted an amendment of the complaint two years after the filing of the complaint and two days before trial. The Court of Appeals upheld this ruling on the ground that the defendant was not prejudiced by the plaintiff's delay in offering its amendment. In the Huse case, supra, prejudice to the adverse party was also employed as the criterion for judging whether an amendment should be accepted. In the Aiken case, supra, the same criterion was used, and the district court was held in error for denying leave to amend seven years after the original complaint was filed.

In the present case, it must be determined whether the defendants will be prejudiced if leave to amend be granted. In view of the change in the plaintiff's circumstances, justice would seem to require that leave be afforded if the defendants will not be prejudiced thereby.

The defendants do not claim that they will be prejudiced if leave is granted. Rather they rely upon the plaintiff's delay as itself requiring denial of leave to amend. Two points made by the defendants in their brief, however, bear upon the issue of prejudice.

First, it is argued that several portions of the new complaint are legally insufficient. The defendants admit that such insufficiency is not a matter bearing upon the question of whether leave to amend should be granted. Peterson Steels, Inc. v. Seidmon, 188 F. 2d 193 (7th Cir. 1951). They state, however, that motions to strike will have to be made if the new complaint is allowed, and that extensive briefs and arguments will be required thereon.

This contention does not establish a ground for refusing leave to amend. If the original complaint were dismissed as moot, the amended complaint, the plaintiff states, would be filed as a new action. The defendants then would be faced with the necessity of raising the same legal arguments which they state they must now present with respect to the amended complaint. The defendants do not assert that insufficient time remains in which to prepare their defense to the new matters raised by the amendment, nor do they argue that their trial preparation will be hampered in any way. Therefore no showing of prejudice is made by the contention that motions to strike are necessitated by the new complaint.

The second point made by the defendants bearing upon the question of prejudice concerns the modification in the new complaint of the charges with respect to film rentals paid by Balaban & Katz theaters. The defendants state that these charges were altered for the purpose of avoiding certain interrogatories propounded by the defendants. They maintain that answering these interrogatories would be embarrassing to the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff should not be allowed to avoid the questions simply by filing an amended complaint. The defendants do not state in what way the answers to interrogatories would prove embarrassing to the plaintiff. Apparently the defendants mean that the plaintiff's replies would show its inability to substantiate certain aspects of the original charge.

The fact that the plaintiff has abandoned charges which it discovered it could not support is not a ground justifying denial of leave to amend. The defendants are not prejudiced by this modification of the complaint; to the contrary they are spared the trouble of defending the allegations which have been abandoned. If the answers to the interrogatories are relevant to the cause as stated in the new complaint they may still be obtained. However, if they are no longer pertinent to the cause, the defendants can not be prejudiced in their trial preparation by their inability to acquire the information sought.

[Motion Granted]

The defendants have made no showing that they would be prejudiced by the filing of the amended and supplemental complaint. For this reason, and in view of the plaintiff's change in circumstances since the initiation of this action, leave to file the amended and supplemental complaint is hereby granted. The defendants are ordered to file responsive pleadings thereto on or before February 14, 1958.

[¶ 68,912] Webster Rosewood Corporation v. Schine Chain Theatres, Inc., et al.

In the United States District Court for the Northern District of New York. Civil Action No. 3679. Dated December 10, 1957.

Sherman Antitrust Act

Combinations and Conspiracies — Practices — Clearance System in Motion Picture Industry — Conspiracy to Deny Exhibitor First Neighborhood Run — Sufficiency of Evidence.—A motion picture theatre owner's complaint charging a conspiracy and monopoly in the distribution of motion pictures was dismissed on the grounds that: (1) the theatre owner had not sufficiently shown that the defendants (chain theatres), by the unlawful use of monopoly buying power of film, and alleged co-conspirators (distributors of films), agreed and conspired during a specified period to arbitrarily deprive the theatre owner of a first neighborhood run or the right to compete for a first neighborhood run in Rochester, New York; (2) the conduct of the parties in the operation of the theatres involved, the circumstances surrounding their operation, and the evidence as a whole rebutted any presumption or inference of a conspiracy afforded by a consent decree entered in a prior government action against the defendants, particularly during the claimed damage period; (3) there was no demand or request by the theatre owner for first run neighborhood pictures, and the evidence indicated a willingness and contentment to follow the claimed favored theatre at the lower rental for the second neighborhood run; and (4) there was no credible evidence that the plaintiff's theatre was clearly a better customer from the distribution point of view than the favored theatre, and that a different pattern of distribution would have been more to the interests of the distributors.

See Combinations and Conspiracies, Vol. 1, ¶ 2005.553.

Clayton Antitrust Act

Private Enforcement and Procedure—Suit for Civil Damages—Evidence Admissible to Prove Violations of Antitrust Laws—Consent Decree in Prior Government Suit—Admissibility of Finding Fact.—In a motion picture theatre's action charging that a chain exhibitor and distributors of motion pictures conspired to deprive it of a first neighborhood run in Rochester, New York, a finding in a Government action that the chain exhibitor was able to monopolize the first neighborhood run in Rochester even though the physical facilities of independents were better was admissible in the instant suit, although a consent decree had been entered in the Government action. In rejecting the contention that the consent decree should not be admitted in evidence in view of the terms of Section 5 of the Clayton Act, the court noted that the section does except decrees entered before any testimony has been taken, but that, in the instant Government action, there was testimony and findings based on the testimony. The consent decree was entered in a trial court after the finding had been reviewed and allowed to stand by the Supreme Court; therefore, the finding was not left open for determination by the trial court when the case was remanded to it by the Supreme Court. The finding dovetailed into the situation in the instant action, and to reject it because it did not exactly cover the situation in the instant case, would unreasonably minimize the advantage, to be rendered the private litigant, of the prima facie effect of a Government judgment under Section 5 of the Act. However, the decree was admitted as prima facie evidence of the alleged conspiracy only during the period covered in the Government action since the conspiracy alleged by the plaintiff took place after the period of time covered in the Government case.

See Private Enforcement and Procedure, Vol. 2, ¶ 9012.260, 9012.410.

For the plaintiff: Gray, Anderson & Schaeffer (Francis T. Anderson and Cormac J. Malloy, of counsel), Philadelphia, Pa.

For the defendants: Raichle, Tucker & Moore (James C. Moore, Jr., and David C. Diefendorf, of counsel), Buffalo, N. Y.; and Antevil and Antevil (Howard Antevil, of counsel), Gloversville, N. Y.

Memorandum-Decision & Order

[Nature of Action]

JAMES T. FOLEY, District Judge [In full text]: This action is one under the antitrust laws involving the usual provisions of the Sherman and Clayton Acts (15 U. S. C. A., 1, 2, 15, 16). It involves the motion picture business and by the complaint brings back on the screen the Schine interests, named as defendants, and the eight major distributors named as co-conspirators. Apparently, this type action will rise eternal against these same defense and conspirator players who featured in the court struggles of the 1940's in relation to conspiracy and monopoly government charges in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures. Of course, the Schine decision is the important one in this controversy. (Schine Chain Theatres, Inc. et al. v. U. S. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,245], 334 U. S. 110 (1948), [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,413] 63 F. Supp. 229 (W. D. N. Y. 1945); U. S. v. Paramount Pictures, Inc. et al., [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,244], 334 U. S. 131, [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,473] 85 F. Supp. 881). The voluminous complaint generally is patterned after the writings in these decisions, but there is not too great resemblance between the complaint and the evidence produced at the trial in behalf of the plaintiff. Although this variance is not at all fatal under our liberal procedures, these catch-all allegations taken from law books without too much regard for the actual circumstances and filed in 1950 in this district court, did not stand too well against actual trial combat in 1957, and the wide range of issues indicated by the complaint narrowed very much. In fairness it should be noted that the draftsmen of the complaint were not the same lawyers who undertook the preparation for trial and tried the case before me for the plaintiff. Complexity is inherent in these cases because of the broad sweep of the antitrust statutes in their terms and established interpretations. The conspiracy element is usually a nebulous thing to tie down because the evidence always tends to range far and wide; at times, in my judgment, with an inclination to outer space unless restricted. However, this situation should be simple in contrast because the plaintiff, except for the impact it urges of the findings and decrees in the Schine decisions on the questions of conspiracy and monopoly, limits the dispute we have to the deprivation of a first neighborhood run by reason of such conspiracy and monopoly and wants the comparative theatres limited to two alone, the Webster of the plaintiff and the State of the defendants, both located in the northeastern part of the City of Rochester, New York, three quarters of a mile or six blocks apart. Despite this simplicity of approach taken by the plaintiff, the evidence in its behalf followed again the roving design, and we were taken back to 1927 in an attempt to establish a perpetuity of business villainy on the part of Schine into the damage period claimed here from 1942 to 1950. The chief witness for the plaintiff corporation at the trial, and in fact the leading actor throughout the many years, because of his relationship with the erection and operation of the Webster Theatre, and now the real principal in this lawsuit, because all the stock of the plaintiff is now owned by him and his wife, was Max Fogel.

The import of his testimony, particularly when examined by his own lawyers, was to paint an agonizing picture of a victim crushed in the beginning and never allowed to rise again with his neighborhood theatre, the Webster, throughout the many years, except at the whim of the Schine interests and always bludgeoned by their monopoly and buying power, discussed by the United States Supreme Court in [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,245] 334 U. S. 110, 115, 118. This portrayal, and it was quite interesting, provoked a robust, slam-bang defense at the trial and resulted in lengthy defense briefing and much of the simplicity from the plaintiff's viewpoint began to vanish.

[Background]

A general review of the history of the Webster Theatre, the relations of Schine and Fogel with it in its topsy-turvey existence through the years amidst numerous corporate name changes seems important to this decision.* Max Fogel, who had experience in the theatre business from 1921, built the Webster Theatre in 1927 with other investors about six blocks away from the State Theatre, which had been newly built by Schine approximately a year before in 1926. There is little difference in the construction of the State and Webster, but important difference in location. There is an episode at this time of the construction of the Webster Theatre which varies through the years in its description and changes with the retelling, depending on the person who recalls it. It concerns a threat by J. Myer Schine at this time to the persons building the Webster that the location of the Webster was too near the State and he would build a theatre near another theatre, the Murray, owned by them in Rochester, if they persisted. This episode was made a specific finding by Judge Knight. (Finding of Fact 11(h) of the Amended Findings of the District Court, W. D. N. Y., dated March 29, 1946; U. S. v. Schine Chain Theatres Inc., et al., supra). The finding is not a very determinative one because it merely states both versions as to the presence or absence of threat and seems to be one of the ambiguous findings allowed to stand by the Supreme Court because of the record as a whole and the support received from other findings to conclude unlawful purpose. (Schine Chain Theatres, Inc., et al. v. U. S. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,245], 334 U. S. 110, page 119). This episode became further enmeshed and confused in the affidavit given by Fogel to the government in 1939 (Exhibit 3) and the recanting affidavit given to Schine in 1940 (Exhibit 4), both in evidence at this trial, concerning which Fogel freely admits now and marks in red on exhibit 4, much he says was false. On the trial in 1957 Fogel elaborated further on this episode in 1927 testifying that J. Myer Schine said, in effect: "You have no right to build the Webster," and that Schine would not only build the other theatre but said he would see that Fogel and his associates would not get pictures for either of their theatres, and that Schine concluded it all by demanding 50% interest in the Webster. (R. 36-40). Whether Fogel and his associates succumbed to the blackjack as he wants believed or whether he followed the old and practical adage: "If you can't beat them, join them," and thought a little monopoly his way would not be too bad, the arrangement was made and Schine took over a 50% interest in the new operating company of the Webster Theatre which continued from 1927 until 1933. In 1933 the Schine interest, as Fogel puts it, "just dropped his part of the theatre, dropped out." (R. 42). Then, to hasten the review of this background, Fogel stayed with the Webster Theatre through varied operating companies, always as manager, with a substantial interest in ownership until 1940. In the Fall of 1940, Schine picked up the mortgage on the Webster and another theatre and came into full control and operation of the Webster until the Spring of 1942. During this period Fogel became an employee of Schine, managing a Rochester theatre of Schine and booking pictures for Schine for theatres in the Rochester area. The picture painted by Fogel is again that this was done under the crushing heel of the Schine monopoly, and he became the poorly paid employee who lost his theatre as a result of continued greed. Such pathos is not too well supported and is seriously contradicted by important evidence in the record of this trial. In any event, in 1942 by reason of a consent order entered in the District Court for the Western District of New York (Exhibit 7), Fogel with others

* R shall denote the references to the transcript of this trial. Plaintiff's exhibits are numbered and defendants' lettered. Transcript of Record is reference to the record in U. S. v. Schine, W. D. N. Y. [1944-1945 TRADE CASES ¶ 57,413], 63 F. Supp. 229.

reacquired the Webster from Schine and conducted it with varying degrees of ownership, finally to full ownership by him and his wife at a time during the period of claimed damage, June 20, 1942 to May 10, 1950. Many elements in this sketchy background are not important at all in the disposition of this suit because the narrow question at hand is knowing conspiracy and monopoly between Schine and its alleged co-conspirators in the distribution of motion pictures to deprive the Webster Theatre from first neighborhood run during the years 1942 to 1950 to the financial detriment of the Webster Theatre. There are many specifics in the evidence which apply directly to this limited question and allow reasonable conclusions, and I am old-fashioned enough to attempt to decide the problem on the record made before me, keeping the all-encompassing conspiracy principle within the bounds of the proof submitted.

[Finding in Government Suit]

The most turbulent issue in the lawsuit is the offer in evidence, upon which I reserved decision, of the consent decree dated June 24, 1949, signed by Judge Knight and consented to as a judgment by the government representatives and the Schine representatives (Exhibit 12 for Id.). I am sure that few exhibits in the history of litigation have drawn so much discussion and briefing as to its admissibility. The defense is one of depth with much substance at the various barricades as to competence and relevance. Of course, this decree was consented to at a time when a stillness in the Western District of New York existed in the Schine litigation and to give it effect and sense under Section 5 of the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. A. 16) it must be related back to the judicial dispositions in the original government litigation against Schine.

In the amended findings in the government case dated March 29, 1946, Judge Knight found as part of Finding 13: "He (Schine) was able to monopolize the first neighborhood run in Rochester even though the physical facilities of the independents were better." (Vol. 4, page 3219 Transcript of Record). Upon review in 1947, the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the District Court in part and reversed it in part and remanded the cause to it for further proceedings in conformity with its opinion. (Schine v. U. S. supra, page 130). From my reading of this Supreme Court opinion at page 117, this finding seems to be allowed to stand as one supported by substantial evidence, and therefore, in my judgment, was not left open for determination upon remand and should be accepted as judicially settled. (See Theatre Enterprises, Inc. v. Paramount Film Distributing Corp. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,640], 346 U. S. 537, page 543, footnote 11). The finding, in my judgment, dovetails into the situation here and to reject it as the defense argues because the evidence in the case and the finding itself does not blueprint the Webster Theatre would unreasonably minimize the "large advantage" to be rendered the private litigant of the prima facie effect of the criminal judgment under Section 5 of the Clayton Act. (Emich Motors Corporation v. General Motors Corporation [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,778], 340 U. S. 558, 568). Even though the Emich authority limits such estoppel under Section 5 to questions "distinctly put in issue and directly determined in the criminal prosecution," if the mold of this general finding does not cover our situation because not exact enough, we surely would have, I believe, the "niggardly construction" cautioned against by Chief Judge Clark, dissenting in Eagle Lion Studios, Inc. et al. v. Loew's Inc., et al., 2 Cir., decided September 9, 1957 [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,819]. It seems impossible in the massive cases brought by the government to curb monopoly to itemize every business entity that did suffer from such unlawful monopoly. If such particularization were necessary for the provisions of Section 5 to operate, then the benefits intended by that Section would be definitely curtailed by such reasoning. However, the better reasoning seems clear that such decrees are allowed as prima facie evidence of a general conspiracy with the necessary relation shown to the local area and the particular business interest alleged to be harmed by the impact of the broad, unlawful monopoly. (Emich v. General Motors, supra; DeLuxe Theatre Corp. v. Balaban & Katz Corp. et al. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,790] 95 F. Supp. 983, 986). At least it is clear that in the government case against Schine the "question" of first neighborhood run in Rochester was put in issue and directly determined at least in a general sense by Finding No. 13 of the amended findings by Judge Knight in 1946. Under my reasoning, this consent decree offered seems to be comfortably within the concept of estoppel set forth in Section 5 and should not be disqualified from reception in evidence for that reason.

[Consent Decree—Admissibility]

Next, the defense contends that under the terms of Section 5 the decree should not be received because it is entitled "Consent Decree as to Schine Defendants." The statute does except from its operation such form of consent, judgments or decrees "entered before any testimony has been taken." No matter how we blink our eyes or concede the attempt of clever draftsmanship to wipe out the past and let bygones be bygones, surely lengthy testimony remains in existence, and upon such testimony, findings and conclusions were made by the District Court which at least in part received the sanction, and there must be some finality about it, of the highest court in the land. This consent decree recited the previous judgments of the District Court, and in the introductory recital the District Court did not disown the previous parts of its original decree affirmed by the Supreme Court, and it would seem impossible for it to do so. This recital is to the effect only that no testimony was taken upon the issues to be determined upon remand and the consent of the defendants was "without admission by the defendants in respect to any such issue to be determined upon remand." To bar the decree because of its form would allow judicial realities to be circumvented by adroit wording after the issue has been drawn and quartered in the courts. On this contention of defense to the admission of the exhibit I am inclined to the reasoning set forth in DeLuxe Theatre Corp. v. Balaban & Katz Corp. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,790], 95 F. Supp. 983, 986; Don George, Inc. v. Paramount Pictures, Inc. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,294], 111 F. Supp. 458, 468; Homewood Theatre, Inc. v. Loew's Inc. [1952 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,333], 110 F. Supp. 398, 409; and the suggestion in footnote 11, page 543 of Theatre Enterprises, Inc. v. Paramount Film Distributing Corp. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,640], 346 U. S. 537.

[Relevancy of Decree]

However, despite this inclination to receive the decree in evidence, there is serious question involved as to its relevancy because of the time period of the claim. The plaintiff, as it must, limits the period from June 20, 1942 to May 10, 1950, and settles down the money damages requested to an estimate of $132,855.52, to be trebled, lessened by a $28,000 settlement made by the distributors in 1948, making final computation of requested damages in the amount of $370,566.56. The difficulty is present because nothing in the English language could be plainer than that the District Court in the government case against Schine expressly confined its findings to activities prior to May 19, 1942. It was stated thus in the amended findings of the late judge Knight, March 29, 1946:

> 30. "All findings made herein with respect to any acts committed by the defendants or any of them, or any course of conduct pursued which the Court holds to be in violation of the antitrust laws are limited to acts committed or course of conduct pursued prior to May 19, 1942, plaintiff's counsel having stated at the opening of the trial that he would not offer evidence beyond that date."

Surely, this must mean what it says, and makes untenable the plaintiff's contention that the consent decree signed in 1949 stretches the prima facie principle of evidence through the years from 1942. The finding is absolute that such is not to be done. I shall overrule the varied objections of the defendants and admit the decree only as prima facie evidence of the conspiracy covering the Rochester area in relation to first neighborhood runs and existing only during the period involved as specifically set forth in the finding until May 19, 1942. (Theatre Enterprises, Inc. v. Paramount Film Distributing Corp., supra, at page 541).

I have labored much on this subject, probably too much, but it is caused by the stress placed upon this issue, particularly by the defense, and the fact that the proposition is such a debatable one in the courts. Also because without it the case of the plaintiff would be hanging in mid-air with little foundation, if any. I am frank to say that if I am in error as to the ground to be covered by the decree as to the time element, I still would be unable if I stretched the prima facie impact and conspiracy background of the decree to 1950 to infer conspiracy directed against the Webster by the defendants and the alleged co-conspirators, the distributors, during the claimed damage period from the evidence developed in the whole record. Such decree as admitted is only prima facie evidence of the alleged conspiracy, not conclusive. Fifth & Walnut

v. Loew's, Inc., 2 Cir. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,453], 176 F. 2d, 587, 590; Dipson Theatres, Inc. v. Buffalo Theatres, Inc., 2 Cir. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,896], 190 F. 2d, 951, 957-8.

[Plaintiff's Case]

The position of the plaintiff is that the Schine interests by the unlawful use of monopoly buying power of films prevented the plaintiff from competing with Schine in the business of exhibiting motion pictures on the first neighborhood run in the City of Rochester. The pivot for this assertion is the undisputed fact that during the years 1942-1950 it is true that the State Theatre of Schine played the pictures for the neighborhood in every instance ahead of the Webster of the plaintiff (Exhibit 13). It is also true that during this period the State made more money than the Webster (Exhibits A, X). From these isolated facts without more, the plaintiff urges that together with the decree, which I have limited, the streamers of conspiracy must flow with no regard to the conduct of the parties or the surrounding circumstances. The motto seems to be: We have the decree, we have the theatre, we do not have as much money as we should, and finally, we must have been hurt by unlawful monopoly. This, to me, is not only bad logic but bad law. Of course, it is difficult in these cases to bring in photographs of the conspiracy in operation, but reliance must be had upon the reasonable inferences drawn from the conduct in the light of the surrounding circumstances, and there must be some relation of the impact of the conspiracy to a particular theatre. (Bordonaro Bros. Theatres, Inc. v. Paramount Pictures, Inc. [1948-1949 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,467], 176 F. 2d, 594, 596, 598; Emich v. General Motors, supra, pages 570, 571; Theatre Enterprises, Inc. v. Paramount Film Distributing Corp. supra, page 543). The evidence of the plaintiff will not allow me to draw the inference that a knowing conspiracy continued and existed to deprive the plaintiff of first neighborhood runs in Rochester, but together with this failure of proof of alleged conspiracy and unlawful monopoly there are countless factors in the proof that tend the other way, i. e., that under the circumstances present it was reasonable business practice proven throughout the years that the State as a better customer should run previous to the Webster, and this arrangement was accepted by Max Fogel and his plaintiff corporation with the benefit to them of lower rentals. (Fanchon & Marco, Inc. v. Paramount Pictures, Inc. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,909], 100 F. Supp. 84, 89; affirmed [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,843], 215 F. 2d, 167, cert. denied 348 U. S. 912; Dipson Theatres, Inc. v. Buffalo Theatres, Inc., 2 Cir. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,896], 190 F. 2d, 951, 957-58, cert. denied 342 U. S. 926).

Formidable among these facts in the evidence is that agreed to by Fogel that when the Webster and State split the first neighborhood run in the 1927-1933 era, when Schine was a partner, the Webster lost money (R. 49, 50; 147, 158, 162, 165), and finally in this period the operating company of the Webster was dispossessed for failure to pay rent. (R. 166). Then, it is clear that when the Schine interests took over the Webster in the 1940-1942 period the arrangement was continued by Schine to have the State play the neighborhood run ahead of the Webster (R. 106-107). To reason with the plaintiff at this time it would be necessary to conclude Schine was conspiring and monopolizing against his own interest. I am not convinced at all that Schine was champing at the bit to get back the Webster in 1940 because the record indicates to me that Fogel, during this period, was always the moving party and persistent in his efforts to interest Schine again in the Webster. (R. 175, 179; Exhibits G, H, I, AA). The temporary order agreed to by the defendants in 1942 (Exhibit 7) with detailed prohibitions to refrain from certain practices, and giving access to their records by the government, together with the same type agreed to by the distributors in 1941, must be given great weight in the consideration of whether these people were bold enough to continue this alleged conspiracy of unlawful monopoly in this small neighborhood of Rochester. At least, it places further burden upon the plaintiff to prove by evidence of quality such situation continued in the face of this government pressure and supervision, with the tremendous power to search for illegality in the corporate records. Such evidence is lacking, and it must be realized that after a period of seven years that this case has been at issue, with the liberal and settled pretrial procedures of discovery and interrogation in this federal court, there is only one letter produced with any significance to the issue of intentional collaboration and agreement, and that is an equivocal one. (Exhibit 14).

The most striking impression I gain by a review of the record is the attitude of Max Fogel himself as to whether or not he considered, under the circumstances, that the Webster should precede the State in the matter of neighborhood first run. The record does not disclose that he made any protest at all during the 1933-1940 period. From 1942-1950 the impression stands out —and I say it with all charity—that he was sitting on the sidelines with his Webster Theatre waiting to be conspired against and willing to watch his lawsuit grow. If anyone during these years knew the complaint department he did, because he had, according to his own testimony, a most serious and intimate contact when he says he told the government lawyers in Washington that Schine forced him to recant the previous government affidavit and give a false one in order to regain the Webster. He was out of the clutches of Schine after he regained the theatre, he sat through the government case in court against Schine although not called as a witness, and it would be incredible to infer that if he thought he were being wronged by deprivation of first run he would not protest to the nearest government attorney. His testimony that he did make demands upon certain branch managers, which he was allowed to state upon a reopening of his case, was hazy, casual and not too persuasive to me, and I evaluate it in such manner because of the many inconsistencies in other parts of his testimony. (R. 70, 91, 130, 149, 153, 158, 165, 198, 219, 225, 251, 257, 299). Surely a person wronged as Fogel claimed to be during this long period by an arbitrary and unlawful deprivation of first run which he wanted, would have indulged in some letter writing both to Schine and the distributors setting forth his complaint. (See Milgram v. Loew's, Inc., 3 Cir. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,938], 192 F. 2d 579). All we have is the meaningless Exhibit 14, which was a letter to Fogel from a distributor, to which he made no answer or complaint about the arrangement or other arrangements. Also to be considered on the important attitude of Fogel as to whether he really wanted first run and the increased rental expense is the fact that when he settled with the distributors in 1948 he did not even then request or demand a run ahead of or equal with the State Theatre, but was satisfied with a slight advance in his schedule after the State.

Whether the demand element is as vital to this lawsuit as set forth in Milwaukee Towne Corp. v. Loew's, Inc., 7 Cir. [1950-1951 TRADE CASES ¶ 62,891], 190 F. 2d 561, cert. denied 342 U. S. 909, is not necessary for this decision because I consider the lack of it only as again indicative of the fact that the plaintiff operator himself accepted the first run set-up as it existed without protest, thereby giving good intimation that the arrangement was neither conspiratorial or monopolistic. (See J. J. Theatres, Inc. et al. v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp., 2 Cir. [1954 TRADE CASES ¶ 67,757], 212 F. 2d, 840, 845). Congress Building Corp. v. Loew's, Inc., 7 Cir. [1957 TRADE CASES ¶ 68,725] 246 F. 2d, 587, agreed with the demand requisite as applied in this sense when it elaborated on the Milwaukee Towne Corporation case.

[Defendants' Testimony]

The testimony of the top men in the distribution part of the movie industry was unhesitatingly to the effect that the State was a better theatre for location and revenue than the Webster and this testimony was also reliable and factual as was that of McKay, then general counsel for Schine, that there was never any agreement or meeting of the minds to deprive the Webster of first neighborhood run if it wanted it. If it is considered important to this decision, the testimony of White, an exceptionally capable manager for Schine, establishes that efficient and warmhearted management can produce higher gross without the priority of first run when matched against a neighborhood theatre; the comparison being the Webster and the Dixie of the Schine interests. (R. 480-518, Exhibit V). Frankly, with my view of the record and the disposition I make I do not think it necessary to go in so deep.

[Findings]

This opinion shall constitute my findings of fact, and my conclusion in favor of the defendants is made because: (1) there is not sufficient showing by the plaintiff in the evidence that the defendants, by the unlawful use of monopoly buying power of film, and the alleged co-conspirators, agreed and conspired in the 1942-1950 period to arbitrarily deprive the Webster from first neighborhood run or the right to compete for first neighborhood run in the City of Rochester; (2) the conduct of the parties in the operation of the two theatres, the Webster and the State, and the circumstances surrounding their operation and the evidence as a whole rebuts any presumption or inference of conspiracy afforded by the consent decree in the government case, particularly during the claimed damage period from 1942-1950; (3) there was no demand or request by the plaintiff for first run neighborhood pictures and the evidence indicates a willingness and contentment to follow the State at the lower rental for the second neighborhood run; (4) there is no credible evidence to convince that the Webster was clearly a better customer from the distribution point of view than the State and that a different pattern of distribution would have been more to the interests of the distributors and thus allow an inference of conspiracy. (Dipson v. Buffalo, supra, pages 957-958); (5) the proof is not sufficient to infer or conclude as charged in the complaint that the defendants, during the years 1942-50 conspired, combined, or conspired among themselves or with any of the alleged co-conspirators, or with others, to violate the antitrust laws by unlawful restraint and monopoly.

[Judgment]

Judgment shall enter in favor of the defendants dismissing the complaint upon the merits. (See Matteson v. United States of America, 240 F. 2d, 517).

It is So Ordered.

[Exhibits]

The exhibits will be returned to the respective attorneys by whom introduced. The several volumes of the United States v. Schine case furnished by the defendants will be retained at Chambers to be called for by the attorneys for the defendants at their convenience.

ANTITRUST CONSENT DECREES

ATTORNEY GENERALS' OPINIONS

Texas

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION CASES

ROBINSON-PATMAN ACT CASES

PRICE DISCRIMINATION—Sec. 2(a)

FURNISHING OF SERVICES OR FACILITIES—Sec. 2(e)

UNLAWFUL TO BE PARTY TO DISCRIMINATION, DISCRIMINATION IN DIFFERENT AREAS, AND SALES AT UNREASONABLY LOW PRICES—Sec. 3

STATE FAIR TRADE ACT CASES

MILLER-TYDINGS AMENDMENT TO SHERMAN ACT

McGUIRE AMENDMENT TO FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ACT

DELAWARE

HAWAII

ILLINOIS

INDIANA

KANSAS

KENTUCKY

MARYLAND

MASSACHUSETTS

NEW MEXICO

NEW YORK

PENNSYLVANIA

RHODE ISLAND

SOUTH CAROLINA

WEST VIRGINIA

STATE UNFAIR PRACTICES ACT CASES

GENERAL TOPICAL INDEX

for

1957 TRADE CASES

—Q—

—R—